CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

SIXTY-SECOND CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 21, 1911.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McCUMBER presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Niagara, N. Dak., remonstrating against the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Bankers' Association of the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of the proposed financial legislation as suggested by the Monetary Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the Wholesalers' Board of Trade, of San Diego, Cal., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the so-called corporation-tax law permitting corporations to make returns at the end of their fiscal years, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHIVELY presented a memorial of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, Ind., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BRIGGS presented memorials of Local Division No. 10, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Hudson County, and of sundry citizens of Newark, Passaic, Irvington, Orange, East Orange, South Orange, Elizabeth, Jersey City, South River, Paterson, and Hoboken, all in the State of New Jersey, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented memorials of Pascack Grange, No. 141; Haddon Grange, No. 38; Kingwood Grange, No. 106; and Moravian Grange, No. 69, Patrons of Husbandry, all in the State of New Jersey, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of the New England Society, of Orange; the congregation of the Church of Our Father, of Rutherford; Samuel W. Boardman, of Bloomfield; William C. Cowperthwait, of Haddonfield; and Roger S. Boardman, of Bloomfield, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the ratification of the proposed arbitration treaty between the United States and Great Britain, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of Rutherford Council, No. 262, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Rutherford, N. J., praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. KERN presented a memorial of the Central Labor Union of Indianapolis, Ind., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ROCK CREEK PARK.

Mr. WETMORE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 2366) to acquire land along the course of Rock Creek for the purpose of preventing the pollution and obstruction thereof and of connecting Potomac Park with the Zoological Park and Rock Creek Park and providing a new location for the United States Botanic Garden, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 105) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. THORNTON:

A bill (S. 3073) for the relief of the estate of Le Roy C. Morris, deceased (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. POMERENE (by request):

A bill (S. 3074) granting land for the equipment and maintenance of the University of New Mexico; to the Committee on Territories.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 3075) granting an increase of pension to Richard M. Pierce (with accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 3076) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Finch (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 3077) for the recognition of the military service of the officers and enlisted men of certain Pennsylvania military organizations; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 3078) granting an increase of pension to Emma D. McManus; and

A bill (S. 3079) granting an increase of pension to John W. Anderson (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 3080) granting an increase of pension to William T. Seward (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

A bill (S. 3081) granting an increase of pension to Riley Small (with accompanying paper); and

A bill (S. 3082) granting an increase of pension to John Adkins (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORT OF BRITISH TARIFF COMMISSION.

On motion of Mr. LODGE, it was Ordered, That there may be withdrawn from the files of the Senate the original copy of Senate Document No. 66, Sixty-second Congress, entitled "Report of British Tariff Commission, reciprocity with Canada, most-favored-nation agreements in relation to the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America," it having served the purpose for which it was intended.

THE FREE LIST.

Mr. BRISTOW. I introduced an amendment yesterday to what is known as the free-list bill, which is the same amendment I offered to the pending reciprocity bill. The amendment relates to the duty on sugar. I have here, having had compiled by an expert, a statement showing the effect such an amendment would have on the revenue if adopted. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed as a document for the use of the Senate. (S. Doc. No. 70.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is entered.

RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Crane	McCumber	Root
Borah	Crawford	McLean	Shively
Bourne	Culberson	Martin, Va.	Smoot
Brandegee	Cullom	Martine, N. J.	Stephenson
Briggs	Curtis	Myers	Stone
Bristow	Davis	Nelson	Sutherland
Brown	Dixon	Newlands	Swanson
Bryan	Foster	Nixon	Thornton
Burnham	Gore	Oliver	Townsend
Burton	Gronna	Overman	Warren
Chamberlain	Guggenheim	Page	Watson
Chilton	Heyburn	Paynter	Wetmore
Clapp	Johnson, Me.	Perkins	Works
Clark, Wyo.	Lippitt	Pomerene
Clarke, Ark.	Lodge	Reed

Mr. PAGE. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM], who is engaged in the Lorimer investigation. I make this announcement for the day.

I also, by request, announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON] is also absent, engaged on the same investigating committee.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] on account of attendance on the Lorimer investigating committee.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to state that the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] is detained from the Senate, being in attendance on the Lorimer investigating committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] in connection with the Lorimer investigating committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4412.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4412) to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, some time ago I proposed an amendment to House bill 4412, which I offer at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. 4. That for the purpose of improving the St. Lawrence River from the Great Lakes to the Atlantic Ocean, and waterways connecting the Great Lakes, the President of the United States is authorized and directed to enter into an agreement with the Dominion of Canada which shall provide, upon such terms as may be agreed upon, for a waterway of sufficient depth and width to accommodate deep-water or seagoing vessels for the common use and benefit of both countries and in furtherance of reciprocal trade relations between them: Provided, however, That said agreement before becoming operative shall be submitted to the Congress of the United States for ratification or rejection.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, some days since I submitted some remarks on this amendment and set forth as best I could the reasons which actuated me in presenting it. It is well known that one of the objects of the treaty of 1854 was the improvement of the St. Lawrence River. I think it will be conceded by practically every Senator who has investigated the subject that such a waterway, if established, would be a great and inestimable advantage to the people of the United States, and especially to the people of the so-called northwestern part of the United States, or the region between the Rocky Mountains and the Great Lakes, as well as the region south of the Great Lakes.

This idea has been considered very frequently by both nations, and at the present time there are pending before the Canadian Parliament propositions to construct a waterway from the Georgian Bay to the Ottawa River and thence to the St. Lawrence. They are not only pending, but they are being seriously considered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask the Senator what is the extent of jurisdiction of the Canadian commission created for the purpose of dealing with the water question between the United States and Canada?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The proposed jurisdiction of that commission extends principally to the question of establishing boundary lines between the two countries on the water and locating the channels which shall be employed by the two countries,

Mr. BORAH. Would that commission have any power to deal with this subject?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I doubt if it would.

Mr. BORAH. I ask the Senator further, Has Canada ever acted upon the matter so that her commissioners have been appointed?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think they have not been appointed as yet.

Mr. BORAH. We have appointed our commission, have we not?

Mr. TOWNSEND. We have.

Mr. BORAH. But Canada has not yet acted?

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is my understanding.

Mr. CULLOM. That is correct.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, even though a commission should be established to which might possibly be construed power to act in such matters as this, it would hardly be sufficient to meet the object which I have in mind. If the question of international water transportation is as important as I believe it is, then it is worthy of the special consideration my amendment proposes that the President shall give it. It is provided in section 3 of the pending bill that the President shall proceed further toward reciprocal trade relations with Canada. My amendment is in line with that idea.

I am quite in sympathy with those Senators who are opposed to amendments to this bill which have in view the probable defeat of the measure. The amendment which I propose can not in any possible way affect the treaty or the bill as it is now pending before the Senate. It simply requests the President to proceed further along the line of establishing reciprocal arrangements which shall be mutually beneficial to the two countries, having special reference to international waterway improvement. Therefore I have offered it, and it is an answer to very much that has been urged by Senators against the bill as it now stands. When reciprocal trade arrangements have been made this proposition could easily be accomplished.

As for myself, I can see reasons why the bill should pass as it is already framed, but I can see in this additional provision something that must redound to the benefit of those farmers for which special pleas have been made, those situated in the so-called great Northwest. This waterway is the natural outlet of trade between that so-called Northwest and the European countries. If you will look at the map, you will discover that the St. Lawrence points almost directly to Liverpool. It is shorter by more than a thousand miles than those routes which lead from that region to New York and then to Liverpool.

It will cost some money, but it seems to me that it is a much better proposition, measured by the actual benefits which will come to commerce and trade, than is the Panama Canal. It is a stupendous project.

Much of the trade which now passes over the Great Lakes is destined for a foreign market, and yet it has to be transported to Buffalo, thence transferred to trains, and thence again at the seaboard transshipped to the ocean liners. This waterway would make it possible for boats to be loaded at Great Lake ports in bottoms which would convey the cargoes directly to the marts of Europe. To my mind, at least, it is of sufficient importance to demand the serious consideration of the Senate. Senators may look lightly upon it if they will, but it is one of the great things which must be dealt with in the future, because it is known that, notwithstanding all of our great efforts to regulate commerce over the railroads and to secure just and reasonable rates, about the only thing that we have accomplished along that line has been through the establishment of water competition, and even though there should not be the number of boats passing over this waterway which, it occurs to me, will pass over it when constructed, yet the effect that it will have upon the reduction of rates and their maintenance at a just and reasonable point would be worthy of the effort and expense necessary to construct the waterway.

Furthermore, Canada, as I have said, is looking to the development of its waterways. Most of this route is on the boundary line between the two countries. From Ogdensburg on to Montreal there are a great many rapids and a great many shoals that will have to be overcome; but it was demonstrated in the last Congress that there are individual companies or corporations which have recognized the value of the water power that is contained in these rapids and falls to the extent that they submitted to the Congress a proposition to develop the water power in the Long Sault Rapids of the St. Lawrence at their own expense and according to plans submitted by the War Department, which provided for dams and locks to be so constructed as to produce pools for open-water navigation. And so valuable did these companies consider this water power that they were willing to pay a per horsepower charge to the State of New York for the power generated. What was proposed in reference to improvement in connection with the Sault Rapids demonstrates what is possible in connection with practically all the rest.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Michigan why does he not make his amendment more general and make it apply to international waterways? For instance, it was my pleasure, with a number of citizens of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, to meet with the premier of Canada at Nelson, British Columbia, last summer, when the subject of the improvement of the Columbia River from its headwaters in British Columbia to its mouth was taken up for discussion at the invitation of the people of Nelson, British Columbia. The premier expressed himself as being heartily in favor of cooperation between the United States Government and the Canadian Government for the improvement of the Columbia River, making it navigable from its headwaters in British Columbia to the sea, thereby furnishing an avenue of commerce directly with the Pacific Ocean and the Panama Canal, and thus regulating the rates of railways along the river and draining that inland Empire. Idaho, Washington, and Oregon are all interested in this subject, and I have no doubt but that the Members of Congress from all of these States would support a resolution of that kind if it were made general in its application. Whether or not it should be attached as an amendment to this bill, is a question for the Senate to determine; but the movement which the Senator from Michigan now inaugurates has the hearty cooperation of many, at least, of the northwestern Senators and Representatives; and I hope that, if the measure which he now suggests is voted down in the Senate, later he will propose it in the form of a bill and make it general in its application, so that the Canadian Government with the Government of the United States may cooperate for the improvement of the international waterways.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I certainly have no objection to the proposition suggested by the Senator from Oregon. My answer to him as to why I had not incorporated it in my amendment was because it had not been called to my attention. In studying the history of Canadian reciprocity I became especially interested in the St. Lawrence route. I could see the wonderful possibilities of it. It occurred to me that it was in line with the highest possible good which could come through trade and commerce to the people not only of the United States but of Canada. It was for that reason that I especially called attention to the St. Lawrence route, but I would have no objection to such an amendment as the Senator from Oregon proposes, because I think it is clearly the duty of this Government, which has been contributing, first and last, over $600,000,000 in the improvement of its rivers and harbors, to take into consideration all the rivers and waterways which could in reason and with profit be improved by the two countries—the United States and Canada. As I said a moment ago, I believe that a real benefit which no man can deny would come from the development of these great river courses.

I recognize the argument that will be presented and has been presented to me by gentlemen who live in the East, namely, that this will tend to divert traffic through Montreal and away from our seaboard cities—New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore—but, sir, that has had very little weight with me, because I believe that the great object of establishing a waterway, as I have suggested, is to reduce freight rates and make them more just and reasonable. Our seaboard cities would not be injured. The rail rates to them would be reduced and they and the whole country would be benefited. Our experience has been, even with the Mississippi River, which is not navigable for the largest boats, but has the possibilities of navigation and can be used to some extent, that that very fact has resulted in giving lower freight rates to people along the Mississippi Valley than has been given to those who are on either side of it and nearer to the point of shipment. Think of the great benefits which would similarly come to the great region tributary to the Lakes and the St. Lawrence.

Therefore I argue, in looking over the history of water improvement, that it is the duty of this Government, if it is looking for the proper regulation of transportation facilities, to avail itself of these opportunities, these natural advantages, which thus far have been all unused, but which, if developed, would work a revolution for good to the people.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I have introduced the amendment, knowing first, as I have said, that it can not possibly interfere with the passage of the bill itself. I recognize, of course, that if adopted it would throw the bill into conference, because it is an amendment which is not found in the bill now before the Senate. That may be a sufficient reason for Senators to vote against it, but I have discussed this measure with gentlemen who are very much interested in it, and they have without exception agreed with me that this is a step which ought to be taken; that it is an improvement which ought to be entered upon by the Government of the United States. I have had the privilege and the opportunity of calling the attention of the Senate to it, believing, as I have said, that the future will demonstrate that it is one of the great things which the Government ought to and must undertake in the years to come if not now.

I should like to see that work begun. I should like to request the President to proceed in the matter now in order that no more time may be lost. The amendment properly provides that whatever is done by the President must be submitted to Congress for its ratification or rejection. No possible harm can come to our country through the passage of this amendment, but great and immeasurable good may come from it. It is in accordance with the principle which we are advocating in the reciprocity bill; it is a step toward closer and better relations with Canada, and therefore I have presented it to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I am going to vote against the amendment, but I do not like to do so without saying just a word explanatory of my position. I am in very hearty sympathy with the amendment itself, and equally in hearty sympathy with the suggestion made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN].

This amendment, if agreed to, would merely authorize the President to enter upon negotiations with the Canadian Government for some agreement looking to the joint improvement of the waterways mentioned. Undoubtedly, in my humble opinion, that ought to be done; but I am inclined, Mr. President, to the view that the suggestion of the Senator from Oregon is a wise one; that this amendment should be incorporated in a separate bill, in order that it might be thoroughly considered by the Committee on Commerce and reported to the Senate, as I have no doubt it would be, with reasonable promptness. And during the next session—I say the next session, because I do not suppose that the Committee on Commerce will take it up during this extraordinary session—I believe the Congress will agree without serious opposition to authorize the President to do the thing proposed in this amendment.

Undoubtedly sir, there is a difference, and a very wide difference, between this amendment and the amendments that have heretofore been proposed to the pending bill, for this does not purport to change the commercial relations between this country and other countries with whom we have commercial treaties. Still, I for one am opposed to entering upon the program of amending this bill, even by adopting an amendment like that now proposed by the Senator from Michigan. I think it better that the Senate should proceed as it has been proceeding, and agree to this bill in the form in which it came from the other House. For myself, I will heartily support the proposal of the Senator from Michigan if he shall offer it as an independent bill, and shall do what I can to facilitate its report to the Senate and what I can to facilitate its consideration and passage, but I shall vote against it as an amendment to the pending measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask leave to have inserted in the RECORD, without reading, as the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] desires to proceed, a letter in regard to the bill which is now pending.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. BORAH. At the suggestion of some Senators near me I will change my request and ask to have the letter read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Hon. WILLIAM E. BORAH, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The appreciation of the value of our home markets for all agricultural products, financially, commercially, socially, and religiously, is nowhere near commensurate with their true merits. Otherwise, the United States Congress would not entertain for one minute the proposition to surrender them to a foreign country. Having been a large distributer of grain from Omaha, our country's most central market, for many years I have been in a position to be thoroughly impressed with the magnitude of their intrinsic worth. I estimate that the letting into our markets foreign farm products without restriction throws out of the window, as it were, assets equal to $15,000,000,000, or, say, annually $500,000,000, and nobody in particular would get any benefit therefrom. In fact, I sincerely believe that Canada and the world at large would be better off if we refrain from doing so.

The United States' markets for grain are the strongest on earth, so much so that statistics will bear me out in the statement that the prices of our wheat for the last five years, at least, have averaged 10 cents per bushel higher than the Liverpool basis, so that Liverpool has not set the price for the American wheat. Our own mills and our great grain markets, assisted by our large grain elevators and the enormous home consumption and use of over 600,000,000 bushels of wheat, or nine-tenths of our total production annually—all these and other things combine to make our prices and the best market in the world, independent of any nation on earth. A world's price for wheat, unless you leave out the United States, is not the truth. The great strength in our home market helps to keep the price of wheat and other grains in foreign markets on a considerably higher level than they otherwise would be, thus bestowing a benefit on those people, especially living in agricultural countries, and in no way injuring others, as good, honest prices for farm products make good times, not only in those countries which sell the products but also in the country which buys them. Free trade of our farm products with any foreign country would destroy this forceful and beneficial influence, and then, not till then, will there be a world's price for wheat.

To-day the United States markets have more influence over the Liverpool market than Liverpool has over our markets. After free trade is inaugurated there will be, in due course of time, perhaps a world's price, and that, too, a low one, as there was in 1894, when wheat sold in Chicago for 49 cents per bushel, and Liverpool might set the price for us like it will for Russia, India, Australia, Argentina, and Canada. When that day comes, not only our supremacy, but our moral, social, and religious force and influence will naturally relax and wane, because it will be easier to float with the tide than to swim against it. As the soil is the only source from which we get money, why would we poison the fountain head. Then, too, we need the money. The editor of the North American Review in the April number is responsible for the statement that we are running behind $2,000 daily, and Canadian reciprocity will increase the deficit. The debts of the Civil War, the Cuban War, the Philippine undertaking, the Panama Canal, the Mexican incident, and that of other undertakings are unpaid. Where will we get the funds to meet these large obligations except from United States soil? Certainly no other country will help us bear the heavy burden, although we present to them our $15,000,000 asset in shape of the freedom of our markets in order to promote friendly, commercial, and social relations. I am not a politician, but hope I am a patriotic citizen and am interested in the welfare of our country unselfishly. Canadian reciprocity being a national question, and of such vast importance affecting, as it will, 92,000,000 of people to a greater or less degree, that the human mind can hardly comprehend its full meaning, it seems to me that the people should have an opportunity of being thoroughly and truthfully informed as to what is to be done to them. The opportunity has not yet been given them, and especially since the proposed act is contrary to the fundamental principles and policies of this people under which they have prospered beyond comparison for two generations. Instance in agricultural properties thirty billions are invested and there are mortgages on them for ten billions. Have a few men the moral or legal right, or, if they have, should they take the great responsibility of changing such vital conditions without the consent of a large majority of the whole people before the people have become well informed as to what the change means. Therefore, I ask would it not be the part of wisdom to pause, at this time, before the fatal plunge is made, to consider whether this may not be the best thing to do, i. e., put it up to the people. In the meantime see to it that the press are given free pulp and free print paper to help along the educational feature of the proposal. Reciprocity among ourselves is the best thing on earth. There are great things to be done in our country and our own citizens should be encouraged to stay at home to help do them. Eighty millions of swamp lands in our country are yet to be reclaimed; forty millions of arid lands in our country are yet to be irrigated. Hundreds of millions of virgin soil in our country have not yet been touched by the plow. This country is capable of supporting 500,000,000 of people without getting one single thing from Canada; and if at any time there should be a case of emergency caused by drought or some other unforeseen cause, Canada or Argentina will always be glad to supply our temporary needs. Then let us not forget that our home markets are the greatest asset we have, which protected for ourselves we can accomplish all things and still climb to greater heights of prosperity, influence, and greatness. Unprotected we will, as a Nation, be as a ship on the ocean without a chart, sail, compass, or rudder. I think Mr. Taft is right when he says Canadian reciprocity will not decrease the cost of living very much, if any. I believe his statement to be a correct conclusion of the matter; then, why should we give away our home markets?

Respectfully, N. MERRIAM.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, just a word with reference to this communication which has been presented with such great satisfaction by the Senator from Idaho and supported by the applauding smile of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW].

Mr. President, I know the author of this letter very well. He is one of the good men of our State. He is not a farmer. He is in the grain dealer's business. He handles the product that the farmer produces, and in this connection permit me to call the attention of my good friends the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] to the fact that the firm on whose stationery this letter is written is a successor to a firm of grain dealers doing business in Nebraska five or six years ago, and when they were doing business then, handling the products that other people produced, the attorney general of the State of Nebraska brought an action against them and several hundred other grain-elevator men engaged in the same business. In that suit it was charged that they were in a combination condemned by the trust statute of Nebraska to fix the price—not to fix a high price, but to fix a low price—at which they should buy this product of the farmer, for whose interests these grain brokers are so solicitous now.

As I remember the testimony in that case and the record—it has been about five years since we tried it—the testimony showed that this firm, together with others, formed an association and had submitted to a board of control, consisting of seven or nine members—I have forgotten which—the business of fixing the price which the farmers should receive for wheat in each county and at every elevator in that State.

Under that testimony they divided the State into 13 different divisions or districts—parceled it out. One would take district No. 1, and another district No. 2, until they had absorbed all the State. And they, at a midnight conference held in the basement of an office building in Omaha, conspired and perfected this conspiracy in which they were undertaking to bear down the price of wheat and the farmers' products. What has happened now that these men are so solicitous to have the price elevated?

Mr. President, the result of that lawsuit was a decree which dissolved their association and put it out of business. The finding of the supreme court of that State was that the charge was true and that they were guilty. It must be remembered that these men carried on this conspiracy not only by fixing the price and advising the agent in each district what it was, but they had a concerted plan by which, whenever the farmers of the country undertook to build and maintain an elevator of their own, they could force that elevator out of business. While the farmers were undertaking to build elevators or warehouses for themselves at one particular point along the railroad, the combination would put the price up high enough to put the farmers' association out of business, and as soon as the farmers' elevator was put out of business then this plan of fixing the price automatically went into operation again.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I will not interrupt the Senator until he is through.

Mr. BROWN. That is about all I have to say. I simply wanted the Senators to know the element that is at work in my State assisting the Lumber Trust and the Paper Makers' Trust to discredit this measure. That is all.

Mr. BORAH. I am very sorry to have exposed the constituency of the Senator from Nebraska. I had no idea of uncovering that kind of a constituency. I had supposed from the reading of the letter that the gentleman was engaged in a legitimate business.

Mr. BROWN. I am not saying he was not. I have, on the other hand; said he was a good man; but I have said that his firm is a successor to a firm which had this lawsuit I have told you about.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that the fact he is a successor ought to have very much to do with the discussion. It is unfair to visit upon a succeeding generation the sins of the present generation, if not under the biblical rule at least under our Constitution. Even the ancestors of the Senator from Nebraska might have been wise and patriotic men.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to return the compliment, but I could not take chances in doing so.

Mr. BORAH. I only wanted to say, Mr. President, that I now regret exceedingly to have uncovered the constituency of the Senator. But I do not exactly understand the logic of the Senator. He says that this is a good man, a good citizen, but that his predecessors in business were bad citizens and bad men, and that, knowing they were bad citizens and bad men, the State of Nebraska dissolved a trust, and that trust passed out of existence. Nevertheless the fact that this man is engaged in the grain business precludes him from being heard upon this question without having the bad record of his predecessor in business called into question. I do not understand that the Senator questions the record of this man individually—that he questions his character individually. Besides, we are taught that there is always "balm in Gilead." There is always room for repentance. Perhaps more of these constituents of the Senator from Nebraska have reformed. He has been carrying on a great reform propaganda in Nebraska, and possibly more have come under the influence of that reform. I think we ought to give the constituency the benefit of the doubt and assume that the reform movement of the Senator has reached his people and that it has had its effect.

Mr. BROWN. I have nothing further to say in reply, except to remark that the fact that as the success of this business depends on the profit in handling the product which other people produce, it follows that if the price of the product that they buy is low, if they can bear it down—and they always do, and the Senator will not dispute it—their profit is greater; and yet the purpose in introducing this letter was to show that the farmer was to have his price of wheat reduced if this bill passes.

Now, the elevator man and the grain dealer are not interested in bulling the price up, but in bearing it down.

Mr. BORAH. Does not the Senator from Nebraska believe in the doctrine of the referendum?

Mr. BROWN. I do not just exactly understand why that is pertinent here. I do; if the Senator wants to know. Does the Senator from Idaho believe in it?

Mr. BORAH. That is all that the constituency of the Senator is asking for, that this be referred and that we take a referendum upon this question before the Congress disposes of it, and, as I said before, he evidently must be a disciple of the Senator from Nebraska. He is asking now that the Senator apply the doctrine which he has taught all through Nebraska—the doctrine of the initiative and referendum.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I do not believe that a history of the man who wrote that letter has much to do with the logic and the facts which are set forth in it. They speak for themselves.

I rose to put into the RECORD two or three matters which I want to have placed before the country as a part of the case before the final vote is taken, and which I may not have another opportunity to do.

The friends of this measure protest over and over again that it is not their wish nor their purpose to do the slightest harm to agriculture. They disclaim, and disclaim most emphatically, that this bill will in any way injure the farmer, and assert that it is justified because it will be beneficial to the entire country and promote better feelings with Canada.

Mr. President, I shall not take up the time of the Senate at any great length this morning, but I wish to call attention to the fact that no single instance has been cited here to show that legislation of this character enacted in the past has helped the agriculture of the country enacting it, while case after case in the history of legislation of this character can be cited showing that such legislation has wrought serious harm to the agriculture of the country enacting it.

I have here a very interesting book, written by Mr. John W. Bookwalter. The subject of this book is Rural versus Urban.

I think he was, and may yet be, a citizen of the State of Ohio. In an exceedingly interesting chapter in this book Mr. Bookwalter deals with the effect of the opening of the trans-Mississippi lands upon farm-land values elsewhere in the United States and upon the prices of farm products.

How much greater in extent were these trans-Mississippi lands that came under cultivation during the period to which he refers, from 1870 to 1900, than these Provinces in Canada that are now coming into general use for agricultural purposes? Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta contain over one-half million square miles of land, an area equal to both the Dakotas, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, and Michigan combined. Will the free access into the markets of the United States of all the products, not only that are being grown there now, but all products that the soil of that vast and fertile region is capable of producing in the future, coming into the United States without duty, have no effect whatever upon the value of these farm products and upon the value of the farms in the United States?

What is the verdict of history? What has been the result of experience when legislation of that kind has been enacted in the past where conditions similar to the conditions that will follow this legislation have prevailed? When England repealed her corn laws, what was the effect upon the agriculture of England? You may say England was more prosperous because free trade developed her commerce and her manufactures. Perhaps it did, but what was the effect upon the agriculture of England? Mr. Hill calls attention to the fact that in Germany under the protective-tariff law during this period the area of cultivated lands increased 5 per cent, while in England during this period of free trade in farm products over 3,000,000 acres went out of cultivation and the value of her farm lands continually decreased.

Mr. Bookwalter, referring to the development of lands west of the Mississippi River, at page 124, says:

> The first and most notable effect was felt upon the general agriculture of the country itself. Thus it is noted that a steady decline in the price of food products set in, so that at the beginning of the present century they were found to have been in many cases less than half the prevailing price prior to this inundation of supply. As some measure of its effects also upon foreign agriculture, it is to be noted that in the case of the important food staple, wheat, the price steadily declined to less than 24s. the quarter in England from that of an average former range of 45s. to 60s. per quarter.
> An effect, quite as direct, distinct, and disastrous, of this fall in price of food products was promptly reflected in the painfully manifest decline in farm values, vested or otherwise, in the older agricultural regions, especially those located in the East. These, with their long-accumulated burden of investment, where the cost of production was at its maximum—albeit in harmony with that of other correlated industries—were suddenly confronted with the new condition where a mere nominal investment and a minimum cost of production created a competition wholly beyond their power to successfully meet. As in all other industrial operations, the net result being the very soul and governing principle, animating energy and awakening the hope of reward, the ratio of profit in the end determines the amount of capital that can be maintained by it. There followed, therefore, as a consequence of this decline in price of products, a marked reduction in all vested values in those less fortunate regions of agriculture to harmonize with the values in the more fortunate and favored regions. This led in the older districts of husbandry to a drastic revision of all vested farm values, and in some cases their utter and complete extinction. It was thus that we became familiar with that anomalous spectacle of abandoned farms in what were only recently highly prosperous agricultural sections in the East.
> In some foreign countries also—such as England, which permitted the full force of a cruel and relentless, though unforeseen, competition to fall upon her agricultural interests—there was a marked decline in the values of farms that were once prosperous in the highest degree. This fatal decline exists largely, both in England and the United States, even to this day.

Now, just this paragraph further describing the condition brought about by the opening up of a new empire. Mr. Bookwalter says on page 128:

> The almost uniform record of their experience—
> Meaning these farmers—
> shows that, for many years, their expenses exceeded the value of their products by reason of abnormally low prices due to excessive production. It would therefore seem that it was not the cultivator of the soil, but the usurer, the manufacturer, the transportation company, in fact, the urban and cognate interests, that derived almost the sole net benefits that accrued from his labor upon the lands.

Those Senators who earnestly protest that they would not under any circumstances do any harm whatsoever to agriculture as a great pursuit in the United States or to the farmer who follows that pursuit fly in the face of this history, much of it unfolded before the eyes and during the lives of the Members of this body; and they propose to single out the American farmer and open up in his own country the competition of the only competitor who can compete successfully in this market with him; a competitor that is developing, a few miles beyond his borders, an empire in extent, in resource, in fertility as vast as the region west of the Mississippi River, which Mr. Bookwalter describes in his book. The result will probably be a repetition of the history which Mr. Bookwalter narrates, and yet Senators are willing to use the free admission of agricultural products as a makeweight to carry a measure through Congress, the real purpose of which, I maintain, is to help the publishers of newspapers. When you sift this thing to the bottom—and the people of this country are going to do it—the verdict will be that this measure was enacted, and the farmer was made a scapegoat in it, for the purpose of putting on the free list two commodities that are used by the publishers of newspapers—wood pulp and print paper—to exempt them from the payment of taxes on those two imported articles.

If we would eliminate from this bill section 2, the bill would not be seriously considered for one moment. Where has been the demand in this country, and from what source did it come, that the products of the farm, the product of one great pursuit, agriculture, should be put on the free list in this country, while all else should remain protected? Take away the motive that inspired this bill, take away the selfish motive of the publishers of newspapers, and it will have no defenders. We hear talk about the lumbering interests and elevator people making a scapegoat of the farmer. It is not true. But the publishers of the newspapers are holding up as a shield free farm products from Canada, behind which they are hiding, to secure something which they want, but are not willing to rest upon its own merits.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, every Member of this body recognizes the inevitable regarding this legislation. Convincing facts and unanswerable arguments against this measure have been presented here to no avail. The great newspapers in combination, the great special interests joined with them, the President of the United States, the free-trade and tariff-for-revenue Democrats, and the stand-pat, high-protection Republicans, all acting together, are powerful enough to put this bill through.

During this debate Senators and Representatives have had little or nothing to say regarding the attitude of the press upon this legislation.

Mr. President, I would not attack unfairly any organization. But I am not afraid to criticize any interest, even though it be the organized press of the country, when it takes a position which I believe to be wrong. One of the great newspapers of the world, the Philadelphia North American, with a circulation of something like 200,000, recently stated, editorially, that it has approximately $40,000 to $50,000 dependent upon the passage of this bill. That paper set an example that, in so far as I have observed, no other paper of large circulation in the country has had the independence and honesty to follow when it published an editorial entitled "The reciprocity fraud," from which I quote the following:

> The North American, like every other American newspaper of large circulation, will be a beneficiary of the measure. But we must repeat what we have said over and over again during the debates in Congress: That merely because we consider honest and equitable a reduction of the paper schedules of the tariff which would save the North American large sums of money every year is no reason why this newspaper should give its indorsement to an agreement which is to our self-interest, but in nearly every other clause is a sham and a perversion of real reciprocity and an imposition upon millions of people.

I presume that represents the measure of interest of most newspapers of like circulation.

Mr. President, the press owes the country a duty with respect to all matters of public concern. I believe that the press of the country should rise above any sordid interest which it may have in any matter and truly represent the public interest. I think that is a paramount obligation.

I believe it has failed, as regards this bill, in its service to public interests. I believe it will suffer greatly in the public estimation as a result of its attitude upon this legislation, in which it frankly admits a direct pecuniary interest.

In my own experience, Mr. President, I have seen the influence of the press severely tested. I recall, in particular, one campaign in Wisconsin in which the great body of the Republican press of the State sold its editorial columns. It is not uncommon to say a thing of that kind in political campaigns or contests, but it is another thing to be able literally to sustain the charge. But in the campaign of 1902 the Republican press of Wisconsin very largely—almost entirely, sir—sold its editorial columns to great interests, particularly the railroad interests. These papers were edited by a bureau organized for that purpose. The editorials prepared by the bureau were printed as original and given out by the editors as the expression of their papers upon important pending public questions. Ultimately the facts became known, and a few of the editors who had accepted the money of corporations, when they realized the enormity of the offense they were committing against the public, repudiated the agreement, made it known in all its details, returned the money, and published the facts.

I doubt, Mr. President, that at any other time in the political history of this country exactly that condition could be duplicated. I think I am entirely within bounds when I say that there were scarcely half a hundred country papers in the State that at that critical time did not surrender to that great influence.

What, sir, was the result? Those papers forced a campaign which made plain to the people of the State exactly what was being done. In order to lay before the people the facts with respect to the failure of legislation and present the records of legislators who had betrayed their constituents, it became necessary to publish a campaign textbook submitting to the voters the record of their representatives, which the press refused to print.

The betrayal resulted in the destruction of the influence of the press. Indeed, many of the papers that had surrendered their editorial columns to a corporation-controlled literary bureau found that they had lost the confidence of their constituencies for all time, and man after man was obliged to sell out to somebody in whom the community could place its trust.

So, Mr. President, when as in the case of the pending bill, it is proven that a powerful organization, representing very largely the important newspapers of the country, through its president, sends out a confidential communication requesting treatment favorable to the reciprocity side of this issue, I say that act in itself will go a long way toward undermining and destroying the confidence of the people in the press of the country.

The following copy of instructions to editors sent out by Herman Ridder, president of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, was presented as part of the testimony before the Senate Committee on Finance (p. 1141, hearings):

NEW YORK, February 17.

By request; private to editors: It is of vital importance to the newspapers that their Washington correspondents be instructed to treat favorably the Canadian reciprocity agreement, because print paper and wood pulp are made free of duty by this agreement.

HERMAN RIDDER,
President American Newspaper Publishers' Association.

A false impression regarding this bill has gone forth broadcast, because the press of the country has a direct money advantage in it. The newspapers represented in the gallery above us here may be said to have an interest in this legislation ranging anywhere from $25,000 to $600,000 annually. And I say that those papers can not hereafter consistently criticize any Member of the Senate or Representative in Congress for his position upon legislation in which he has a direct pecuniary interest. We have here Senators who are bankers, woolen manufacturers, cotton manufacturers, Senators who are interested in mines and in lumber. I do not believe that they should vote upon any measure in which they have an interest; but hereafter no newspaper which has acted from purely selfish motives with respect to this legislation can effectively assail any Member of Congress who may support legislation directly in his own pecuniary interest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, is it not a peculiar vice of the protective-tariff theory, of which the Senator from Wisconsin is a distinguished advocate, that it makes it almost inevitable that various communities will favor legislation of a protective character in their interest, and renders it almost inevitable that the various interests of the country will rival each other in a scramble to derive the greatest possible benefit out of the tariff and out of the tariff graft?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator from Nebraska has been very unhappy in that question. He himself, as a newspaper publisher, has a direct pecuniary interest in the pending measure—a measure which will give to him and his publication free print paper. This is not a protective-tariff proposition; it is a free-trade proposition. It does seem to me, Mr. President, that this tariff question impales upon one horn or the other whoever happens to have an interest, whether it be on the free-trade side or on the protective side. Human nature is much the same. I do not believe that anybody can make much political capital and much political gain out of that sort of treatment of the tariff.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin further yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it seems to me it would be just as fair for me in reply to criticize the Senator from Wisconsin for advocating a tariff on paper by charging that he, as the representative of Wisconsin, was standing here upon the floor of the Senate representing the interests of the great paper mills of Wisconsin, to which the whole West is compelled to pay tribute, and which have been built up very largely by the great tariff on paper and wood pulp.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But the trouble with the Senator from Nebraska is that he is just as wrong now as he was before. I, as a representative from Wisconsin have stood here, and stand here now, for free print paper, because, Mr. President, the report of the Tariff Board shows that we can make print paper in this country just as cheaply as it can be made in Canada; and for that reason, as I said a few days ago in discussing that question that I should offer, and I shall offer as an amendment to this very bill before it comes to a vote tomorrow, a proposition to put print paper and wood pulp on the free list.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin further yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator, then, is condemning in a wholesale way the newspapers of the United States because they have united to demand something that he himself admits is just, that he himself proclaims they should have.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator from Nebraska once for all, that he is wasting his time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We both are.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No; I do not believe I am, as I shall make plain to the Senator in a moment. He, a newspaper owner, and the balance of the newspaper interests of this country are seeking to get print paper, not through tariff revision but as a reciprocity proposition at the expense of agriculture. That is what I object to, Mr. President. I am ready to vote for free print paper—and for placing on the free list other manufactures—the moment it can be shown, as has been shown by the report of the Tariff Board in the case of print paper, that it can be produced as cheaply here as anywhere in Canada. I favor placing that product on the free list, but as an independent tariff proposition. The Senator from Nebraska and the balance of the newspaper fraternity, on the other hand, seize upon the first opportunity to secure something of benefit for themselves in a trade with Canada that is unfair and unjust to the agricultural interests of this country—a barter which will give them free paper at the expense of agriculture, not upon any just principle, but simply because it is so much money in their pockets. That is what I object to; that is what I denounce; and any proposal that does immeasurable injustice to one industry for the advantage of another I hope I shall always have the courage to oppose, whether it affects a Wisconsin industry or otherwise.

Mr. President, whatever favor this Canadian agreement has found with the public rests upon the mistaken belief that it is the beginning of lower tariffs. The public does not at present stop to inquire whether this bill is just and equitable. In their resentment and disappointment, resulting from the extra tariff session, many people approve the first measure that has even an appearance of tariff reduction. But in the end the public always holds its representatives responsible for the ultimate effect of legislation. The important judgment which will be pronounced on this measure is the final judgment attested by experience.

But, sir, he is indeed blind who does not see that the people of this country are impatient for tariff reductions. The people feel that they have been baffled in all efforts to get decent and reasonable tariff reductions. The results of the wrong visited upon the American people by the tariff revision of 1909 are just what progressive Senators at that time predicted they would be. We said then that you could not settle the tariff question by any such measure as the Payne-Aldrich bill; nor can you. You can not do a wrong and put it to sleep.

The people of this country well understood that they were jobbed in the extra tariff session of 1909. Just review for a moment what preceded that session. With all its high rates the people of this country had stood for the Dingley tariff law; they voted for it, following the experiences of 1892, 1893, 1894—I will go back of that and include 1891. I have never agreed with those who charged all the results of that depression to the Wilson tariff law. In my view there was no just economic foundation for that contention. But, as I say, the people of this country, believing that the general depression that prevailed was the result of the Wilson-Gorman Tariff Act, voted, and voted knowingly and purposely, for the high Dingley rates of 1897. They knew what they were about; they wanted just exactly that thing; they believed it would be a cure.

The people who voted for the Dingley Act relied upon competition between American manufacturers to prevent monopoly and extortionate prices, just as they had been taught to rely upon competition from the time of Alexander Hamilton down; but the Dingley law was enacted in an economic and industrial transition period in this country, a fact that was not appreciated by anybody at that time. We were just then crossing the line. What followed the enactment of the Dingley law? The people saw the protected industries organize combinations and suppress competition by agreement. They suffered the enormous increase in prices resulting from these unjust and unlawful combinations. Then what followed? They demanded tariff revision as a measure of relief from extortion. They did not demand upward tariff revision, but downward tariff revision. They pressed their demand until a stand-pat national covention responded with a pledge of tariff revision, which the Republican candidate for President interpreted as downward revision. They elected the Republican candidate on his campaign promise of downward revision of the Dingley rates. They were given the Payne-Aldrich bill and upward revision instead of the downward revision promised.

Mr. President, the progressives have been criticized at this session because they do not support reciprocity. I say to you that in the tariff session of 1909 the progressive Republicans stood squarely for the kind of tariff revision which the Republican platform and the Republican candidate for President had promised. Every argument they advanced, every vote they cast, was for a tariff that would measure the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. That was the Republican position on the tariff in 1908; that was where the progressive Republicans stood in 1909; and that, Mr. President, is where they stand to-day.

No one who commended the Republican progressives for the fight they made on the Payne-Aldrich bill two years ago has any right to criticize them now for their position on the tariff bill based upon the Canadian pact.

Considered as a tariff bill, it violates every principle of every Republican platform ever written.

It places upon the free list the products of the farm, regardless of the cost of producing those products.

It deprives the American farmer of the small benefit he derives directly from a protective tariff in order to secure for the overprotected manufacturer a reduction of Canadian duties upon the surplus manufactured products which he desires to sell in Canada.

It denies the American consumer any benefits from the free agricultural products admitted to the American market by limiting the important products of the free list to the raw materials, such as wheat, oats, barley, flaxseed, cattle, sheep, and hogs, all of which must first pass into the hands of the miller, the brewer, Standard Oil, and the packers, combinations which absolutely control the prices of the finished products, before they can ever reach the consumer. It does more than that. It operates to increase the high protective duties of the Payne-Aldrich tariff for the benefit of the millers, the brewers, the packers, and Standard Oil from 27 per cent to 322 per cent, as I shall demonstrate later.

Of course the manufacturers are for this bill. It admits raw materials free which they can manufacture and sell to American consumers at trust prices.

It secures some reductions in Canadian duties, which will enable our highly protected manufacturers to find a market for some of their surplus in Canada.

It buys these concessions from Canada by giving her free admission to the American market for farm produce at the expense of the American farmer.

That is what President Taft's brand of reciprocity does.

But, Mr. President, considering the interests of each country as a whole, upon what basis can their respective Governments be expected to engage in reciprocal exchanges?

1. That each country produces a surplus of natural products or manufactures not produced by the other in sufficient quantity to supply its needs.

2. That each country is able to deliver to the other a fair equivalent in the exchange.

Considering the interests of a country as a whole, what duty does its government owe to its people and its producers of natural products and manufactures in negotiating a reciprocity agreement?

1. That it shall secure a full equivalent in the exchange of products.

2. That one class of producers shall not be sacrificed or made to suffer serious loss to secure commercial advantages for another class of producers.

Mr. President, I oppose this bill because it belies its title. It is not reciprocity.

As a reciprocity measure it violates every principle of reciprocity heretofore expressed in the platform declarations of the Republican Party and recommended by former Republican Presidents.

Whatever popular favor reciprocity has earned from the present generation was inspired by the policy as defined by Blaine and McKinley.

I was a member of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives in 1889 and 1890. When Blaine proposed his policy of reciprocity as supplementing the protective tariff system, of which he was the strongest advocate of his time, he did not propose to abolish all duties upon agricultural products. He was not in favor of subjecting the farmers of this country to free trade with Canada in grain and cattle and hogs and sheep and dairy products.

As Secretary of State he said in a communication to President Harrison:

> It is of the highest possible importance, in my view, that there be no treaty of reciprocity with Canada. * * * It would be considered a betrayal of the agricultural interests.

Speaking at Waterville, Me., August 29, he further defined his views upon reciprocity, saying:

> I wish to declare the opinion that the United States has reached a point where one of its highest duties is to enlarge the area of its foreign trade. * * * I mean expansion of trade with countries where we can find profitable exchanges. * * * I think that we would be unwisely content if we did not seek to engage in what the younger Pitt so well termed "annexation of trade." * * *
> What I mean to speak of briefly is a system of reciprocity not in conflict with the protective tariff, but supplementary thereto, and presenting a field of enterprise that will richly repay the efforts and energy of the American people.

The ideas of Blaine were incorporated in the McKinley tariff law as section 3 of that act.

J. Laurence Laughlin, professor of political economy of the University of Chicago, and H. Parker Willis, former professor of economics and political science in Washington and Lee University and now the able staff correspondent in Washington of the New York Journal of Commerce, in their joint work on reciprocity sum up the position taken by the Republicans in the Fifty-first Congress, who debated the reciprocity amendment to the McKinley tariff bill, as follows:

> Reciprocity, according to the true Republican view, thus contained the following elements:
> 1. The products admitted to the United States must not compete with those produced by us.
> 2. The countries traded with must be such as would take our surplus of manufactures and of farm produce.
> 3. The concessions obtained by us must be fully equivalent in the volume of trade thereby gained to those made by the countries with which the arrangements were entered into.

In the course of that debate the senior Senator from Illinois, Mr. CULLOM, defines his view of the Republican position on reciprocity as follows:

> "I am in favor of such reciprocity between the United States and other nations, especially with the Republics of Mexico and of Central and South America, as can be agreed upon and as will open up new markets to the people of this country. * * * What we desire is to find a market for whatever surplus we may have, either in agricultural productions or in manufactures; and to secure such market we should be willing to take from the people who take our surplus a sufficient amount of the surplus of such productions or articles as we do not produce to the extent of our needs to pay for it."

Under the reciprocity provision of the McKinley Tariff Act a number of reciprocity treaties were negotiated, namely, with Brazil; Spain, acting on behalf of Cuba and Porto Rico; the treaty for the British Colonies, Santo Domingo, Guatemala, Salvador, Honduras, and Nicaragua. The most important of these was the treaty with Brazil, which was made public by President Harrison's proclamation, February 5, 1891.

This treaty, negotiated by the Harrison administration, is in marked contrast with the so-called reciprocal pact of the Taft administration. It secured for the United States admission free of duty into all the established ports of entry of Brazil of the following schedule of agricultural and manufactured products of the United States: Wheat and wheat flour; corn or maize and the manufactures thereof, including corn meal and starch, rye, rye flour, buckwheat, buckwheat flour, and barley; potatoes, beans, and peas; hay and oats; pork, salted, including pickled pork and bacon, except hams; fish, salted, dried, or pickled; cottonseed oil; coal, anthracite and bituminous; rosin, tar, pitch, and turpentine; agricultural tools, implements, and machinery; mining and mechanical tools, implements, and machinery, including stationary and portable engines and all machinery for manufacturing and industrial purposes, except sewing machines; instruments and books for the arts and sciences; railway construction material and equipment.

This treaty further secured admission into all the established ports of entry of Brazil, with a reduction of 25 per cent of the duty designated on the respective articles in the tariff then in force or thereafter adopted, of the following articles of merchandise, the same being the product or manufacture of the United States of America: Lard and substitutes therefor; bacon and hams; butter and cheese; canned and preserved meats, fish, fruits, and vegetables; manufactures of cotton, including cotton clothing; manufactures of iron and steel, single or mixed, not included in the foregoing free schedule; leather and the manufactures thereof, except boots and shoes; lumber, timber, and the manufactures of wood, including cooperage, furniture of all kinds, wagons, carts, and carriages; manufactures of rubber.

And in consideration for the foregoing extended list of the products of the farm and factory the United States admitted the following products of Brazil: Sugar, molasses, coffee, and hides free of duty.

The Republican platform of 1892 affirmed adherence to the Republican policy of reciprocity as established under the McKinley law, as follows:

We point to the success of the Republican policy of reciprocity under which our export trade has vastly increased and new and enlarged markets have been opened for the products of our farms and workshops. We remind the people of the bitter opposition of the Democratic Party to this practical business measure, and claim that executed by a Republican administration our present laws will eventually give us control of the trade of the world.

Mr. President, that is the progress that we were making under the McKinley Tariff Act with its reciprocity provision when the Democrats succeeded to power, and the Wilson tariff law of 1894 repealed the McKinley law with its reciprocity provision. We had ample opportunity in that period to test the effectiveness of that provision.

I said a moment ago that the pending bill violates every platform declaration of the Republican Party, and violates or contravenes or is in opposition to the recommendations of every Republican President except President Taft.

The plank of the Republican platform on reciprocity in 1896—I read from National Conventions and Platforms, by McKee—is as follows:

We believe the repeal of the reciprocity agreements negotiated by the last Republican administration was a national calamity, and we demand their renewal and extension on such terms as will equalize our trade with other nations, remove the restrictions which now obstruct the sale of American products in the ports of other countries, and secure enlarged markets for the products of our farms, forests, and factories.

Protection and reciprocity are twin measures of Republican policy and go hand in hand.

That would not exactly fit the pending Canadian tariff bill, designed to carry out President Taft's Canadian agreement, for in that measure reciprocity and protection do not go hand in hand, but are in direct conflict.

This plank further reads as follows:

Democratic rule has recklessly struck down both, and both must be reestablished.

Now listen:

Protection for what we produce; free admission for the necessaries of life which we do not produce.

That is not this bill. This bill gives the Canadian farmers free admission for exactly what the farms of this country do produce.

I read again. I repeat that:

Protection for what we produce; free admission for the necessaries of life which we do not produce; reciprocity agreements of mutual interests which gain open markets for us in return for our open market to others. Protection builds up domestic industry and trade and secures our own market for ourselves; reciprocity builds up foreign trade and finds an outlet for our surplus.

But, Mr. President, the reciprocity proposed by this administration makes war upon the farm; it opens our markets on all agricultural products for the benefit of the Canadian producer, and is directly opposed to the declarations of the Republican Party of 1896 and to everything which the Republican Party has ever expressed in legislation up to the present time.

Let us go a step further. Come down to the national platform of 1900 and see whether this legislation is in agreement with anything for which the Republican Party has ever stood in all its history.

The Republicans, in their platform of 1900, declared:

We favor the associated policy of reciprocity, so directed as to open our markets on favorable terms for what we do not ourselves produce in return for free foreign markets.

It has fallen to this administration to devise and mark out a new policy for the Republican Party, a course running at right angles to everything that has heretofore been expressed in a Republican platform, and, as I shall show before I conclude, in opposition to everything that the present administration stood for when it was contesting for the right to administer the affairs of this Government.

Now, I direct your attention to the position of the Republican Party regarding legislation on this subject as expressed in its platform of 1904:

We have extended widely our foreign markets, and we believe in the adoption of all practicable methods for their further extension, including commercial reciprocity wherever reciprocal arrangements can be effected consistent with the principles of protection and without injury to American agriculture, American labor, or any American industry.

If the present administration had sought some form of legislation which would directly contravene and overturn all of the tenets and platform declarations and avowed principles of the Republican Party upon the subject of reciprocity, it could not have been more successful than in the pending Canadian agreement and the legislation which it has proposed here and recommended to carry that agreement into statute law.

Mr. President, just a word from the Republican Presidents who have spoken authoritatively since the Republican Party outlined its policy on reciprocity. President McKinley, at Buffalo, N. Y., September 5, 1901, in the last speech he ever delivered, advocated reciprocity in the following words:

By sensible trade arrangements, which will not interrupt our home production, we shall extend the outlets of our increasing surplus.

Do Senators think that William McKinley, when he uttered those words, had in mind a proposition such as that which is pending before the Senate to-day?

The pending bill proposes to subject agriculture to the only competitor which it has in the world on certain farm products, without the suggestion of a barrier, a competitor who has the benefit of cheaper production, as I shall demonstrate before I conclude, who has the benefit of a lower priced market in which to purchase all of his supplies, and the benefit of low transportation charges to market. Continuing President McKinley said:

We should take from our customers such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor.

That, Mr. President, is in perfect accord with every declaration ever made in a Republican platform. That is in perfect agreement with every position ever taken by a Republican statesman before the present time.

President Roosevelt, in his first message to Congress, defined his views upon this subject. They seem to be in entire harmony with every Republican platform expression with the standard fixed for us by Blaine and with the utterances of McKinley. President Roosevelt said, in his annual message, December 3, 1901:

Reciprocity must be treated as the handmaiden of protection. Our first duty is to see that the protection granted by the tariff in every case where it is needed is maintained and that reciprocity be sought for, so far as it can be safely done, without injury to our home industries.

So much, Mr. President, for the platform declarations of the Republican Party prior to 1908. I can not forbear to turn for a moment to the platform declarations of the Democratic Party in this same connection. We sometimes do not recognize, it seems to me, the real significance of the history we are making here from day to day. It becomes much more telling and freighted with far greater consequences after the day passes. A strange political situation has been presented by this legislation.

Day after day we have seen the votes of Democratic Senators combined with the votes of representatives of the most highly protected industries in the United States to advance this legislation. That is a union that sooner or later must bear certain fruitage. What shall it be? There is some inconsistency in that coalition. Forces so antagonistic can not combine without sooner or later producing an explosion. Somebody will suffer for what has been transpiring upon the floor of the Senate for the last few weeks. There is always the day of reckoning for every inconsistency, for every wrong committed. I say the Democratic Party has violated its own platform provisions in every vote which it has cast on this floor in its combination with the representatives of the highly protected industries of the East, of New England particularly. The Democratic platform in 1892 said this:

We denounce the sham reciprocity which juggles with the people's desire for enlarged foreign markets and free exchanges, by pretending to establish closer trade relations for a country whose articles of export are almost EXCLUSIVELY AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

They were talking then about the treaties which had been framed under the McKinley tariff of 1890 with the South American Republics. They were denouncing those treaties as a sham and a pretense, because they were holding out to the agriculture of this country some hope of another market outside of the United States for surplus agricultural products; and the Democratic platform of 1892 denounced any arrangement with any country whose exports are almost exclusively agricultural products. And now we find on this floor practically the entire Democratic Party voting for a pretended reciprocal arrangement with Canada, a country whose exports are almost exclusively agricultural.

To go a step further, let us see how consistent the Democratic supporters of this Canadian reciprocity are with the previous attitude of their party upon this subject. In 1904 the Democratic platform said:

> We favor liberal trade arrangements with Canada and with the peoples of other countries where they can be entered into with benefit to American AGRICULTURE, manufactures, mining, or commerce.

Where, I ask, do Democratic Senators expect to find any advantage for the farmers of the United States in this so-called reciprocity agreement to which they are giving their support? An arrangement with a country that has really nothing to give us but agricultural products, to share the market with the American farmer, can hardly be said to be beneficial to American agriculture.

I believe, Mr. President, some records are being made here, day by day, that will have to be settled for in the not distant future.

But it is not my purpose to arraign the Democratic Party. It can take care of its own affairs. I want to address myself, however, for a little time to the present Republican situation.

Mr. President, it is always possible for error to creep into a political platform. A political convention can hardly be called a deliberative body. Its sessions are brief and the work is always done under very great pressure. Delegates are anxious to conclude their labors and return to their homes. There is always in every political convention more or less rush and confusion. It is therefore possible for some ill-considered phrase or sentence which does not represent the mature thought of the majority of the convention subsequently to be found incorporated in the party platform. That has happened to all political parties in conventions, county, State, and national. There is, too, always the possibility of such an occurrence through design.

Adroit, clever, able politicians are to be found in every convention, and powerful interests are always watchful and farsighted in preparing the way for legislation which they will seek later at the hands of the party.

But such features of a political platform, Mr. President, are seldom referred to in the campaign by those directly responsible for their place in the platform, but are certain later to be made the basis of claim for legislative or administrative favors.

I have always contended, sir, that the declarations and promises of a platform which have been thoroughly discussed, which fairly represent the will of the voters who constitute the party organization, the principles upon which the campaign of the party is conducted, which win the support of the voter at the polls, are the platform promises and declarations which every party, and the official representatives of every party, are bound sacredly to execute and fulfill.

I say, Mr. President, it is possible for some error or mistake to occur as a result of the work of a political convention which may fairly be explained because of the conditions under which the work is performed. But no justification can be found for the deliberate and carefully matured plan upon which the party and its candidates conduct their campaign to secure the support of the voters of the country.

Following the Republican national convention of June, 1908, it became the acknowledged right of the candidate for President to select the chairman of the Republican national committee, a right which has always been accorded to the candidate as a matter of course. This right and privilege insures the conduct of the campaign upon plans and along lines that meet the approval of the man who is, if elected, to be held responsible to the people for the fulfillment of the campaign promises, upon the good faith of which the citizen stakes his support.

Next to the platform of the party, the campaign textbook is rightly regarded as the highest and most authoritative expression of the party's position, upon which the voter is expected to rely. While the platform is the quick work of a convention, hastening to dispose of its business, the campaign textbook is the most deliberate and carefully matured expression of the party's position upon all questions covered by and related to the platform, the past record, and the future purposes of the party and the party's candidates.

The campaign textbook, as its title implies, is the party's basis of instruction and education in all that constitutes the party's faith. It is the guide and precept for every man sent forth by the authority of the party to interpret the logical relation of its present attitude to past history, and to bespeak, with the highest authority, its guaranty for the future. The campaign textbook is sent forth broadcast over the country under the seal of party authority to make its direct appeal to the voters in every community. The rank and dignity of the campaign textbook makes it the arbiter by which all party positions are settled, all party disputes determined, in every hamlet and village throughout the land. Campaign leaflets and newspaper reports of the speeches of presidential candidates have no standing when contradicted by the printed page of the campaign textbook.

Mr. President, I offer in evidence for the particular consideration of the Republicans of the Senate and the country the Republican Campaign Textbook of 1908. I have been astounded that in all that we have heard for the Canadian agreement from January 26, when the President's first special message was issued, down to his last public address, delivered at Indianapolis, no hint or suggestion or intimation has been made of the extended treatment to be found of the subject of reciprocity in the 10 carefully considered pages embodied in this volume of Republican political gospel.

The whole creed of the Republican Party on reciprocity, aye, sir, on Republican reciprocity as distinguished from Democratic reciprocity, is laid down in this work, from page 130 to page 140, inclusive.

I have marveled, Mr. President, that as the debate progressed in the House of Representatives and on this floor no one has cited the clearly defined position of the Republican Party not only on the general subject of reciprocity but on Canadian reciprocity in particular as set forth in this document.

Mr. BORAH. Will it interrupt the Senator if I make a quotation in line with the argument the Senator is making?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly not.

Mr. BORAH. I want to call attention to some previous campaign literature, but only very briefly. From page 92 up to page 96, in the campaign book of 1888, we have the title "The protected American farmer," and it closes by saying concerning our opposition friends:

> Now let us see how they propose to help the farmer. By removing the duty from nearly everything the farmer raises, thus compelling him to share his valuable home market with the Canadian farmer.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Idaho for putting into the record at this particular point the expressed position of the Republican Party in that campaign. It has pursued down to the present time a course perfectly consistent with platform principles. But now we come to a time when it appears that administrations are not to be bound by the declarations upon which has been secured the support of the American people.

Sir, I have always regarded platform declarations representing the clearly defined views of the majority of the party as sacred obligations. I believe, sir, that a political party is bound to carry out faithfully in letter and spirit the pledges upon which it secures the support of the electorate. After men reach maturity, and within the ordinary span of life, they do not vote for presidential candidates more than four or five times, when the curtain rings down and it is over. With the average American citizen the casting of his ballot constitutes his only direct participation in government. Once in four years he has, through his ballot, the opportunity to express his ideas, his will, his conviction, his wishes on the destinies of his country. Can you conceive of a more reprehensible act on the part of any man or organization of men than to mislead the voter; to get his franchise and then to betray him?

Mr. President, apart from the platform itself nothing is more binding on a political party than adherence to the principles set forth and treated with thoroughness in its campaign textbook.

I purpose, sir, to put into this record at this time, because it is a part of the history of this legislation, the argument and appeal made to the American farmer on the subject of Canadian reciprocity by those who conducted the campaign for the benefit of the Republican candidate for President, who has recommended and is using all the power of his great office to force through this Congress the pending legislation.

I read from page 130 of the Republican Campaign Textbook of the campaign of 1908. The title of this chapter is "Reciprocity":

> Reciprocity is another form of tariff revision which has been suggested at various times by various people and by people belonging to various political parties. It was suggested by President Arthur, James G. Blaine, and William McKinley; was put into operation in the McKinley tariff law; was destroyed by the Democratic Wilson-Gorman tariff law; and now the Democratic Party is charging that the Republican Party is not willing to give the country "genuine reciprocity."

Now, observe what follows:

> There are two distinct kinds of legislation which have been designated as reciprocity legislation. The first of these was enacted by the Democratic Party in 1854, taking effect in 1855. It was reciprocity with Canada, and provided that certain articles, the growth or produce of Canada or the United States, should be admitted into each country, respectively, free of duty. These were—

The next words are in italics—> articles of common production in the two countries, and included grain, flour, animals of all kinds, fresh, smoked, and salted meats, cotton, seeds, vegetables, fruits, fish, poultry, eggs, hides, furs, stone, slate, butter, cheese, tallow, lard, ores, coal, pitch, turpentine, ashes, timber, lumber, flax, hemp, tobacco, and rags. These were all, with the single exception of cotton, articles of mutual production, and Democratic reciprocity simply provided for free trade in these competing articles.

What does Republican reciprocity under this administration provide for that is markedly different from the Democratic reciprocity which is here decried as harmful to the interests of this country? Let us go a little further.

Under that treaty, which went into effect March 16, 1855, and terminated March 17, 1866, exports from the United States to Canada fell from $27,741,808 in the fiscal year 1855 to $23,439,115 in the fiscal year 1866, a reduction in our exports to Canada of over $4,000,000 during this period of Democratic reciprocity, while imports into the United States from Canada increased from $15,118,289 in 1855 to $48,133,599 in 1866, an increase of $33,000,000. In our trade with all other countries during that same period our imports increased 60 per cent, while those from Canada were increasing 220 per cent, and our exports to all other countries increased 70 per cent while those to Canada under this reciprocity were decreasing 15 per cent. It was simply free trade in articles of common production and with no barrier to protect the domestic producer, the result being a much greater increase in our imports from Canada than in those from other countries and a decrease of exports to that country while to other countries exports were increasing.

Mr. President, what voter who read that page of the Republican campaign textbook of 1908 had any right to expect that the agricultural interests of this country would be treated to identically the Democratic brand of Canadian reciprocity that is embodied in this pact and in the pending legislation. Was ever a more finished confidence game worked upon the American people?

In order to emphasize still further the iniquity of the sort of reciprocity, which was characterized as Democratic reciprocity in the campaign of 1908, but which is now the administration reciprocity, they went on with this discussion, and I propose to incorporate it in the record. I continue to quote:

A later form of reciprocity with which the country has had experience is illustrated by the plan formulated in the McKinley tariff law and expressed by William McKinley in his much-quoted speech at Buffalo, in which he said:

By sensible trade arrangements—

And then, in order to give the producers of the country assurance, they put in italics the next words uttered by McKinley.

arrangements which will not interrupt our home production we shall extend the outlets for our increasing surplus. * * * We should take from our customers such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor.

That was to give assurance to every producer of an American product that if the Republican candidate was elected no reciprocity scheme would be proposed by the incoming administration which would bring into this country free of duty commodities to compete with or harm our own industries and our own labor. And yet, Mr. President, the facts before the Senate, and the undisputed testimony taken by the Finance Committee, leave no doubt that the farmers of three States alone—Minnesota and North and South Dakota—will suffer a loss of not less than $40,000,000 annually by the free importation into this country of Canadian agricultural products. I quote further—to purchase from our neighbor such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor; in other words, such of their products as are not produced by our own labor, and obtain in exchange markets for the class of merchandise which we desire to sell, and which the countries in question require for their own use, differs materially from the reciprocity of 1855–56, which was merely free trade in articles of mutual production—articles which when imported compete with the home producer.

That is just what this Canadian pact is—free trade in wheat and oats and flaxseed and barley and cattle and hogs and sheep and dairy products—everything that is produced upon the farm.

Mr. President, every line of this campaign textbook was an appeal to the farmers of the United States to support the Republican candidate and the Republican Party rather than the Democratic candidate, because Republican success would save them from the sort of Canadian reciprocity represented by the Democratic administration of 1855, which is distinguished from Republican reciprocity as defined in the Republican platform and by Republican Presidents. And yet we have urged upon us here the same sort of legislation which every paragraph and every line of these 10 pages in this campaign textbook denounce as dangerous and hostile to the interests of agriculture.

The chief classes of products which we do not produce in the United States are tropical and subtropical. We import about $400,000,000 worth of tropical and subtropical products every year—more than a million dollars' worth for every day in the year, including Sundays and holidays. These articles we do not produce in the United States in sufficient quantities for home requirements. They include rubber, hemp, sisal, jute, raw silk, Egyptian cotton, and other articles used in manufacturing; and coffee, cocoa, tea, spices, olives, bananas, and sugar, used as food and drink. These classes of articles are of the class which "we can use without harm to our industries and labor."

Sugar is the only article in this list produced in the United States, and at the present time the home production of sugar is only sufficient to supply about one-fifth of the total home consumption. The countries which produce these tropical and subtropical articles are not manufacturing countries, nor are they large producers of those great staples of food—flour, wheat, corn, and meats.

Appeal is made to both agriculture and manufacturing to stand by this particular kind of reciprocity, which is stamped Republican reciprocity as distinguished from Democratic reciprocity, in order that the agreements entered into under that name shall harm no production of the United States, but shall extend the markets for what we produce, and bring in free of duty, or much reduced in duty, articles of necessity which our people use.

I continue to read from the textbook:

RECIPROCITY TREATIES UNDER THE M'KINLEY LAW.

Under the McKinley tariff law reciprocity treaties were made by President Harrison with the Governments of Brazil, British Guiana, Salvador, Nicaragua, Honduras, Guatemala, Santo Domingo, and the countries governing the British West Indies and Porto Rico and Cuba. These treaties provided for a reduction of duties on foodstuffs—

Now, mark that. Oh, I tell you this was adroitly worded to appeal to the farm voter—

These treaties provided for a reduction of duties on foodstuffs and manufactures from the United States entering the countries and islands in question, in exchange for the free importation of sugar, coffee, tea, and hides into the United States, as provided under the general terms of the McKinley Act. The result of those treaties with this group of tropical countries, producing the class of articles which the United States requires and does not produce in sufficient quantities at home, was that our exports to those countries and islands increased 26 per cent and our imports from them increased 28 per cent—between 1890, the year of the enactment of the McKinley law, and 1894, the year in which it was repealed by a Democratic Congress and a Democratic President, and reciprocity thus destroyed. During that same period our exports to all other countries than those above named increased 3 per cent and our imports from them decreased 27 per cent.

See how evenly they balance—

Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate to read further, as I know the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] desires to occupy the floor for a time this afternoon and perhaps other Senators likewise, but I ask leave to incorporate in my remarks all the matter relating to reciprocity contained in this campaign textbook from pages 130 to 139, inclusive, and to print the same as an appendix to my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Now, Mr. President, I desire to take a little more of the time of the Senate and call attention to another inconsistency of this administration in connection with this same legislation.

President Taft, in his message of January 26, transmitting this bill to Congress, said:

This is not a violation of the protective principle, as that has been authoritatively announced by those who uphold it, because that principle does not call for a tariff between this country and one whose conditions as to production, population, and wages are so like ours.

In various speeches made soon thereafter the President stated there was no substantial difference in cost of production between Canada and this country.

On February 28 there was transmitted to Congress the report of the Tariff Board, giving the results of its investigation as to the cost of production of agricultural and certain forest products in this country and Canada. As the most casual reading of that report shows that the cost of production of agricultural products is very much less in Canada than in this country, it was no little surprise to find that in the President's message of April 5, transmitting this bill to this Congress, he reaffirms all the statements made in his message of January 26. Although the President had the report of the Tariff Board before him, not the slightest mention of its findings is made by him in his message of April 5. Indeed, in speech after speech made thereafter he continued to assert that there was no substantial difference in cost of production of agricultural products between Canada and this country, thereby discrediting to the fullest extent the findings of the Tariff Board, appointed by him.

Now, it is claimed that if the woolen schedule, the cotton schedule, or any other schedule of the tariff law shall be revised at this session the President will veto such legislation, upon the ground that no action should be taken until the Tariff Board shall have reported upon those subjects.

The President can not, in good faith, make this claim. In the bill before us he not only did not await the report of the Tariff Board before taking action, he not only ignores its findings when they are made, but in public speech squarely opposes its conclusions, and undertakes to assert that the conditions as to costs of production are directly contrary to those found by his own Tariff Board.

Sir, President Taft has been the first to discredit his own Tariff Board, and while I am anxious for its report upon the different schedules and expect it will be of great assistance to Congress, we have not the slightest assurance that it will have any influence upon the recommendations of the President to Congress. And if there be those in Congress, and there surely will, who will look for an excuse for ignoring the findings of the board, they need go no further than point to the action of President Taft upon this bill and his repudiation of the findings of the Tariff Board in relation to it.

Mr. President, I have made something of a study of the manifest injustice of this proposed legislation and what I believe will be its inevtiable effect upon the agricultural industry of this country.

Who are the chief exponents of this pact? I think it is a significant fact, and one that has not escaped the attention of the American people, that the two most distinguished exponents of this deal with Canada are President Taft and James J. Hill. How does it happen that when the campaign was opened to promote this legislation, James J. Hill was chosen to assist the President in doing it? The newspapers of February 10, 1911, contain full reports under large headlines of the President's speech in the national corn exposition at Columbus, Ohio, and Hill's speech before the Publicity Club of Minneapolis upon the same date. And what did these two gentlemen say? I take an extract from the speech of President Taft. He said:

> The advantage we give the Canadian farmers will not hurt our farmers, for the price will remain the same—

Mark that, in the face of figures and facts that have been brought out in the consideration of this pact, showing beyond all doubt that the prices the American farmer gets will not remain the same, but will be lower—> but by popularizing our elevators, our flour mills, our railroads, he will secure admission to the world market at a less cost to himself, for we will secure the advantage of increasing trade for our elevators, our mills, our railroads, and our commission men.

Now, what did James J. Hill, whose railroad lines pierce the heart of the great Canadian northwest, say on the same date? I take the following from his speech:

> The trade between Canada and the United States for 44 years has been handcuffed and shackled, and still, under all these adverse conditions, has made the progress it has. Why not let us knock off these shackles, and let it move as men move; let it go free?

And again he says:

> These gentlemen who are airing their views as to what it will do to this neighborhood and that neighborhood seem to have lost their ability of taking a true perspective. They hold the copper cent so close to the eye that they can not see the $10 gold piece beyond it. Canada is our third best customer. England is our best, she buying more from us and paying us the largest balance of trade. Germany * * * is our second best customer.

The trade of the United States with England and Germany is not of such immediate and profitable concern to Mr. Hill as is free and unrestricted trade with Canada.

It is significant, too, that President Taft and Mr. Hill on that same day both devoted a great deal of time to an effort to prove that the prices of wheat in this country will not be affected by the proposed pact; that it is the Liverpool price that controls the Northwest markets.

The same arguments are advanced, the same character of support is given to the proposed pact, and both men appeal to the American public to support this agreement as a measure of true statesmanship. Both of these distinguished advocates of this special-interest bargain with Canada endeavor to placate the American farmer. They say it will not injure him, but that it will actually benefit him. The extremes to which they were reduced to find some positive benefit that might accrue to the farmers through this pact may be illustrated by the following extract from President Taft's Columbus speech:

> The great increase in American mills likely to follow the free importation of wheat from Canada will give us the benefit of the by-products from bran and shorts, most valuable for dairy use and cattle raising, by-products that are now so scarce that many farmers are unable to procure them.

How strongly this argument appeals to Mr. Taft may be gathered from the fact that he laid stress upon it again on the occasion of a later speech in Chicago, on June 3, 1911, when he said:

> A very material benefit, too, to all the farmers of the country, especially the stock and cattle raisers and the dairy farmers, will be the by-products of bran and shorts from the flour mills likely to follow the free export of wheat from Canada to those mills.

President Taft and Mr. Hill have made the best case possible for this deal. But I contend that they have not demonstrated a single benefit that will flow from it, except the benefits that will be given to the railroads, the millers, the packers, the newspapers, and certain of our large manufacturers. The straits to which the advocates of this measure are driven in their endeavor to placate the indignant farming people of the country is, I think, fairly illustrated in the case of fencing wire. In his Springfield address on February 11 President Taft points out to the farmers of the Middle West that barbed wire is to come in from Canada free. In an open letter addressed to the legislative committee of the National Grange on February 9, Secretary of Agriculture James Wilson singles out free barbed wire which we are to get from Canada as an alluring inducement to the American farmer to support the administration in this pact. He said:

> Free barbed fencing wire will be a boon to our farmers.

Is there a farmer in the United States who does not know that our manufacturers are sending over into Canada every year more than 30,000,000 pounds to build the fences of the Canadian farmers? Not a pound came into the United States from Canada. Nor would a pound have come into the United States from Canada if it were free. The American manufacturer is more than able to compete with the Canadian manufacturer.

The same is true of other manufactured articles included in this free list. The American manufacturer controls the business on this continent and the American farmers must continue to pay tribute to him, and accept the prices he fixes, irrespective of any competition that may be opposed by giving our field to the little Canadian competitor of the great American manufacturers. Even in the case of lumber, the American farmer is handed a fine, big joker in this pact. The only lumber articles that are admitted free are sawed boards, planks, deals, and other lumber not further manufactured than sawed. Before such lumber can be used in the farmers' homes it must go through our mills to be finished for use.

Neither President Taft nor Mr. Hill are able to specify a single substantial benefit the American farmer will receive in return for the great sacrifices he is asked to make to secure the consummation of this trade agreement. On the other hand, no difficulty whatever is experienced by either of these distinguished advocates in demonstrating that the ratification of this pact will result in untold benefit to a few big interests. Mr. Hill's activity on behalf of this deal is easily understood. His great railroad lines parallel the boundary and connect with the steamship lines to the Orient. Branching off from these trunk lines are 15 or 20 feeders that extend far up into the interior of northwestern Canada. As our manufactures flow in an increasing stream across the border to supply the needs of this rapidly growing country, Mr. Hill's lines of railroad and other lines of railroad will secure the traffic, and as the agricultural products—its wheat, its barley, its live stock, its dairy products—pour into our markets, Mr. Hill's railroad and the other railroads will get the tonnage, too, of the foodstuffs and manufactures made from these Canadian products that must be sent to all parts of the interior of this country, and on to the coast for export.

Every pound of the foreign commerce of Canada that can be diverted from other markets to our market will add to the profits of our American railroads, and it makes no difference to our railroad magnates what price the farmer receives for his produce or what price the consumer is compelled to pay for what he buys. Their rates will be the same. Mr. Hill's railroad will charge the same rate for hauling a bushel of wheat to market when our farmer must sell at 75 cents a bushel as when he sells for a dollar. James J. Hill is called the "empire builder." He sees another vast empire to the north of us to be conquered by his lines of railroad. The ratification of this trade agreement with Canada means enormous traffic and millions of profits for the Hill lines. The great northwestern lines aid in fostering in every possible way the mutual intercourse of the people of this country and our neighbors to the north. I believe every legitimate means should be taken to stimulate trade back and forth across the border. It is not against improved trade relations with Canada that I protest, Mr. President, but against the injustice of this pact. It is against the unfair, unreciprocal, injurious nature of this legislation that singles out the farmers to divide their profitable home market with their Canadian competitors, and demands no similar sacrifice from our great trusts. The proposed pact is not reciprocity. It is a special-interest tariff measure.

The proposed agreement is not "reciprocity"; it takes from the American farmer something of great value, which is given to the Canadian farmer, and to the millers, packers, and other big interests.

Persistent efforts have been made by the advocates of the proposed agreement to convince the public that it will not injure agricultural interests.

President Taft, in his Chicago speech on June 3, contends that the farmer will not be injured nor will prices of farm products increase. At the same time he seeks to discredit the representatives of the farmers who have been active in opposing the bill.

The American Newspaper Publishers' Association—chief and most powerful exponent of the pact—distributed great quantities of literature on the appealing subjects of "reciprocity in the farm market" and "reciprocity in the farmer's home," for the purpose of molding the opinion of farmers in favor of the agreement, thus attempting to convince the agricultural interests of the advantages of the pact. No word appeared in this literature regarding free print paper, in which the newspaper publishers were directly interested. But day after day there appeared in the great newspapers of the country "news" items and editorials purporting to show the favor which the agreement should meet and, indeed, was meeting from representative farmers. From a reading of the daily press alone one would be led to believe that every farmer in the United States who was alive to his own best interests was giving enthusiastic support to the administration in this measure.

But are the farmers in favor of it? Will they lose or gain, or will their status remain unchanged if this trade agreement is carried into effect?

Mr. President, I maintain that the farmers, as a class, are vigorously opposed to the proposed agreement. This opposition has increased steadily as its bearing upon the agricultural interest became clear. During the hearings of the Senate Committee on Finance delegations of farmers from the leading agricultural States of this Union appeared here in opposition to the bill, and petitions were signed and resolutions adopted by farmers everywhere protesting against this one-sided arrangement, which makes a free-trade market for what he has to sell and compels him to buy in a highly protected market. It is safe to say, Mr. President, that the overwhelming majority of our agricultural population, who are producing what the Canadian farmers are also producing, are against this agreement. And justly so.

Look at the position in which this special-interest compact places the farmer:

For years and years the farmers of this country have stood solidly for the protective principle. From the time of Horace Greeley they have gone to the polls, election after election, and returned to power the party pledged to this political theory. They have had no hand in writing the schedules. It was not primarily for their profit that the tariff wall was raised higher and higher. And all this time he has been compelled to pay more for what he consumes than if he had free access to other markets. All these years he has been paying more to the manufacturers who make his clothing, his machinery, his lumber, his furniture, even his schoolbooks, than he would have paid with the markets of the world thrown open to him.

Why has he done this? Why has he helped to maintain protection? Because, Mr. President, he believed in building up a home market for the products of the soil. Because he figured that by fostering our manufacturing industries the general prosperity of the Nation would be enhanced; that a great and well-paid manufacturing population was the best guaranty of a great and well-patronized farming population; that an exclusive market for him would thus be created, by proper protective duties upon the products of the farm.

Thus the farmer reasoned. And as the years have gone he has seen the country develop into the greatest industrial Nation of the world. His logic was justified. His long years of patient toil, his hardships in opening up new lands and creating new agricultural empires, to afford a wider and firmer foundation for the Nation's prosperity, his poverty—all this had its reward. His home market was created.

But while the farmer was enduring his double portion of deprivation and hard work during this period of protection when the industrial interests were waxing fat and powerful, while he was plodding along with his eye to the future and that splendid market, forces were at work to take from him the advantage for which he was sacrificing so much. The railroads absorbed a large part of the price he received for his products. Great commission houses appeared to corral his fruits and vegetables and take their lion's share. Gigantic packing companies swallowed up his live stock and grew rich. Enormous elevator concerns stored away his grain. The home market was at hand, but between it and the farmer was now interposed a distributing organization that took two-thirds of what the consumers paid and left for the farmer his paltry third.

Yet, robbed to a large extent of the advantages of his home market, the farmer wavered not from the standard of protection. He recognized and turned to grapple with these forces that held him away from the full enoyment of the market he had helped to create. And he did demand, Mr. President, in common with the rest of the great consuming public, that the industrial combinations be prevented from longer revelling in a tariff protection that had passed the limits of protection and reached the point of sordid graft. He declared for protection sufficient only to cover the difference between the cost of production in this and the competing foreign countries. But he insists, and rightly, that this principle be applied to all industries alike—to farming as well as manufacturing.

And now this so-called reciprocity confronts him. Perfected in secret conclave it came into the light, not reciprocity, but an arrangement whereby the long-enduring farmer is made to pay for the concessions made to a few prosperous special interests, so few, indeed, that they may be counted upon the fingers of one hand.

What is this price? Let us consider some of these farm products that have been placed upon the free list and see to what extent our agricultural interests will be injured if this pact is ratified.

WHEAT.

There is at present a tariff of 25 cents a bushel on wheat entering this country from Canada. Last year our importations from Canada over this tariff wall amounted to only 152,383 bushels. We exported to Canada, paying her duty of 12 cents a bushel, only 54,964 bushels. Between these two countries there is practically no trade at all in wheat.

The price the Canadian farmer receives for his wheat is determined by the world market. He receives the Liverpool price less the cost of transportation. The price received by the American wheat raiser is fixed by the home market. Minnesota, North Dakota, and South Dakota are the three great spring-wheat growing States. In 1910, according to statistics furnished by the Tariff Board—and these figures are lower than the estimates of wheat raisers—they produced 176,905,000 bushels, every bushel of which is spring wheat. And right across the border is the Canadian wheat raiser who produces in the same year 149,989,600 bushels, of which only 16,610,000 bushels are the soft-winter wheat.

Bear in mind that the wheat most desired for milling is that known as the northern. It is the grade that the Minneapolis millers are seeking. It is this grade that the southern mills must have to mix with their soft wheat. And, owing to soil and climatic conditions, Canada produces a northern wheat that rivals if not excels the very best northern wheat grown in our Northwestern States.

Canada is a great wheat exporter. The United States is the world's greatest miller. Canada's surplus, which is now dumped upon the world market at world prices, is beating against our tariff wall of 25 cents a bushel to gain free access to a flour-consuming population of 90,000,000 people, and where a higher level of prices prevails than that afforded the Canadian wheat grower in his present market.

Mr. President, what do the figures show?

For the United States.

	Wheat produced.	Wheat exported.
	Bushels.	Bushels.
1901	522,229,505	132,060,667
1909	644,602,000	66,923,244

For Canada.

	Wheat produced.	Wheat exported.
	Bushels.	Bushels.
1909	165,787,530	59,959,663

Canada's wheat exports are increasing. In 1901 they were 22.32 per cent of the total production; in 1909, 36.17 per cent. The wheat exports of the United States are decreasing. In 1901 they were 25.28 per cent of the total wheat production; in 1909, only 10.07 per cent.

It must be borne in mind, in considering statistics of wheat exports of the United States, that the greater portion of what we send abroad is the softer grades. We send practically none of our high-grade milling wheat away from home. Minneapolis has ceased to export.

Our home demands are requiring more and more of our supply. The fact is further borne out by the statistics of flour exports. In 1901 we exported 18,650,979 barrels, which was 16.07 per cent of the total wheat production. In 1909 we exported 10,521,161 barrels, which was 7.12 per cent of the total wheat production. This indicates that our mills are taking a constantly greater portion of our wheat and that an increasingly greater proportion of the flour made in these mills is being consumed at home. Thus with regard to wheat and flour we find the consumption more and more nearly equaling the production. The American wheat raiser's return for the labor and capital he employs in producing his wheat—assuming always that the farmer gets his share of the advantages of his improving home market—seemed in a fair way of becoming sufficient to fairly and justly compensate him. If his just return is diverted by middle men or distributing agencies, that is a problem that must be dealt with separately and by itself.

Canada's wheat surplus, great as it is already, is increasing so rapidly that it is estimated by experts that it will eventually run up much higher than 100,000,000 bushels a year.

In the northwestern Provinces alone the number of acres devoted to wheat growing jumped from 3,941,369 in 1905 to 8,395,400 acres in 1910. More than doubled in five years!

Canadian lands—virgin, fertile, level, vast stretches unbroken by mountains, none of which have been more than scratched by the plow—yield on the average 15.53 bushels to the acre, while on our side of the border the average is but 11.7 bushels, according to the report of the President's Tariff Board. With the same effort, the Canadian wheat grower gets a return of about 4 bushels more per acre. And he does so on land that is worth, on the most conservative estimate, more than $7 per acre less than the lands of the American farmer.

Is our farmer to have this great wheat country pitted against him, with no compensating benefits to enable him to meet it?

Now, as to prices. The Canadian wheat raiser receives on the average a little over 10 cents a bushel less for his wheat than the farmer on this side of the border. The fact that our farmer is paid a higher price for his wheat than his Canadian competitor has been amply demonstrated on this floor by the Senator from North Dakota. The figures show so clearly and uniformly that the American farmer receives on the average over 10 cents a bushel more than the Canadian farmer that no attempt has been made at any time in this discussion to question or dispute the fact.

Ten cents a bushel represents in money the advantage the American farmer receives from the home market he has sacrificed so much to develop. Ten cents a bushel. That is the price to be collected from the wheat growers as their part of the payment for these benefits to be given to great protected trusts. I do not mean to say that free trade will automatically force the American level of prices down to the Canadian level. It is possible that with an influx of Canadian wheat the Canadian price would go up and the American price would come down until a common level was reached. But I think there is no question but that such a level would be close to the present Canadian level. Of course, if such were the case, the benefit to the Canadian wheat grower would consist merely in an additional and convenient market, rather than in better prices, but if you put the Canadian wheat grower on the same price level as the American wheat grower and in the same market he will still have an immense advantage in the shape of more productive and cheaper lands. And however that may be, the American wheat grower would certainly lose his present advantage of 10 cents a bushel. And I ask, Mr. President, is that to be lightly done?

The sensitiveness of this home market is strikingly indicated by the market reports during the consideration of this compact. Last February the market reports in Minneapolis newspapers—papers that were favorable to this trade compact—contained statements like this:

May wheat to-day sold down to 98⅞ cents. Possibility of reciprocity causes still further declines.

Wheat sold down to still further new lows. Advices from the national capital late to-day were favorable for reciprocity with Canada. This caused a severe break in wheat prices.

On February 7 the closing markets showed declines on wheat, oats, and barley from the prices of the day the trade agreement was made public of 5 cents, 3 cents, and 13 cents, respectively.

The wheat of Canada is so situated that it can be hauled to our market just as cheaply as it is now hauled to Port Arthur for export. From the town of Emerson to Port Arthur, for instance, the rate is the same as from Pembina to Duluth. This means that Canadian wheat can be carried to our own markets at very little greater expense than the wheat of the Northwestern States is transported now to the same market. Right in this connection, too, may be noted the expectation of the Canadian farmer of securing favorable freight rates to the American market in case this trade scheme is consummated. Let me quote from the Calgary Telegram, a newspaper published in Alberta. It says:

LOWER FREIGHT FOR CANADA.

One important result of this agreement that may be expected is a reduction of grain-carrying rates. With the free entry of Canadian grains into the United States, the American transportation companies will make a determined effort to secure Canada's grain trade, and lively competition will ensue between the carrying companies. That the farmers of Canada will benefit by cheaper freight rates is sure.

President Taft, in his message to Congress, in reference to the agreement, indicates that in addition to the tariff agreement an adjustment of railway rates is in progress.

An equitable arrangement—

He says—

has recently been reached between our Interstate Commerce Commission and the similar body in Canada in regard to through rates on the transportation lines between the two countries.

The damage to our agricultural interests if the Canadian farmer is permitted to dump his vast surplus into our home market and glut it with high-grade milling wheat, it is estimated by men who know the situation, will exceed $50,000,000 a year to the farmers of the three States of Minnesota, North and South Dakota alone.

But how about our other wheat-raising States? It is true that these three States in the Northwest produce the bulk of our hard milling wheat—the kind of wheat which is raised by the Canadian farmer. These States, therefore, must suffer most severely from the Canadian competition, if the tariff wall is thrown down. There are, however, States to the south that raise millions of bushels of soft wheat. In 1910 our principal winter-wheat States produced the following amounts:

	Bushels.
Kansas	61,060,000
Indiana	40,981,000
Illinois	31,500,000
Missouri	25,130,000
Michigan	15,642,000
Washington	13,858,000
New York	10,523,000

Our millers use large quantities of this southern wheat to mix with the hard northern wheat in making flour. Minneapolis, the flour-milling center of this country, used this southern wheat in the following amounts:

	Bushels.	Cars.
1906	3,497,020	8,390
1907	11,860,680	11,130
1908	18,364,490	16,839
1909	4,681,520	4,337
1910	11,601,650	10,157

Where did this wheat come from? Most of it from Nebraska, Kansas, and Oklahoma. And these figures do not include 900 cars shipped to Duluth and large quantities milled at Winona, Red Wing, Waterville, New Prague, and Mankato.

Now, what will happen if the fine, hard milling wheat of Canada is admitted free? The mills will be given a surplus of the superior grade, the northern wheat of Canada, combined with the northern wheat of the Northwestern States, will so glut the local market that the demand for the southern wheat will fall off. In fact, from the best information available, it is certain that the southern wheat will be excluded from the mills, except at a very low price. The destruction of the home market by Canadian competition will extend far beyond the boundaries of the hard-wheat producing States of the Northwest. The injury to wheat raisers will be general.

With free trade our bins will be filled with Canadian wheat. The Canadian wheat raiser will find at his door a market that is now 10 cents a bushel higher than his own. He will be on practically an even footing with his competitor in the Northwest in transporting his wheat to market—if, indeed, he does not gain a direct advantage.

He will be able to produce his wheat at lower cost than the American farmer, with a yield much greater per acre than that of his American competitor.

He will find just as great a demand for his wheat as there is for the wheat of our northwestern farmers.

The English tariff commission report says of this proposed pact, "Canada's opportunities are especially marked in the case of wheat."

There can be but one result. Our splendid home market for wheat will be utterly destroyed. Our higher level of prices will be forced down to or nearly to the level of prices in Canada. Vast quantities of our southern wheat must seek new markets and accept a lower price. Even if Canada should continue to export her wheat elsewhere under free trade, the free access to that vast supply will enable our millers to force down and keep down the prices they pay to our farmers.

No other conclusion is possible. The facts can not be controverted. The ratification of the President's bargain with Canada will work untold damage to our wheat farmers, with no benefit to the consuming public.

BENEFITS TO MILLERS.

The benefit to the milling interests—the large flour-manufacturing concerns centering in Minneapolis—is recognized and publicly stated by the President. In his speech at Chicago on June 3, 1911, President Taft said:

Canadian wheat nets perhaps 10 cents less a bushel to the producer than wheat grown in the Dakotas or in Minnesota, due to the fact that the cost of exporting that wheat and warehousing it and transporting it to Liverpool is considerably greater than the cost to the Dakota farmer of disposing of his wheat to the millers of Minneapolis and other places. It can and will be made into flour, because the capacity of the American mills is 33 per cent greater than is needed to mill the wheat of this country.

There you have it. But mark this: The miller is especially eager to get free access to the Canadian wheat because of its unusually high quality as a milling wheat. He wants quantity, to be sure, but he looks also to quality. Canada raises a wheat that ranks as high as, and even higher than, the best wheat grown in the Northwestern States for making flour. Our millers may buy their superior Canadian wheat at a much lower figure than they are now paying the American wheat raiser for his superior grades and yet have a greater proportion of flour per unit and a less proportion of bran.

As the demand for flour has increased much faster than the production of wheat, these large mills have demanded more and more of the quality grown in the great wheat-raising States of the Northwest. For this reason Minneapolis has ceased to be an exporter of wheat.

For reasons which I have already stated the wheat of Canada will pour into our markets. And as this golden stream flows across the border, filling up our elevators, the milling interests will find their business expanding and their profits increasing. The center of the milling industry of this country—Minneapolis—might also be said to be a milling center for Canada, so near is it to the Canadian wheat fields, with their enormous supply of fine hard wheat waiting to be put through our mills just the moment the tariff wall is torn down. No wonder the milling interests are back of this pact.

Not content, Mr. President, with opening up to the milling interests free access to this cheap supply of good wheat, the framers of this pact went further. They actually increased the protection of the American miller against his Canadian competitor over that given him in the Payne-Aldrich law. That, Mr. President, is a feature of this deal that I will take up in a moment.

It is possible for our mills, with their enormous capacity, to handle practically every bushel of Canada's surplus.

From Senate Document 862, I quote the following:

The flour mills of the United States have ample capacity to convert into finished products not only the entire wheat crop of the United States, but all the wheat that Canada now raises or may produce for many years to come, were the wheat available for our mills.

And in the same document I find:

Few realize the extent of the American flour and cereal-milling industry. The capital therein invested is exceeded by only one line of manufacturing in the United States. Our merchant mills are found in more than 30 States. The capital employed in building and operating them exceeds $600,000,000, and their annual output approximates this great sum. The value of their exports of flour and grain products exceeds the value of all the rest of the mills of the world.

It is this great interest, Mr. President, that the President proposes to benefit in his pact by increasing protection on the flour they make and putting on the free list the wheat they use. Our farmer who grows the wheat now ground into flour in these mills is asked to accept lower prices for his wheat in order that this concession may be granted to the millers. Is this reciprocity?

BARLEY.

There is a tariff of 30 cents a bushel on barley coming into the United States from Canada. Since this tariff was fixed in 1897, the imports of Canadian barley have gradually decreased from 124,768 bushels in 1898 to a mere handful of 2,420 bushels in 1909. We have sent to Canada, under a tariff of 15 cents a bushel, a great deal more than we have received, the amount in 1909 being 115,932 bushels.

In 10 years, under the stimulus of the missionary work of the Department of Agriculture and a strong demand from maltsters, our farmers have increased their production from 73,382,000 to 162,227,000 bushels. From 1900 to 1909 the Canadian farmer increased his production of barley from 20,322,666 bushels to 48,810,685 bushels; and the acreage directed to this crop increased 10 per cent for all Canada, 72 per cent for Saskatchewan alone, and 253 per cent for Alberta alone.

Barley is used chiefly for stock feeding and for making the malt used in beer. Our best malting barleys are grown in the West. Prior to the tariff act of 1897 New York was the principal malt-manufacturing State. Her domestic barley was mixed with the high-grade barley of Ontario. After 1897 the Canadian barley supply was cut off. Buffalo's malting industry declined. Chicago, Minneapolis, and Milwaukee became the chief malt centers.

The Buffalo brewers and maltsters especially favor this bill for the plain and selfish reason that it will open up to them again the barley fields of Ontario. But they know it would seriously cripple our barley production. It would undo all the patient work of years. Why? The Canadian farmer grows an average of 24.62 bushels per acre; the American farmer, 22.4 bushels. The price paid for barley in our markets is so much higher than it is in Canada that, under free trade, every surplus bushel would be lured across the line into our markets. The average difference for the present crop season between the Winnipeg price and the Minneapolis price has been approximately 28 cents a bushel. From 1900 to 1909 the Chicago price ranged from 1 cent to 46 cents above the Winnipeg price. Half of this time the difference in Chicago's favor was over 13 cents a bushel. During the same period the Minneapolis and Milwaukee price ranged from 5½ cents below to 32½ cents above the Toronto price.

Tear down the tariff protection to our barley grower and Canada's barley would flow across the border in increasing quantities, attracted by the higher price and ready market. Here, too, as in the case of wheat, the home market fostered and developed through the years is to be demolished at a stroke. And with nothing given in return to compensate the American farmer.

In dollars and cents alone the damage that will result to the barley growers of the five States of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, North Dakota, and South Dakota is estimated by an experienced farmer at not less than $20,000,000 to $25,000,000.

Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh, in an interview published in Chicago April 4 last, said:

Canada is better adapted for raising barley than most of our own agricultural sections, and it is possible that American farmers can not compete with the Canadian in raising that product without tariff protection—

Mind you, the Secretary is urging the President's pact upon the people of the Middle West—

In that case the American soil can be profitably used for other products, for which there is plenty of demand.

There you are. This agreement will drive the American barley grower out of business. But what of it? Let him turn to something else. It matters not to the administration. Let in the Canadian wheat and the Canadian barley. Compel the American farmer to use his fields for some other crops. It may not be best for the farmer, or best for his land, but he must submit.

The representatives of the highly protected industries of the East and the Democratic Party have joined with the administration to wipe out important agricultural industries for the benefit of Canada and a few big American interests.

FLAXSEED.

The duty on Canadian flaxseed entering this country is 25 cents a bushel. In 1910 the farmers of our principal flax-growing States—Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, and Montana—produced 14,116,000 bushels. Over in Canada the Provinces of Prince Edward Island, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta produced 3,802,000. Thus, in spite of the heavy tariff, Canada sent us nearly half of this supply.

The Canadian farmer finds it possible to grow nearly double the crop per acre produced by our farmer. The average yield per acre for the four Provinces I have just named is, according to the report of the President's tariff board, 7.97 bushels, while on our side it is but 4.8 bushels. We pay our farmer an average farm price of $2.30 per bushel, while the Canadian farmer gets an average farm price of $2.07 per bushel. Flaxseed sold last December at Portal, Canada, for $1.89 per bushel, and on the American side for $2.34.

Take the tariff off entirely and what incentive will there be for our farmers to continue growing flaxseed? The border States of the Northwest will be put into direct competition with the border Provinces of Canada with the better price on the American side, and the yield per acre greater on the Canadian side.

Mr. J. M. Devine, a farmer, testified before the Finance Committee:

Ten years ago the farmers of Canada raised no flax worth mentioning. They are now raising from 5,000,000 to 7,000,000 bushels, and will increase this output a hundred per cent within the next two years if this agreement goes through. The passage of the agreement means that the time-honored dikes are to be removed and Canada's surplus permitted to roll over. * * * I want to tell you about flax. Flax is what we call out West a poor man's crop, and I will tell you why. Very few farmers who have come to North Dakota, and very few farmers go to Canada, who have any great amount of ready cash, and they are fortunate if they have their stock and machinery. They immediately begin to break for flax in the spring, and sow flax on top of the breaking as fast as the breaking proceeds. This enables them to get in from 70 to 100 acres the first year they are on the land, and in that way getting ready cash the first year to purchase the things needed for the winter and placing them in a position to go on with the work of developing the farm the next year.

Senator WILLIAMS. Is the price of flax ordinarily controlled by the Liverpool market?

Mr. DEVINE. No, sir; and for the reason that there is no Liverpool market in this case.

The American farmer's home market is a better one than that of his Canadian competitor. Leaving out of consideration the greater yield per acre in Canada, and the lower cost of production, the advantage enjoyed by our farmer in his home market may be roughly measured by the amount of the tariff. This will be sacrificed if the proposed agreement passes. The American flax grower is called upon to pay the price of a free Canadian supply for the Linseed Oil Trust.

HAY.

The tariff on hay entering this country from Canada is $4 per ton, while our farmer has to pay only $2 on a ton to ship his hay across the border. Yet in 1910 there came into the United States 96,507 tons of Canadian hay. We sent to Canada only 7,680 tons. There is a better market in the United States. The single fact that the Canadian farmer brings in his hay and sells it here presumably at a profit, after paying $4 duty on each ton, shows that to be true.

The total production of hay in the United States in 1910, according to the President's Tariff Board report, was 50,978,000 tons, with a yield per acre of 1.33 tons and a farm price per ton of $12.26. In Canada the total production was 15,497,000 tons, with an average yield per acre of 1.82 tons and a farm price per ton of $9.66.

Ex-Gov. F. M. Warner, of Michigan, stated to the Finance Committee (p. 288):

I believe, personally, that there will be a midway ground somewhere; that we will not go to the point of Canada's price or Canada up to ours, but somewhere between the two we will meet. The same thing, of course, is true of the hay market. Michigan is interested greatly in the production of hay. I know that our places sold three carloads of hay last year, and in talking with one of the largest dealers of Detroit—in fact, of Wayne County—he told me that two-thirds of the hay he sold last year was from Canada, and the Canadian farmer paid $4 duty. It can not help but make a difference in the price.

In the case of hay, also, the benefits of a home market will be lost.

The contention is made in support of this bill that the costs of production are substantially the same in Canada and the United States. This I have clearly demonstrated is not true. But they say the differences are not greater between the two countries than between different States of the Union or different Provinces of the Dominion. Assume that this be true, and it proves nothing. Our consideration of this agreement demands that we take each country as a whole. Conditions differ among our States, but there is absolutely free trade among them in manufactured articles and all other articles of commerce, as well as farm products. Conditions differ among the Provinces, to be sure, but there is not a particle of discrimination in the commerce among them against farm products and in favor of trust goods. The situation in the interior of each country, where all States and Provinces are alike under the same Government, working toward the same end, and subscribing to the same trade and political policies, is not analogous to the situation existing between the two countries. We can not separate this attempted revision of the tariff from the fact that all relations between Canada and the United States are the subject of national dealing and adjustment.

President Taft himself, in his message to Congress of January 26 submitting this agreement, says:

My purpose in making a reciprocal treaty agreement with Canada has been not only to obtain one which would be mutually advantageous to both countries, but one which also would be truly national in its scope as applied to our own country and would be of benefit to all sections.

We must compare, then, the conditions existing in these two countries in a broad way, taking the United States as a unit and Canada as a unit. What do we find? We find that in Canada land is cheaper than in the United States. Taking for our present purposes the figures prepared by the President's Tariff Board, we find that the average value per acre of improved land in 1910 for the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin, Michigan, and Minnesota is $57 an acre, while over across the border in the Provinces of British Columbia, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Ontario, Prince Edward Island, Quebec, Saskatchewan, and Alberta it is only $36 per acre. The average price which the Minnesota farmer must pay for his land is $46, while he can move over into Manitoba and buy land for $29 per acre, or into Saskatchewan and get it for $22. The farmers of Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, and other top-notch agricultural States in this country must pay a very much higher price than in any of the Provinces of Canada. In Illinois, for example, the average value is $108 an acre; in Iowa, $109 an acre. Furthermore, the vast stretches of virgin agricultural and grazing lands in western Canada are being sold by railroads to settlers at the remarkably low price of $3 an acre. From a handbook published by the Canadian Pacific Railway, entitled "Western Canada," I take the following:

The Manitoba and Saskatchewan lands are for sale at the various agencies of the company in those Provinces at prices ranging from $8 to $28 an acre, and even at this low price settlers may pay for land not exceeding 640 acres by the installment plan on the most liberal terms.

From another pamphlet published by the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. I quote the following:

Lands suitable for agricultural purposes or hay and meadow lands or uncleared timber lands suitable for agriculture may be bought for $5 an acre and upward; lands which are suitable for agricultural purposes only when irrigated, $2.50 per acre to $5. Other lands suitable only as ranch land can be purchased for $1 to $2.50 per acre.

Is this cheap land to be pitted against our high-price land, with the advantage entirely on the side of the Canadian farmer?

And so with labor. The President's Tariff Board reports that the average wage paid to agricultural laborers, with board, in the States of Maine, New York, Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota, Iowa, Ohio, Vermont, Montana, Washington, and Missouri is as follows:

	Per month.
When hired by the season	$28.71
When hired by the year	24.69

Across the border, in the Provinces of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, and British Columbia, the wage paid to agricultural laborers, with board, is:

	Per month.
When hired by the season	$22.73
When hired by the year	15.44

I need cite no further statistics in proof of the material difference in the wages paid to farm labor in the two countries. The Canadian farmer hires his help a great deal cheaper than does the American farmer.

For example, the Wisconsin farmer has to pay $29.25 a month for a farm hand. An Ontario farmer, for the same labor, would pay but $21.52. Winter hands with bed and board per month may be secured in Manitoba for $13.79, as compared with $20.56 per month in North Dakota or $19.72 in Minnesota. While the figures given by the Tariff Board for the western Provinces of Canada show less difference between the wages paid to farm laborers in the two countries, still the advantage is all on the side of the Canadian farmer.

The Tariff Board reports that the average yearly wage paid to farm help with bed and board in the State of Minnesota is $334; in North Dakota, $350; while for the same class of help in Manitoba and Saskatchewan they show the average yearly wage to be: In the case of Manitoba, from $225 to $300, and in Saskatchewan from $250 to $300. Mark this, too, that these Canadian figures are specified as for "experienced" labor; while for Minnesota and North Dakota all labor is included.

With these advantages of cheap land and cheap labor the Canadian farmer finds at home a cheaper market for what he produces than that splendid market in our country that is to be open to him if this bill becomes a law.

The Canadian farmer must sell his wheat for 10 cents a bushel less than his American competitor. The Canadian farmer, on the average, receives $9.66 a ton for hay. The American farmer, on the average, receives $12.26 a ton for the same product. The Canadian farmer gets $2.07 a bushel for his flaxseed, while our farmer receives $2.30 a bushel. The Canadian farmer must accept 47 cents a bushel for barley, while our farmer gets 57 cents a bushel; and, as a matter of fact, it is not unusual for the American farmer to get from 25 to 46 cents a bushel more for his barley than the Canadian farmer. The figures submitted by the administration show that the Canadian farmer receives between $4 and $5 a hundredweight for his beef cattle, while our farmer receives more than $6 a hundredweight. The Canadian farmer receives for his sheep about $4 per hundredweight, while our farmer gets over $5 per hundredweight.

For his poultry, both dressed and alive, the Canadian farmer gets prices ranging, on the whole, lower than the American farmer. For his eggs the Canadian farmer receives, approximately, 23 cents a dozen; the American farmer an average of more than 30 cents a dozen.

Is our home market to be thrown wide open to the Canadian farmer? Is our farmer to divide his dearly earned advantages with his Canadian competitor by an arrangement that gives him no compensating benefits to enable him to withstand this competition without irreparable damage?

Now, with these advantages of cheaper land, cheaper labor, cheaper feed, and with land, too, that produces a greater yield per acre than the average in this country (wheat—Canada 15.53, United States 11.7; barley—Canada 24.62, United States 22.4; oats—Canada 32.79, United States 31.9; hay—Canada 1.82, United States 1.33; flaxseed—Canada 7.97, United States 4.8) and on top of that a much higher price in our market for his wheat, his barley, his beef, his mutton, can anyone doubt the result? Then Canadian products will divide the American market and the profits of the American farmer. As a matter of fact, this bill of the President's is designed to that very end. He says in his message to Congress of January 26:

> That the broadening of the sources of food supply * * * that the addition to the supply of raw materials will be limited to no particular section does not require demonstration.

But think of the position of the American farmer under such an arrangement! His first and most serious injury will come, of course, from the lowering of prices due to the glutting of his home market with the products of the Canadian farmer. Then will come the time when a common price level has been established for the products of the two countries, and the American farmer will find himself forced to sell his products for the same price as that received by the Canadian farmer; while the latter has all the advantages of virgin agricultural land, cheaper cost of production, and at least as favorable transportation facilities and rates.

And this is done without a single compensating advantage to the American farmer. This bill provides no concession or offset for the damage to the farmer sure to follow the free importation of farm products from Canada. His struggle will grow harder, instead of easier, as time passes. His situation will not be at all unlike that of the New England farmer when the vast agricultural empire of the western United States was opened and developed, nor will it be at all unlike that of the farmer of eastern Canada, now that the vast prairies of the western Provinces are coming under the plow and being made to feed meat animals. The farmer is made the scapegoat. And for what? For a deal with Canada that is put forward by the administration for the declared purpose of cementing still closer the ties of friendship and neighborliness between the Canadian people and the American people, and incidentally to reduce the high cost of living. But if the very laudable desire to cement still closer the relations between Canadians and Americans is to materialize into a breaking down of the tariff wall along the boundary, should we not cement the relations between the Canadian manufacturer and the American trust; the Canadian miller and the American miller; the Canadian packer and the American packer; the Canadian malster and the American malster in the same way that it is now sought to cement the relations between the American farmer and the Canadian farmer? Does not simple justice demand that all industries, all classes, be treated with the same consideration and with the same solicitude? Is there any principle of international amity to sanction a deal to serve up free trade to the farmers and to serve up even higher protection to the manufacturing interests?

And is this deal even to be justified on the ground that it will reduce the high cost of living? Will it benefit the consumer? I contend that it will not. Even the President, who stands almost alone in eager and active support of this agreement among Republican leaders, is moved to say in his message to Congress January 26:

> I do not wish to hold out the prospect that the unrestricted interchange of food products will greatly and at once reduce their cost to the people of this country.

The President's caution is well founded. There is not the slightest prospect of a decrease in the price the consumer must pay for articles enumerated in this agreement. The railroads will still charge the same high rates for transportation; the miller will still charge the same price for his flour; the packer will charge just as much for his meats. Lumber will not be cheaper to the man who wants to build a house. You may put every natural product of Canada upon the free list. You may give all of her natural resources free and easy access to our manufacturing centers, and there is not the slightest assurance that the price at which the manufactured articles are sold will be lowered the fraction of a cent to the American consumer.

The high cost of living in this country, Mr. President, is not due to an excessive price received by the farmer for what he produces. Neither is it due primarily to a shortage of the country's supply of natural products. The main cause is to be found in a monopoly control which has established itself midway between the farmer and the consumer, and buys at its own price from the farmer and sells at its own price to the consumer.

The trusts determine what the farmer shall receive for his products and what the consumer must pay for his supplies. That is the situation to-day in this country, and it will continue to be the situation after this bill is enacted into law. Trust extortion can not be relieved by bestowing upon the trusts the further advantage of free products of the soil. And those few manufactured articles on which the duty is slightly reduced in this bill, will they come to our consumer more cheaply? Will the farmer be able to buy his barbed wire cheaper after the passage of this act? It is absurd to contend that he will, although the President held this out to the farmers of the Middle West as an advantage that would accrue from his deal. Barbed wire! Why, we sent into Canada last year 326,817 hundredweight, and not a pound came into our country from Canada. Free trade in barbed wire will not lessen its cost to our farmer. And so with other articles.

No, Mr. President, this is not the way to reduce the high cost of living. It is not designed to relieve the consumer from the operation of monopoly prices. This bill is rankly unjust to the farmer, does nothing to benefit the consumer, and a great deal for the big interests. That, Mr. President, is not reciprocity. It is not even fair dealing.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to take a little time of the Senate just to call attention to a few increases of duties which this bill makes. I am constrained to believe that in so far as it has any popular support in this country the bill has secured that support upon a misrepresentation. The title of the bill belies its character. It has been misrepresented by the press of the country. I say that, in so far as it has any popular support in this country, it receives that support because it is the belief of the people that the bill will reduce duties for the consumer. I am going to call attention to just a few increases which this bill makes for the benefit of trusts and combinations.

BILL INCREASES PROTECTION FOR THE TRUSTS.

This bill gives to certain manufactured products higher protective duties than does the Payne-Aldrich law. This can be easily demonstrated. I have worked out a few of the increases and present them as examples of the general character of the bill. It actually grants to certain special interests greater protection than they enjoy under the present law.

THE MILLING INTERESTS.

I will first take wheat and its products.

Now, we all know that in all tariff measures we deal with two classes of rates, compensatory and protective. A tariff rate upon raw material is protection to the producer, but not to the manufacturer who transforms it into a finished product. For instance, in the case of wheat: If an American miller buys a thousand bushels of wheat in Canada to make into flour, he must pay the duty of 25 cents a bushel when he brings that wheat into the United States to be ground into flour for the American market. In order to save him from absolute loss in such a transaction and place him on an equal footing with the Canadian miller, it is the theory of protection that the duty upon flour shall be high enough, first, to offset or compensate the miller for the amount of duty paid upon the wheat, or 25 cents per bushel, with an added amount of duty sufficient to measure the difference in the cost of milling. The first duty is called compensatory; the second, protection.

Four and one-half bushels of wheat will, on the average, produce 1 barrel of flour and 70 pounds of bran and middlings.

The present tariff upon wheat is 25 cents per bushel. The duty on 4½ bushels of wheat would, therefore, be $1.13.

The present tariff upon a barrel of flour is 25 per cent ad valorem. According to the Government publication, Commerce and Navigation, the average value of flour imported into this country from Canada in 1909 was $4.80 and the duty paid was $1.20 per barrel. The average value of bran and middlings was $20 per ton and the present tariff is 20 per cent ad valorem, or $4 per ton.

Now, taking out 4½ bushels of wheat, if imported as such, the duty under the present law would be $1.13. The tariff upon the manufactured product would be $1.20 upon the barrel of flour and 14 cents upon the 70 pounds of bran and middlings; or $1.34. Of this $1.34, $1.13 is the compensatory duty upon the 4½ bushels of wheat which has been used, leaving, under the present law, a protective duty to the miller of 21 cents a barrel upon his flour and his 70 pounds of bran and middlings.

Now, let us see what this bill does. Wheat is made free, so there are no compensatory rates to be considered; they are all protective. Upon his barrel of flour he is given a duty of 50 cents, and upon bran he is given a duty of 12½ cents per 100 pounds, which, upon the 70 pounds manufactured out of the 4½ bushels of wheat, amounts to 8¾ cents, or a total protective duty of 58¾ cents under this bill as against 21 cents under the Payne-Aldrich law, an increase of 180 per cent.

I will next take beef. Beef on the hoof will produce from 55 to 60 per cent of dressed beef.

A steer weighing 1,400 pounds will produce dressed beef to the amount of 800 pounds.

Now, just an illustration: Assume that a 1,400-pound live steer is worth 2½ cents a pound. It does not make any difference how you figure it, but assume it is worth that.

The tariff under the present law would be 27½ per cent ad valorem, or $9.63. If imported in the form of dressed beef, the tariff under the present law is 1½ cents per pound, or $12. Of this $12, $9.63 is the compensatory duty, leaving $2.37 as the protective duty to the packer. This, by the way, covers more than the entire cost of converting the steer into dressed beef. But what do we find in the bill? Cattle are free, so there is no compensatory duty to be considered. The bill proposes a duty of 1¼ cents per pound on the dressed beef, and in the case of the 800 pounds of beef produced from the steer the tariff will be $10, all protection, against $2.37 under the present law. This is an increase to the packer of 322 per cent over what he has in the Payne-Aldrich law.

Now, consider flaxseed and its product, linseed oil:

One bushel of flaxseed will produce from 2.18 to 2.87 gallons of linseed oil. It is usually estimated that 1 bushel of seed will produce 2½ gallons of oil.

Under the Payne-Aldrich law the tariff upon a bushel of flaxseed is 25 cents. The tariff upon linseed oil is 15 cents per gallon. Therefore if 1,000 bushels of flax is imported from Canada in its original state the duty will be $250. If imported as oil, there will be 2,500 gallons, and the duty will be $375. Of this $375, $250 is the compensatory duty, leaving $125 as the protection to the manufacturer.

Under this bill flaxseed is to be admitted free, so there is no compensatory duty to be considered. There is no change, however, in the tariff upon linseed oil. It will still remain at 15 cents per gallon. The 2,500 gallons of oil imported from Canada will still pay a duty of $375, all protective to the manufacturer, as against $125 protection under the Payne-Aldrich law, an increase of exactly 300 per cent.

Next, observe what this bill does for the brewer. Apply this test to barley and its chief product—barley malt.

According to Wohl's American Handbook on Brewing and Malting, 1 bushel of barley will produce from 1⅛ to 1¼ bushels of malt. For the purpose of my illustration I will take the average, 1⅛ bushels of malt for each bushel of barley.

Under the Payne-Aldrich law the duty on barley is 30 cents per bushel and the duty on barley malt is 45 cents per bushel. If 1,000 bushels of barley are imported from Canada the duty will be, under the Payne-Aldrich law, 30 cents per bushel, or $300. If manufactured into malt there would be 1,200 bushels produced out of 1,000 bushels of barley, and the tariff rate would be 45 cents per bushel, or $540. Of this $540, $300 is the compensatory duty upon the barley, leaving $140 as protection to the malster.

Under the proposed bill barley is free, so there is no compensatory duty to be considered. The rate proposed upon malt is 45 cents per hundred pounds instead of 45 cents per bushel. A bushel of malt weighs 33 pounds, so the weight of the 1,200 bushels of malt would be 39,600 pounds and the duty under this bill would be $178.20, all protective, as against the protective duty of $140 under the Payne-Aldrich law, an increase of 27 per cent.

Mr. President, it is perfectly consistent for this administration to support a bill which is to be of such great advantage to trusts and monopolies.

It is in perfect agreement, I think, with the whole course of the administration on tariff legislation, on railway-rate legislation, and every other phase of legislation that has come before the Senate since March 4, 1909.

But what shall be said of the Democratic advocacy of such special-interest measure?

The Democratic Party in national conventions has declared against every principle contained in this bill.

The platform of 1892 contained the following plank:

> Trade interchange on the basis of reciprocal advantage to the countries participating is a time-honored doctrine of the Democratic faith, but we denounce the sham reciprocity which juggles with the people's desire for enlarged foreign markets and free exchanges by pretending to establish closer trade relations for a country whose articles of export are almost exclusively agricultural products with other countries that are also agricultural, while enacting a customhouse barrier of prohibitive tariff taxes against the richest countries of the world that stand ready to take our entire surplus of products and to exchange therefor commodities which are necessaries and comforts of life among our own people.

This condemnation applies to every line and every letter of this bill. Indeed, had this very bill been under consideration at that time, and the Democratic Party proposed to condemn it, it is difficult to conceive how any different or stronger language could have been employed in doing so.

The bill can not be defended from the standpoint of the last platform of the party.

First. The Democratic Party claims to stand for a tariff for revenue only. It claims that the tariff is a tax paid by the American consumer; that whenever a tariff is levied upon competitive products the consumer pays the foreign price, plus the duty not only upon the imported products, but also upon every similar article of domestic production that he buys. It follows that every tariff for revenue only is also a protective tariff to the extent of the duties laid. As a part of the Democratic doctrine of tariff for revenue only there has always accompanied it the declaration that duties should be levied without discrimination against any American interest.

Therefore any tariff bill laying tariff duties for revenue only, in so far as competitive products are concerned, being protective also to that extent, should be levied without discrimination. A tariff bill which levies duties upon the products of monopolies and fails to lay any tariffs upon articles of domestic production not controlled by monopoly discriminates in favor of the monopoly.

In the Democratic platform of 1908 this condition was recognized, and it was sought to avoid it by the following declaration and promise:

> We favor immediate revision of the tariff by the reduction of import duties. Articles entering into competition with trust-controlled products should be placed upon the free list, and material reductions should be made in the tariff upon the necessaries of life, especially upon articles competing with such American manufactures as are sold abroad more cheaply than at home; and gradual reductions should be made in such other schedules as may be necessary to restore the tariff to a revenue basis.

How does this reciprocity bill square with that promise? Instead of material reductions being made upon the products of the farm, they are made absolutely free; and instead of trust-controlled products being made free, they are afforded a higher protection than they enjoy under the Payne-Aldrich law.

The Democratic promise is that trust-controlled articles should be placed upon the free list. And yet in this very bill, supported by the almost solid Democratic vote in this Senate, we find high protective duties for the Steel Trust, the Beef Trust, the Biscuit Trust, the Agricultural Implement Trust, the Coal Trust, the Glass Trust, and the Oil Trust.

Every Democrat who votes for this bill violates two solemn promises of his party—

1. That trust-controlled articles should be placed upon the free list.

2. That material reductions should be made in necessaries of life.

The framers of that platform no doubt had in mind the farmers of this country in the promise as to material reduction in necessaries of life. It is to be presumed they recognized that so long as a tariff upon competitive products was necessary a benefit to the producer of these products followed, and that to deny to the farmer the benefits following a tariff for revenue only would be a discrimination against him.

Mr. President, I refuse to support this bill, because it is unjust.

You who support it admit privately that it is unjust to the farmer; that it does nothing for the consumer; that it will increase the profits of the trusts and combinations, the real beneficiaries of whatever tariff reductions it makes.

But you say, "It is a step in the right direction," because it takes off all the tariff duties from some products.

I say it is a step in the wrong direction.

Your first step results in still greater tariff oppression. You should not begin tariff reductions with the farm products embraced in this Canadian agreement, the average duties on which have never been the subject of complaint by any consumer in the country.

The farmer's profits are small. Considering his increased cost of living and the increased cost of farming, they are smaller than they were 25 years ago. All realize the truth of the statement of President Roosevelt in his letter appointing the Country Life Commission that the farmer's "increase in well-being has not kept pace with that of the country as a whole," and his words at the semicentennial of the founding of agricultural colleges in the United States:

> There is but one person whose welfare is as vital to the welfare of the whole country as is that of the wage-worker who does manual labor, and that is the tiller of the soil—the farmer. If there is one lesson taught by history, it is that the permanent greatness of any State must ultimately depend more upon the character of its country population than upon anything else. No growth of cities, no growth of wealth can make up for loss in either the number or the character of the farming population.

The manufacturers, the commission men, the millers, the elevator men, the packers, all take their profits out of the farmer's products before they reach the consumer.

No, Mr. President, the step should be taken in the opposite direction. Tariff reductions should begin with the excessive duties on manufactured products. That is the place to begin. That is where the real burden is to be found. That is where you can relieve the consumer.

Who are the supporters of the Canadian agreement in Congress? The Democrats, who believe in abolishing all protective duties, and the representatives of the great manufacturing interests who believe in maintaining a tariff wall high enough to prohibit any competition from abroad. That, Mr. President, is the combination which insures the enactment of this Canadian agreement into law.

When you begin with a removal of the duties on the products of agriculture and leave the high rates on manufactures you increase the weight of the tariff burden on 33,000,000 people, because you make them divide their market with Canada, and thereby reduce their ability to bear the excessive burden on manufactured products, which you leave untouched.

I will not join you in doing this great harm to agriculture. We have to pay the penalty for every wrong committed. So surely as the leaves fall and the winter follows, you will have to settle for your share in this injustice to the American farmer.

It is not alone the farmers of Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, and the great Northwest who will suffer, but agriculture everywhere—the East and South as well as the North and West will feel the added burden. The farmers of the East remember that the rapid development of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, indeed, all of that area known as the "Old Northwest," resulted in abandoned farms and deserted homes throughout New England and much of the East.

They know that this legislation means the same thing to farmers on all the grain-growing, stock-raising lands in America which have been tilled a generation or more—to annex the production of all that vast area of rich and virgin lands in Canada, extending for fifteen hundred miles to the northwest beyond the boundary, every foot of it the best and cheapest wheat land in all the world.

The New England farmer accepted with patriotic resignation the depression of his markets by the cheaper production of his American competitor in the upper Mississippi River Valley. It was hard to endure, but the competition was within his own country, and the loss to his section was the gain to another portion of his own country—the gain of men of his own blood, many of them his own kith and kin, who were adding to the wealth of the Nation, supporting our own Government, maintaining by taxation our educational system.

The Canadian farmer has cheap land, Mr. President. The Canadian Government gives him concessions in the nature of bounties. Through its low preferential duties to Great Britain, it gives the Canadian farmer a cheap market in which to buy his manufactured goods. Even the American manufacturer has always sold his manufactures at a lower price in Canada than to our own people; and now President Taft proposes an agreement with Canada by the terms of which the Canadian farmer can sell his products in the American market and take his money home and buy his supplies in the low-priced Canadian market, while the American farmer must meet this competition on what he sells and must buy his manufactures under the high protection duties of the Payne-Aldrich law.

Mr. President, agriculture has never had its fair share. The farmer has been made the pack horse in the march of our national progress.

On the other hand, with the protecting arm of the Government about them for a hundred years, the manufacturing industries have been made masters of our markets by legislation.

Granted a kingdom out of the public domain, the railroad, a natural monopoly, has been allowed to take toll without limit from the commerce of the country.

And the banking interests have never had to cool their heels in the outer corridors of the National Capitol while waiting to reach an early and satisfactory understanding with Congress as to what they wanted.

But agriculture—let Prof. Bailey, of the New York State Agricultural College; Henry Wallace, of the Iowa Farmer; President Butterfield, of the Massachusetts Agricultural College; Gifford Pinchot; Walter H. Page, of the World's Work; C. S. Barrett, of Georgia; and W. A. Beard, of California, constituting the Roosevelt Country Life Commission—let them speak for the farmer. I quote from their report:

> Notwithstanding an almost universal recognition of the importance of agriculture to the maintenance of our people, there is, nevertheless, a widespread disregard of the rights of the men who own and work the land. * * * Agriculture is not commercially as profitable as it is entitled to be for the labor and energy which the farmer expends and the risks that he assumes. * * * The farmer is almost necessarily handicapped in the development of his business because his capital is small and the volume of his transactions limited, and he usually stands practically alone against organized interests.

In his letter naming the Country Life Commission, President Roosevelt said:

> No nation has ever achieved permanent greatness unless this greatness was based on the well-being of the great farmer class, the men who live on the soil; for it is upon their welfare, material and moral, that the welfare of the rest of the nation ultimately rests.

In its report the Country Life Commission said:

> We need, in the first place, as a people, to recognize the necessary rights of the individual farmer to the use of the native resources and agencies that go with the utilization of agricultural lands and to protect him from hindrance and encroachment in the normal development of his business. If the farmer suffers because his business is small, isolated, and unsyndicated, then it is the part of government to see that he has a natural opportunity among his fellows and a square deal.

You Democrats have joined with the President and the standpat high-tariff Republicans to strike the farmer the first blow.

You Democrats have always contended that the farmer's duties did not enhance the price of agricultural products. Then why single him out for the first assault? He has never abused the small protection given him by forming unlawful combinations to enhance prices. Then why, I ask, do you Democrats unite with the Taft administration to make the farmer suffer the first cut?

You do not stop with a cut in his duties. You push him clear to the wall. You are more tender and considerate of the Woolen Trust than the farmer. You merely threaten woolen manufactures with reductions in duties. You cut the farmer to the bone at one slash.

You wipe out his duties altogether. You subject him to free-trade competition with his most dangerous competitor.

You can not claim that his duties do him no good, and hence that you are depriving him of nothing. You know better.

The testimony is overwhelming that the duties upon farm products are protective as against similar products from Canada. That is why Canada wants free admission to our markets of farm products. That is the trading stock on which the President negotiated this agreement.

If direct evidence were needed to prove the value of these protective duties to the American farmer, it is at hand.

Randolph A. Wilkinson, a farmer of Minnesota, testified to the fact:

> That the Duluth market has averaged from 5 to 15 cents per bushel during that five years more for our No. 1 northern wheat in Duluth than the Canadian No. 1 northern has brought in Port Arthur.

Mr. W. H. Lyon, of South Dakota, a farmer, testified:

> The average price paid for barley at Portal, N. Dak., on January 9 and 10, 1911, was 63 cents; at North Portal, just over the Canadian line, the price was 35 cents a bushel, a difference in our favor of 28 cents a bushel. At the same time there was an average difference in our favor of about 25 cents a bushel in the price of flax.

R. T. Kingman, of North Dakota, testified as follows:

> It is a fact that we have had and are having to-day a premium on our wheat over Canadian wheat of approximately 10 cents a bushel. Our wheat has averaged in the last six or seven years about 10 cents over the Canadian price.

J. M. Devine, of North Dakota, a farmer, testified as to prices. He also cited Portal prices, because it is a town built on the line dividing our country from Canada, and offers a striking example of the effect of the tariff upon prices:

> Flax was sold at Portal during the month of December on the Canadian side at $1.89, on the American side at $2.34. I might say now, because Portal is a town just beyond where I live, that my barley on the Canadian side sold for 33 cents for that month. On the American side it sold for 65 cents—32 cents difference. Wheat for that month of this year sold on the Canadian side for 74 cents, on the American side for 99 cents—25 cents difference.

But it is unnecessary to cite further testimony upon this point. The report Chairman UNDERWOOD, of the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted to accompany the farmers' free-list bill recognizes the inevitable effect of this lopsided reciprocity bill upon the prices of farm products. I quote the following from that report:

> In the Canadian reciprocity agreement cattle and all other live stock, including swine, sheep, and lambs, and likewise wheat, rye, oats, barley, buckwheat, and corn, are placed on the free list. With the removal of duties on imports of these articles from the only country from which real competition could be expected, our farmers are openly and avowedly placed in a free market as to foodstuffs and food products in the forms in which they leave the farm.

On these crops alone, and limited to the three States of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, if the American farmer's price falls under the competition to the level of the Canadian price, it will mean to the farmers of these three States a loss of not less than $40,000,000 annually.

You who support this sham reciprocity would not think of subjecting manufacturers to the drastic treatment which you administer to agriculture. You would not dare to demoralize the business of this country by plunging at once from high protection to absolute free trade and flooding our markets with low-priced foreign manufactures. You would fear panics, lockouts, bread lines, and labor riots.

But you think the farmer can not abandon his farm; that he must go on producing, no matter how low the price level of his products; that he has always been patient and conservative and slow to strike back.

You think it safe to try it on the farmer, and so you Democrats combine with the President and the standpat Republicans, representing high-tariff manufacturing interests, and remove at one stroke all the protection which the farmer has against his principal competitor.

You will not even consent to amend this bill so as to make it a little more just to the American farmer.

You voted against the Cummins amendment to let in free certain manufactured products from Canada. You voted against the Bristow amendment to attach to this bill reductions in duties on sugar. You voted against the Cummins amendment to reduce duties on the steel schedule 40 per cent. You will vote against my amendment to the woolen schedule reducing the duties 38 per cent. You will vote against the amendment which I shall offer to the cotton schedule reducing the duties 47 per cent. You will vote against every amendment to couple with this Canadian reciprocity proposition tariff reductions which would make it in some degree less hard and less burdensome to American agriculture.

You do it on the pretext that it will jeopardize the bill to adopt these amendments. That, I say, is but a pretext.

You desire the tariff as an issue for the next presidential campaign. It is common talk on this floor between Senators privately that that is what is behind the voting down of the amendments to couple tariff reductions with this proposition. You know that the President would not veto this Canadian reciprocity proposition if the wool bill was attached to it. You know that he has become enamored of this so-called Canadian reciprocity. He is led to believe, after running the entire gamut, that he has struck at last a popular chord. It is the one thing upon which he relies in some measure to restore his administration to favor. He counts upon this bill being accepted in place of the reduction of duties promised in the platform and in the preelection speeches of 1908. Nothing could tempt him to abandon reciprocity. It is not the fear that reciprocity would be defeated if there was attached to this bill a revision downward of the woolen schedule or the cotton schedule or the steel schedule or the sugar schedule or any of those schedules which impose excessive and unjust burdens upon the farmers and all other consumers that has brought about the combination which has and will defeat every amendment, but it is the hope that by so doing the tariff may be kept as a live issue in the campaign of 1912.

But, Mr. President, though it may not be admitted on the record, the farmers of the United States will know what construction to put upon the course taken by the Democratic Party on this floor in voting down these amendments upon a bill that was sure to be approved by the President and thus denying to an overburdened public some relief from the excessive duties imposed by the outrageous Aldrich tariff law.

I say that nothing could tempt the President to abandon reciprocity. It has been accepted by the public because it has been misrepresented to the public as signifying tariff reductions of advantage and benefit to the consumers. It is expected in some quarters, Mr. President, that that idea will continue to prevail long enough to tide over the coming election.

So any apprehension that the President would veto this reciprocity bill if it were amended with the revision of the woolen schedule, for example, added to it is preposterous. You might as well expect a drowning man to relinquish his hold on what he believes to be a life-preserver, even though it shall later prove to be a millstone about his neck.

So, Mr. President, upon the Democratic Party, which contends that it stands for tariff revision, will rest the responsibility of failure to secure it at this session if it votes down the amendments to the reciprocity bill and then, in order to make a record, votes tariff reductions in separate bills, and the President vetoes those measures. You will have to face every day and every hour from that time to the end of the next campaign the responsibility for leaving the tariff burdens upon the American people. You will have it put up to you from every platform that you threw away the opportunity to have coupled with the bill which the administration was bound to approve tariff reductions to take off some of the burdens from the people of this country.

Mr. President, I have consumed more time than I expected, and I apologize to my friend from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].

APPENDIX.

RECIPROCITY.

Reciprocity is another form of tariff revision which has been suggested at various times by various people and by people belonging to various political parties. It was suggested by President Arthur, James G. Blaine, and William McKinley; was put into operation in the McKinley tariff law; was destroyed by the Democratic Wilson-Gorman tariff law; and now the Democratic Party is charging that the Republican Party is not willing to give the country "genuine reciprocity."

There are two distinct kinds of legislation which have been designated as reciprocity legislation. The first of these was enacted by the Democratic Party in 1854, taking effect in 1855. It was reciprocity with Canada, and provided that certain articles, the growth or produce of Canada or the United States, should be admitted into each country, respectively, free of duty. These were articles of common production in the two countries, and included grain, flour, animals of all kinds, fresh, smoked, and salted meats, cotton, seeds, vegetables, fruits, fish, poultry, eggs, hides, furs, stone, slate, butter, cheese, tallow, lard, ores, coal, pitch, turpentine, ashes, timber, lumber, flax, hemp, tobacco, and rags. These were all, with the single exception of cotton, articles of mutual production, and Democratic reciprocity simply provided for free trade in these competing articles. Under that treaty, which went into effect March 16, 1855, and terminated March 17, 1866, exports from the United States to Canada fell from $27,741,808 in the fiscal year 1855 to $23,439,115 in the fiscal year 1866, a reduction in our exports to Canada of over $4,000,000 during this period of Democratic reciprocity, while imports into the United States from Canada increased from $15,118,289 in 1855 to $48,133,599 in 1866, an increase of $33,000,000. In our trade with all other countries during that same period our imports increased 60 per cent while those from Canada were increasing 220 per cent, and our exports to all other countries increased 70 per cent while those to Canada under this reciprocity were decreasing 15 per cent. It was simply free trade in articles of common production and with no barrier to protect the domestic producer—the result being a much greater increase in our imports from Canada than in those from other countries, and a decrease of exports to that country, while to other countries exports were increasing.

A later form of reciprocity with which the country has had experience is illustrated by the plan formulated in the McKinley tariff law and expressed by William McKinley in his much-quoted speech at Buffalo, in which he said: "By sensible trade arrangements, which will not interrupt our home production we shall extend the outlets for our increasing surplus. * * * We should take from our customers such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor. * * * If perchance some of our tariffs are no longer needed for revenue or to encourage and protect our industries at home, why should they not be employed to extend and promote our markets abroad?"

To purchase from our neighbor "such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor"; in other words, such of their products as are not produced by our own labor, and obtain in exchange markets for the class of merchandise which we desire to sell and which the countries in question require for their own use, differs materially from the reciprocity of 1855–6, which was merely free trade in articles of mutual production, articles which when imported compete with the home producer. The chief classes of products which we do not produce in the United States are tropical and subtropical. We import about $400,000,000 worth of tropical and subtropical products every year—more than a million dollars' worth for every day in the year, including Sundays and holidays. These articles we do not produce in the United States in sufficient quantities for home requirements. They include rubber, hemp, sisal, jute, raw silk, Egyptian cotton, and other articles used in manufacturing, and coffee, cocoa, tea, spices, olives, bananas, and sugar, used as food and drink. These classes of articles are of the class which "we can use without harm to our industries and labor." Sugar is the only article in this list produced in the United States, and at the present time the home production of sugar is only sufficient to supply about one-fifth of the total home consumption. The countries which produce these tropical and subtropical articles are not manufacturing countries, nor are they large producers of those great staples of food—flour, wheat, corn, and meats. As a consequence, they require the very classes of articles which the people of the United States have to sell.

RECIPROCITY TREATIES UNDER THE M'KINLEY LAW.

Under the McKinley tariff law reciprocity treaties were made by President Harrison with the Governments of Brazil, British Guiana, Salvador, Nicaragua, Honduras, Guatemala, Santo Domingo, and the countries governing the British West Indies and Porto Rico and Cuba. These treaties provided for a reduction of duties on foodstuffs and manufactures from the United States entering the countries and islands in question, in exchange for the free importation of sugar, coffee, tea, and hides into the United States, as provided under the general terms of the McKinley Act. The result of those treaties with this group of tropical countries, producing the class of articles which the United States requires and does not produce in sufficient quantities at home, was that our exports to those countries and islands increased 26 per cent and our imports from them increased 28 per cent between 1890, the year of the enactment of the McKinley law, and 1894, the year in which it was repealed by a Democratic Congress and a Democratic President, and reciprocity thus destroyed. During that same period our exports to all other countries than those above named increased 3 per cent and our imports from them decreased 27 per cent.

THE HAWAIIAN RECIPROCITY TREATY.

Another example of reciprocity, that with countries producing the class of articles which we require and importing the class which we produce and desire to export, was the reciprocity treaty with the Hawaiian Islands. That treaty went into effect September 9, 1876, and terminated April 30, 1900. During that period of the existence of that agreement our exports to the Hawaiian Islands grew from $779,257 in the fiscal year 1876 to $13,509,148 in the fiscal year 1900, while imports from the Hawaiian Islands of noncompeting articles demanded by our markets—tropical products—increased from $1,227,191 in 1876 to $20,707,903 in 1900. Thus by taking from this tropical country—Hawaii—its production of articles which we must import from some part of the world, we built up in the Hawaiian Islands a market for our merchandise seventeen times as large as in 1876.

RECIPROCITY.

The statements and tables which follow show in concise terms the experience of the United States with reciprocity. The principal treaties and agreements of the United States with other countries were, first, that with the British North American possessions, from 1855 to 1866; second, that with the Hawaiian Islands, from 1876 to 1900, the date of annexation; third, the series of agreements made under the tariff act of 1890 and continuing in force until terminated by the Wilson act of 1894; fourth, reciprocal agreements with certain European countries made under the act of 1897; and, fifth, the reciprocity treaty with Cuba, taking effect in December, 1903, and still in operation. The details of the agreements with these various countries and under these various acts are stated below, and in the accompanying tables is shown the commerce with each of the countries in question covering the years immediately prior to that in which the treaty took effect and continuing to the end of its operation or to the present time in the cases of those still in force. It will be noted that in the trade with Canada, whose products are similar to our own, the exports from the United States to that country made but slight increase during the existence of the treaty, but have grown rapidly since its termination. In the case of the Hawaiian Islands the exports thereto grew rapidly under the treaty and have grown with equal rapidity since annexation, which made permanent the freedom of interchange between that section producing tropical products required by the United States and requiring products of the Temperate Zone and of manufacturing industries such as those which the United States has to sell. In the countries with which reciprocity agreements were made under the act of 1890, in nearly all cases tropical or subtropical countries, the exports thereto showed marked gains during the existence of the reciprocity treaties. In the case of the European countries with which reciprocity agreements were made under the act of 1897, the growth in the trade, while steady, seems to have been little affected by these agreements, which, as will be seen by the terms of the treaties, affected comparatively few articles.

In the trade with Cuba under the reciprocity treaty of 1903 there has been a marked growth in both imports from and exports to that island, as will be seen in the table showing trade with Cuba from 1880 to 1908. The relations with that island, both commercial and otherwise, have been so varied during the last 20 years as to render interesting and important this statement of our trade therewith during that period and in the years immediately preceding. Under the reciprocity clause of the McKinley Tariff Act an agreement was made in June, 1891, with Spain, relative to Cuba and Porto Rico, by which sugar, molasses, coffee, and hides were admitted into the United States free of duty, and in exchange for that privilege salted meats, fish, lard, woods for cooperage and manufactured into doors and frames, wagons, cars, sewing machines, manufactures of iron and steel, and numerous other articles from the United States were admitted free of duty into Cuba; also that corn, corn meal, wheat, flour, and other articles should be admitted at reduced rates of duty. This agreement remained in force from September 1, 1891, to August 27, 1894. From the latter date until the United States assumed control of Cuba in 1898 no special agreements or relations affected trade between the United States and that island. American occupation of Cuba continued from January 1, 1899, at which date the Spanish evacuated the island and relinquished sovereignty, to May 20, 1902. On December 27, 1903, became effective the present reciprocity treaty with Cuba, under which a reduction of 20 per cent is made in the rates of duty collected on all merchandise from Cuba entering the United States; and in turn for that concession the Cuban rates of duty on articles from the United States entering that island are reduced 25 per cent on machinery and numerous other articles, 30 per cent on certain articles, 40 per cent on still other articles, and 20 per cent on other articles not included in the above classes or in the free list.

RECIPROCITY TREATIES AND AGREEMENTS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND FOREIGN COUNTRIES SINCE 1850.

The following is a list of the reciprocity treaties and agreements which have been in force between the United States and foreign countries since 1850. Tables are also appended exhibiting our trade with those countries before, during, and after the period covered by the treaties:

[1] Under "most-favored-nation" clause of the treaty of 1850, proclaimed Nov. 9, 1855.

There have been four distinct experiences with reciprocity in the trade relations of the United States:

(1) The reciprocity treaty with Canada, existing from 1855 to 1866. The treaty affected imports from Canada East and Canada West, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island, but did not affect imports from British Columbia and Newfoundland.

(2) The reciprocity treaty with the Hawaiian Government, existing from 1876 to 1900.

(3) The series of treaties framed under the McKinley Tariff Act of 1890 with Brazil, Dominican Republic, Spain (for Cuba and Porto Rico), in 1891; and with Germany, United Kingdom (for British West Indies and British Guiana), Nicaragua, Salvador, Austria-Hungary, Honduras, and Guatemala in 1892. These continued in existence until the passage of the Wilson Tariff Act, August 27, 1894.

(4) The reciprocal agreements of 1900 with Germany, France, Portugal, and Italy, still in operation.

(5) The reciprocity treaty with Cuba, framed and ratified in 1903, and taking effect December 27, 1903.

The detailed provisions of these various reciprocity treaties may be briefly described in general terms as follows:

(1) The Canadian reciprocity treaty provided for the free admission into the United States from Canada, and the free admission into Canada from the United States, of breadstuffs, provisions, live animals, fruits, fish, poultry, hides and skins, furs, stone, ores and metals, timber and lumber, unmanufactured cotton, flax and hemp, unmanufactured tobacco—the list of articles being identical for each country.

(2) The Hawaiian reciprocity treaty provided for the free admission into the United States of sugar, molasses, and other of the principal tropical productions of the islands, and for the free admission into the islands of breadstuffs, provisions, manufactures, and general merchandise from the United States.

(3) In the group of treaties made in the years 1891 and 1892, under the act of 1890, the provisions were briefly as follows:

With Brazil the treaty provided for the free admission into the United States from Brazil of sugar, molasses, coffee, and hides, and the free admission into Brazil from the United States of breadstuffs, pork, fish, cotton-seed oil, coal, agricultural implements, machinery for mining and manufacturing, mechanical tools, material for railway construction, and numerous other articles, the product of the United States; also for a 25 per cent reduction in the rates of duty on certain other articles, including provisions, manufactures of iron and steel, leather, lumber, furniture, wagons and carriages, and manufactures of rubber.

With Cuba and Porto Rico the treaty provided for the free admission into the United States from Cuba and Porto Rico of sugar, molasses, coffee, and hides, and the admission to the islands from the United States, free of duty, of salted meats, fish, lard, woods for cooperage and manufactured into doors, frames, etc., wagons and carts, cars for railways, sewing machines, manufactures of iron and steel, oats and forage, and numerous other articles, the product of the United States; also corn and meal at 25 cents per hundred kilograms, wheat at 30 cents per hundred kilograms, flour at $1 per hundred kilograms; also a reduction of 50 per cent of the duty on numerous other articles, especially manufactures.

With British West Indies the treaty provided for the free admission into the United States of sugar, molasses, coffee, and hides from the islands, and the free admission into the islands from the United States of live animals, canned or dried beef, fish, eggs, machinery for agriculture, irrigation, and mining; carts and wagons, wire, railway material and locomotives, fertilizers, fruits, sewing machines, and a large number of manufactures; also a reduction of 25 per cent in the rates of duty on beef and pork, salted, and provisions, and of 50 per cent on bacon and hams, lard, bread and biscuits, boots and shoes, shooks and staves, and other articles.

With the Dominican Republic and British Guiana, Nicaragua, Honduras, and Guatemala the provisions were similar to those with the West Indies.

With Germany the treaty provided for the free admission into the United States of sugar, molasses, coffee, and hides from Germany, and the free admission into Germany from the United States of bran, flax, feathers, hides and skins, tan bark; also a large list of articles at a fixed rate of duty, but in all cases below the regular tariff rates—the list including breadstuffs, lumber, provisions, live animals, fruits, and certain manufactures.

The treaty with Austria-Hungary was similar in general characteristics to that with Germany.

(4) The reciprocal agreements now existing between the United States and France, Portugal, Germany, and Italy, respectively, may be summarized as follows:

France: The United States reduces the rate of duty on crude tartar from France to 5 per cent ad valorem; on brandies or other spirits to $1.75 per gallon; also a reduction on still wines and vermuth and on paintings to 15 per cent ad valorem; while the French Government gives its minimum tariff rates to canned meats, table fruits, dried fruits, lard, manufactured and prepared pork meats, hops, paving blocks, staves, and logs and sawed or squared timber and lumber from the United States.

Germany: The United States gives the same tariff rates as those named in the treaty with France on tartar, brandies, still wines, and paintings, and the German Government gives to the United States the same tariff rates as those given to Belgium, Italy, Austria-Hungary, Roumania, Russia, and Switzerland during the existence of the present tariff treaties with them, and annuls its regulations regarding dried fruits from the United States, providing in their stead a system of inspection on account of the San Jose scale.

Portugal: The reduction on crude tartar, brandies, wines, and paintings accorded to Germany and France are given by the United States to Portugal, and the Portuguese Government gives to the United States as low rates of duty as those accorded to any other country, except Spain and Brazil, on breadstuffs, lard, mineral oils, agricultural implements, and certain machinery for manufacturing.

Italy: The above-named rates with reference to tartar, brandies, still wines, and paintings are given by the United States, and a reduction is made by the Italian Government on imports of cotton-seed oil, fish machinery, scientific instruments, fertilizers, and skins.

(5) The treaty with Cuba, which went into operation December 27, 1903, gives a reduction of 20 per cent duty on all dutiable articles from Cuba entering the United States and a reduction ranging from 20 to 40 per cent on articles from the United States entering Cuba.

[1] Period of reciprocal trade.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I am not so vain as to believe that any words of mine can at this time swerve my colleagues from their apparent purpose to enact this bill into law. The most I can hope to do is to furnish some reasons for the opposition to this unfortunate arrangement which at best I can only feebly express.

We are nearing the end of a most animated and interesting discussion affecting the policy of the Government and the welfare of the people of our country for many years to come. Whether our course has been wisely chosen and our chart carefully examined, each Senator must answer for himself and history truthfully attest the folly or the wisdom of his course.

It is no ordinary situation which we confront, and the public servant who regards the present crisis lightly is neither a safe guide nor a true philosopher, and I am sorry, indeed, to find myself out of accord with my honored colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND], whose judgment I highly respect. With a divided public sentiment in the State we represent, I find comfort in my perplexity in the words of Edmund Burke in his speech to the electors of Bristol, when he said:

> I did not obey your instructions; I am to look indeed to your opinions, but to such opinions as you and I must have five years hence. I was not to look to the flash of the day. I knew that you chose me in my place, along with others, to be a pillar of the State, and not a weathercock on the top of the edifice, exalted for my levity and versatility, and of no use but to indicate the shiftings of every fashionable gale.

"Reciprocity" is one of the most rhythmic and tuneful words in the vocabulary of international politics, and signifies equality and fair consideration for the interests of one another, and the public man would be deaf indeed that could not catch its alluring strain. It must be free from dross and devoid of selfish or poisonous alloy. As far back as the eighteenth century this hypnotic word was used as a popular governmental fulcrum with which to raise the narrow and unjust restrictions upon the world's shipping, at that time small and petty and vexatious, circumscribing the freedom of ships by hectoring and irritation, until a spirit of broader toleration was succeeded by mutual advantage and respect.

In 1815 the United States concluded an arrangement with Great Britain whereby the ships of neither nation should be liable to greater charges in the ports of the other than were exacted in her own. That arrangement through the centuries has gradually ripened into absolute free trade, although the regulations of Great Britain seem to favor her masters and her ships by more prompt inspection and more liberal regulations than those of foreigners. This is the only branch of American commerce which has for more than a century enjoyed the luxury of free trade, and it is the only field of American enterprise too torpid to participate in the march of American achievement.

The policy agreed upon between the United States and England was very promptly extended by the latter country to Portugal, Prussia, Sweden, France, and Buenos Aires and Colombia, thus enlarging the sphere of her shipping supremacy. English statesmen for generations past have directed their undivided effort to the conquest of the seas, until her ships' tonnage, flying the British flag, aggregates over 20,000,000 tons. While our own country comes next with less than 8,000,000 tons, and Germany but 4,500,000 tons, this is the only branch of British enterprise which seems really to enjoy the spirit of the twentieth century. And there seem to be no apparent signs of diminution in her prestige upon the ocean. Last year British shipyards turned out over 500 vessels, of which nearly 400 were seagoing steamers, while our country launched barely 200, and Germany considerable less in number. It has been estimated by the London Board of Trade that over 50 per cent of the world's shipping now carries the British flag. Her prestige is upon the trackless waste; her sailor is born to his task; no pecuniary inducement invites him to the exactions and the peril of the sea; they go from choice into this hereditary pursuit; and her activities extend to every port, encircling the globe. But while her shipping seemingly prospers, those who remain at home in domestic employment languish in idleness, in sad contrast with the glamor of the dauntless sailor upon the deep. The free trade which that Empire exemplifies has made her great in only one field of endeavor, in which the world has been her sympathetic coadjutor. Subsidies and preferences may have gilded her prows, but every great government in the world has, by following the example of England in this respect, magnified England's greatness upon the seas and correspondingly minimized its own.

While there is little doubt that this same movement for free ships was one of the motives for the confederation of the German States, yet the result of that union brought the Empire speedily to the realization of the necessity of their trading with one another, and the disposition was early manifest to spread the spirit of reciprocal trade throughout the more prosperous countries of the world, culminating in the repeal of the "corn laws" by Great Britain and the enlargement of the free-trade era, which continued unabated for nearly 40 years. The treaty between Great Britain and France was most liberal in character, and practically amounted to trade union. All Europe followed in the wake of England, and commercial concessions breathed the true spirit of fraternity throughout Europe, finally resulting in a world-wide favored-nation arrangement, by which independent political subdivisions should not discriminate against friendly powers; and I do not think it is too much to say that, under that arrangement, trade increased and definite lines of commercial warfare were gradually but unconsciously being formed for that day when national aggrandizement and State pride would stimulate competition to its highest point.

In 1844 the German reciprocity treaty was made with us, but failed of confirmation in the Senate. Rufus Choate declared it to be outside the powers of the President, and unhesitatingly said that it would be of no commercial advantage to our country, while Daniel Webster declared that "the principle of reciprocity acted upon by the Government is wrong, a mistake from the beginning, and injurious to the great interests of the country." The attention of the United States was then turned to the desirability of a trade treaty with Canada, and, after much fencing for advantage, such an arrangement was entered into in 1854 for the period of 10 years, resulting in political hostilities and commercial misunderstandings and the sacrifice of revenue, which the rising tide of American antagonism completely engulfed during the administration of President Lincoln. Free trade in spots had been the prevailing mania of some American politicians and statesmen. The administration of Mr. Buchanan endeavored in every possible way to make an arrangement of this kind with Mexico which would have been only reciprocal in the natural products of the two countries, but our unfortunate experience with Canada at that time destroyed interest in the Senate in this free-trade spirit, while all the treaties of reciprocity entered into by European governments gradually partook of the form now known as the favored-nation clause, so common in the commercial treaties of all the governments of the world.

These were based upon the principle that no concessions should be granted which did not exact a similar concession in return, and the countries now outside the purview of this arrangement are few indeed, and America is no exception to the rule. Indeed, every commercial treaty made by this Government now embraces this wholesome and salutary provision, so that it may be said to-day, in truth, that a form of helpful and wholesome reciprocity is already in existence in such form as creates no animosity, leads to no misunderstandings, and does not operate to the disadvantage of any class of our own people.

In many of our early treaties of commerce and navigation it had been declared that "if either party shall hereafter grant to any other nation any particular favor in navigation or commerce, it shall immediately become common to the other party freely where it is freely granted to such other nation or on yielding the same compensation when the grant is conditional," while the maximum and minimum rule succeeded to all the severities of retaliation originally exercised through reciprocity by a dual system of rates calculated to enforce friendly uniformity and trade tranquillity.

Reciprocity between the United States and Canada was requested by the Canadian Parliament on the 12th of May, 1846, in a formal address to the Queen of England. Robert J. Walker was then our Secretary of the Treasury, and gave impetus to this desire. An arrangement was made between the two countries upon practically the same basis as that proposed in the Taft-Fielding agreement to-day. Two ways were suggested, either of which was desirable—by treaty or by concurrent tariff legislation. Political divisions were so sharp that it was impossible to pass the legislation in both Houses of Congress, and a treaty was finally negotiated which was ratified by the Senate, although the methods which were employed at that time to secure this result were freely commented upon, and in some quarters most severely condemned. It is not too much to say, however, that the consummation of this arrangement was hailed with enthusiasm throughout the North, but soon spent itself in the industrial chaos which followed its ratification. The inherent weakness in the plan was apparent to the most casual observer.

The free list was generally condemned, not only by the producers of agricultural products, but by our tradesmen, from whom the producers of the soil had previously purchased the necessities of life. Enthusiasm gave way to condemnation, while even the good faith of Canada was frequently called in question by resolutions in both branches of Congress, and all the spirit of amity and good will which was urged as the real basis for this arrangement disappeared from the calculations of our northern neighbors only to be succeeded by selfishness and greed unparalleled in the previous commercial history of the two countries. Special emissaries were dispatched by the Buchanan administration across the border, where investigation was pursued and reports made to Congress startling in their recital of abuses and disrespect for the promises made and inducements urged as a basis for this arrangement. From the moment this arrangement was made Canada proceeded to steadily increase her customs duties upon every item not specifically embraced in the agreement, while the loss of revenue to the American Treasury, aggregating more than $10,000,000, could not be justified on any fair hypothesis. This unfortunate experience came to an end on the 12th of January, 1865, when the Senate denounced it, every Member of that body voting for repeal but eight, the fight being led by such eminent Senators as Zachariah Chandler, Ben Wade, Lyman Trumbull, John Sherman, and Charles Sumner.

Zachariah Chandler said in debate:

I say they have not only raised those duties largely—

but they have more than doubled, and in many instances they have more than trebled them. The very moment Canada proposes a reciprocity treaty which is in fact a reciprocity treaty I shall be ready to meet her half way and make such a treaty; but this is no reciprocity treaty at all. This is a treaty by which we receive all the products of Canada free and by which she receives from us nothing that we manufacture or can export to her. Let her take our manufactures, in which the Senator's constituents are directly interested, upon the same basis as we receive her agricultural products, and I shall be ready to meet her half way and even more than half way.

While John Sherman, speaking in the Senate in favor of the cancellation of this agreement, said:

When the reciprocity treaty was adopted, in 1855, there was then a state of things existing along the border which induced both parties to cultivate kindly relations and the exchange of commodities between them. I have no doubt that Great Britain got a great deal the best of the bargain, especially in the schedule of articles named which should be exchanged free of duty. The treaty has operated from the beginning against our interests; and it can be plainly demonstrated by the tables which are furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury that from the beginning our trade has fallen off and theirs increased, comparatively.

So, Mr. President, Mr. Pike, one of the ablest Members of the House, gave vent to his feelings when he said:

I confess I am impatient of delay. I desire this treaty to draw its last breath as soon as possible. Had it much longer to live in order to die a natural death, if that be not paradoxical, I should be disposed to use violence and destroy a life which, in my judgment, has been productive of so much injury. It was a creature of mistaken views and of expectations which had no basis in fact. Its workings have been a continuous and protracted disappointment. It has achieved no considerable result which was predicted for it, and I ask the attention of the House for a short time while I exhibit its utter failure in all particulars which should render a commercial arrangement with a foreign country desirable to us.

Yet, Mr. President, Mr. Fielding, who carried on these negotiations in the present instance, says:

It is the reciprocity treaty of 1854 over again, with comparatively little change. It promises prosperity to the people of Canada, and this house would make a great mistake and do a grave wrong—

Referring to the House of Parliament there—

if it would refuse to take advantage of it.

While the opposition to its repeal consisted principally of free-trade Democrats. The solemn requiem being sung only by a prominent member of the British House of Commons, who, after reciting the action of the American Senate, said:

No explanation has been given to Parliament, nor has a single paper of any kind been laid upon the table of the House of the Majesty's Government, but it has been allowed to expire, owing mainly to the culpable negligence and maladroit management of those who have had charge of British interests.

The same member of Parliament asserting, with much show of indignation, that the results of that arrangement had been the annual interchange of over £50,000,000 a year between the British Provinces and the United States. Almost immediately following this denouncement on the part of the Senate, Canadian statesmen, headed by the minister of finance, undertook to resume negotiations for its rehabilitation, and from that day to this there has, in my opinion, never been an hour when it could not have been reopened had any great party or any influential American statesman seen anything of merit in it.

Our exports to Canada in 1855 were $20,828,676; but, under the operation of so-called reciprocity then in force, they dwindled in 12 years down to $15,243,834, while the exports of Canada to the United States increased from $12,000,000 to $46,000,000. When the treaty began the balance of trade had been $8,000,000 annually in our favor, and that paid in specie; but at the end of the treaty the balance to be paid by our people in American coin in a single year was $30,000,000, all withdrawn from our circulating medium, which would otherwise have passed freely among our own people, employing labor and buying the products of honest toil. This was not the reciprocity advocated by McKinley, Dingley, Blaine, Harrison, and other great statesmen, who advocated such an arrangement as would not interfere with our domestic production, the employment of our own labor, and the retention of our own money supply.

Those familiar with the earlier draft of the so-called Wilson bill, which devastated our lands and our flocks and closed our factories like a pestilence, know that it contained a provision for the free entry of agricultural products, when the late Speaker Reed said:

If we propose to abandon any industries, we had better not let it be the agricultural industries. Between the Atlantic and Pacific stretch vast regions still untilled. The next victory of protection should be there.

Our system of protection is not for manufacturers alone. It is for farmers also. Whoever deprives our farmers of all the American market they can occupy is false to his principles and must meet with defeat, or the system must be surrendered which proclaims that American markets are first of all for American citizens, who are engaged in developing the country we already have.

Then, as now, the impractical devotees of free trade almost accomplished their purpose to foist this unwholesome principle upon us, and it was only the fear of the farmers' wrath that checked their ruinous design under the leadership of William L. Wilson, William Jennings Bryan, CHAMP CLARK, and other joint authors of that commercial iniquity, the most odious customs law ever enacted by the American Congress. The present Canadian plan will pass this body only by the preponderance of Democratic votes, and passed the House of Representatives by the assistance of free traders.

THE DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM OF 1902 CONDEMNS RECIPROCITY IN THE FOLLOWING LANGUAGE.

Trade interchange on the basis of reciprocal advantages to the countries participating is a time-honored doctrine of the Democratic faith, but we denounce the sham reciprocity which juggles with the people's desire for enlarged foreign markets and freer exchanges by pretending to establish closer trade relations for a country whose articles of export are almost exclusively agricultural products with other countries that are also agricultural, while erecting a customhouse barrier of prohibitive tariff taxes against the rich and the countries of the world that stand ready to take our entire surplus of products and to exchange therefor commodities which are necessaries and comforts of life among our own people.

To what depth of depravity has the Democratic Party fallen that its leaders may now in House and Senate proclaim the virtues of a doctrine but so lately execrated and condemned as undesirable by their own national convention? While the Wilson bill brazenly condemned and repealed section 3 of the McKinley tariff law, commonly known as the reciprocity provision, stating that "reciprocity had brought no appreciable advantage to American exporters" and denying the right or the power of the President to enter upon such negotiations, Mr. Wilson himself being the author of this provision, which he introduced in the House of Representatives January 25, 1894.

"Consistency, thou art a jewel." Let no one even by accident hereafter call you Democracy. To be sure, this denouncement of the reciprocity clause of the McKinley law was somewhat modified in the Senate and as it afterwards became a part of the Wilson-Gorman bill, but its purpose was apparent, and its effect was to destroy absolutely all the harmless trade agreements so carefully entered into under the terms of the former tariff law.

I have always favored such reciprocity, and voted to authorize treaties of this character in the Dingley bill. I have been enthusiastic in my championship of such reciprocity as would not retard American enterprise or unfairly discriminate among the producers of our own country. Such reciprocity may be helpful to producer and consumer alike, and breeds no poisonous antidote. It is the natural corollary and handmaiden of protection, and no arrangement of this character ever proposed and carried into effect has blighted a harvest or mildewed a crop.

This Senate has always had the profoundest respect for Senator Spooner, whose wide range of information and accurate analysis has more than once proven of value to the American Congress in the perfection of its legislation, and he unhesitatingly declared, at the time of the passage of the McKinley law:

I am in favor, as I think everyone now is who is in favor of this bill or any bill protective in character, of incorporating in it some provision for reciprocal commercial arrangements with other countries. I am not in favor of any such reciprocity as that which would open our ports to the competitive products of other countries without any regard whatever to its effect upon our industry, or to its effect upon our labor. I also want to say that I am not ready to vote for the Canadian reciprocity proposition which is submitted by the Senator from Ohio. I am not attracted by the notion that we can, with any profit to our industries or to our labor, or with commercial advantages to our country, enter at this time into a general commercial union with Canada. I will vote for the reciprocity proposition reported by the Committee on Finance. I am satisfied with it in its scope. I am satisfied with it in its form. It is Republican reciprocity in contradiction to Democratic reciprocity. It is an extension of the principle of protection instead of an adoption of the principle of free trade. I am in favor of such reciprocity between the United States and other nations, especially with the Republics of Mexico and Central and South America, as can be agreed upon and as will open up new markets to the people of this country. What we desire is to find a market for whatever surplus we may have either in agricultural productions or in manufactures; and to secure such market, we should be willing to take from the people who take our surplus a sufficient amount of the surplus of such productions or articles as we do not produce to the extent of our needs to pay for it.

While the venerable Senator Morrill, father of the tariff law under which the Lincoln administration carried our country through the War of the Rebellion, sagely declared:

The Canadian reciprocity treaty demonstrated the profitlessness of reciprocity treaties with countries whose products of exchange are chiefly agricultural, and which we do not want.

I commend to the advocates of this bill on this side of the Chamber the words of the late Senator Vest, of Missouri, who said that—

The howl about free trade so long and persistently lifted up against the Democratic Party should now subside. The high priests of protection are burning incense upon the altars of free trade with an earnest devotion characteristic of all new converts.

Again, sir, I commend the withering sarcasm of the brilliant Missourian to my fellow Republicans upon this side of the Chamber who have not the heart nor the resourcefulness to champion the pending proposition from any sound Republican point of view.

It has been said that even our friends upon the other side of the Chamber were so much wrought up over the reciprocity feature of the McKinley law that they were responsible for the test cases which found their way into the courts regarding their validity. It is well known that Chief Justice Fuller and Justice Lamar dissented on the ground that no part of the legislative power can be delegated to any other department of the Government.

Under the McKinley Act an arrangement with Brazil was promptly entered into; but the reciprocity was in noncompetitive products, such as sugar, coffee, tea, and so forth, in exchange for which agricultural products and manufactured goods were admitted into that country. Treaties were promptly made with Spain for Cuba and Porto Rico and with England for her smaller possessions in the Western Hemisphere, while arrangements of a similar character were perfected with Salvador, Costa Rica, Honduras, and Nicaragua, embracing what was then spoken of in a reproachful sense as "tropical reciprocity." Treaties were also entered into with Germany and Austria-Hungary in 1892, which were supposed to be beneficial.

These treaties gave us a general reduction on numerous articles of production and manufacture, while the treaty with Germany was especially helpful to American agriculture. Both countries were probably moved to this course by the overproduction of sugar, for which our country proved to be a most valuable market. Cuba responded more promptly than any of the other countries to the privilege thus accorded to her. During a single year the exports from the United States to Cuba increased from $13,000,000 to nearly $18,000,000, and the following year to $24,000,000. President Cleveland and the Wilson bill and the statesmen of the Democratic Party promptly leveled this trade again to less than $13,000,000 by a denouncement of the treaty as shortsighted and cold-blooded—an abandonment of the wisest international arrangement ever consummated between nations. The bulk of our shipments to Cuba during reciprocity consisted of flour, iron, steel, lard, lumber, hams, bacon, and potatoes, of which latter product they received $554,000 worth during the last year of this arrangement, while we took from Cuba during the last year of reciprocity $78,000,000 worth of her products, all of which were noncompetitive in character and consisted mainly of sugar and tobacco, which we did not at that time produce to any great extent.

I personally visited Cuba during this period, and saw on the wharves of Habana, in the warehouses of Matanzas, and in other Cuban cities, American flour in great quantities that had hitherto been supplied by Spain; and one of the pleasantest recollections of my life is the visit I had with Secretary Blaine upon my return to Washington, detailing the policy which he had so wisely advocated, by experience of my own, I listened to the enthusiastic summary of his last great life work, just reaching its highest fruition, when the withering blight of a Democratic triumph stifled its further growth. I believe, although I am not certain of my figures, that nearly 20,000,000 barrels of American flour, the wheat of which was raised upon the American farm, was sold in Cuba in one single year of reciprocity. This was real reciprocity, harmful to no section of our country, but helpful to all. This was the reciprocity urged by McKinley and so eloquently advocated by Blaine, while bills similar to the one now pending in this Senate, and upon which we are about to vote, have never met the approval of either of these great leaders of American public thought. In 1892, when Secretary Blaine was urged to renew the Elgin treaty in natural products with Canada, he denounced it in unmeasured terms as class legislation.

English public opinion is fast crystallizing around the sentiment for a confederation of her dependencies in both hemispheres. Mr. Chamberlain thus summarizes to Lord Grey the true spirit of the militant and aggressive present-day British statesman when he says:

There is something captivating in the project of forming all the parts of this vast Empire into one huge zoolverein with free interchange of commodities and uniform duties against the world without. Though without some federal legislation it might have been impossible to carry it out, undoubtedly under such a system the component parts of the Empire would have been united by bonds which can not be supplied under that on which we are now entering.

Every attempt upon our part to purloin this English dependency or control for ourselves her industrial development accentuates the confederation spirit in the Empire and places one more obstacle in the way of our permanent enjoyment of British trade, the best and most unexacting enjoyed by the American people in all the world.

Canada, as the eldest daughter of the imperial family, is loved and admired by her kinsfolk in every clime; her voice has grown more potential with each passing year, and her limitless resources constitute the most priceless jewel in the imperial diadem, while her brilliant future revitalizes the grandeur of the British crown and again insures the new monarch a more potential voice in the governmental affairs on the North American Continent than was exercised by his despised namesake in the early years of the last century. And while the supplications of the leading English statesmen—Chamberlain, Balfour, and Lord Lansdowne—filled the English Parliament with apprehension the clarion voice of the Canadian premier reassures the doubtful at the coronation feast that the Dominion Government will take no step and make no concession that will not be freely conceded to the mother country.

Under such circumstances is our Government to become merely a temporary convenience to the farmers of Canada, to bridge over present emergencies in her affairs, or, as Mr. Fielding, the Canadian minister of finance who negotiated this treaty, says, a "day to day" helpmeet, or are we to become by this arrangement full partners in the confederation? Time will tell. Entering for a moment the unforbidden field of prophecy, I unhesitatingly predict that the present arrangement is both the beginning and the end of our trade negotiations with our northern neighbor. With forests and mines and minerals, with a territory larger than our own, including Alaska, it is no part of the British or the Canadian plan to permit us to utilize her raw materials for the extension of our manufacturing industries. Neither will they subordinate their commercial activities to our leadership or control. If this is not so and the rent is to be enlarged, as its American authors predict, English money is ready in abundance for Canadian exploitation, while more than $1,500,000,000 of British capital is now invested there, and as soon as our protective barriers are removed against Canada British enterprises now denied free access to this market will overwhelm their loved daughter with their affectionate bounty and prey upon our commerce from the golden borderland of her favored dependency, extending over 4,000 miles along our frontier, from ocean to ocean.

How this development can advantage the American people is beyond my comprehension. Wages must be affected by this overstimulated and multiplied production, while the undisputed markets now exclusively accessible to our own genius must soon become the scene of a most animated rivalry on the part of our nearest neighbor and kinsman. Canada will soon become the torchbearer by night and the color bearer by day in the commercial conquest now being marshaled under the Empire, and the clearances of its over-sea possessions will hereafter pass the open ports of the motherland and, unobstructed, on through Canada, pass the abandoned customhouses on our Canadian border, thus accomplishing instantly and by one stroke of the pen, but indirectly, what it has never been the good fortune of English soldiers or statesmen to secure in her own right, although her ablest diplomats have for more than a century exhausted their wits to this end, but to the everlasting credit of the sturdy parliamentary giants of the past we have up to this moment successfully prevented such a catastrophe.

Perhaps I am wrong, I hope I am, but reading the future by the past I can see no permanent good to the American people to grow out of this private arrangement.

We should play no favorites in the race for trade; we should subsidize no foreign state; we should have one universal rule applicable to all alike. This was our motto for a hundred years. To deal justly and trade fairly will take us farther in our quest for trade and reward us with generous returns, keeping us free from entangling alliances and mischievous entanglements with the affairs of other countries.

This rule has crowned us with knightly grandeur and filled our coffers to overflowing with the world's treasure; it has turned a stream of yellow gold from the four corners of the world into the American market place and distributed its blessings with a lavish hand among all classes of our people, dignifying the modest homes of our countrymen, raising the standard of living and civilization, and establishing for us absolute supremacy in the western world, while one in every four of our entire population have bank deposits, more than 25,000,000 persons in the United States have money in the banks, and $14,000,000,000 is thus represented; 35 per cent of it is in the form of savings.

The world has never witnessed anything comparable to this extraordinary showing; it represents more than double the whole world's known supply of gold and is greater in value than the world's total output of gold and silver since the discovery of America. The deposits of our citizens would pay more than one-third of the combined national debts of the 50 leading nations of the earth. Surely our policy of protection and the single rule which we have applied to great and small alike among our customers can not be wrong with such tremendous results to its credit. We neither need the taunting menace of European competition in order to deal justly with our fellows nor the brazen mastery of monopoly to hold us in the right course. The arrangement we are now considering will not release us from the iron grasp of monopoly, but will rather strengthen its hold upon the resources of both countries.

No, Mr. President; neither dual tariffs nor geographical nor climatic favoritism have contributed largely to our commercial prestige in the past; our yardstick has never been used as the surveyor's rod nor our economic system as his compass or his chart. One rule and one rate for all the world has given us our victory on the busy highways and over the seas; it was sung into our youthful ears by the Father of the Republic, and it has been defended by his worthy sons in every crisis of our history. It was a good rule then and it is a good rule now. Great statesmen may covet the glare of the international arena, but when the struggle is over and the diplomatic game is ended and the fruits of our labors are garnered for the harvest, the true test of wisdom shall be the permanency and stability of our industrial achievements, and these are best assured when vitalized under our own control and within our own domain. Though the entire world may selfishly erect barriers against us in the future, we can even then enjoy our own protected market and truthfully feel that it is the best in all the world.

Neither the purse of the Government nor the plow of the husbandman should be intrusted to strangers owing no allegiance to our flag; no unnecessary barriers should be erected against good-fellowship, but reckless international poaching should always be regarded as an offense against society, and the sentinel who sleeps at his post in such a crisis should be tried for treason, without much ceremony, at sunrise.

I am not unmindful of the value of a commercial union with Canada, but the idea that we can preempt an exclusive market there is a mere figment of the imagination, so long as we maintain our protective system and Canada clings to the Empire of Great Britain. Freedom of trade with Canada has at different times in our history been thought to be desirable by real American statesmen, but the only obstacle to this result is not the American Senate or the American farmer but the political alliance existing between Canada and the mother country, while the matter of her revenue from customs duties acts as a warning which has in the past, and will in the future, restrain her generosity, as it should ours.

While it has been well said that "the circumstances which make the common boundary of the two countries an actual barrier instead of an imaginary line are under their control, not ours," it is for them to determine which affects them more importantly—their political association with Great Britain or their actual commercial and industrial association in interest with the United States. There is no apparent evasion of the choice they must make.

It has been frequently said in this debate that "they are entitled to as generous treatment as a State in the American Union," but, sir, if they are, they must reciprocate in kind, and you may search this bill from its first line to its last word without finding a sentence of real reciprocity in the pact intended for our benefit.

The treaty of 1854, made by Democrats and free traders, was exactly similar in character, as stated over and over again by Mr. Fielding in the Canadian Parliament. Great results were predicted to follow by its authors. But in actual practice the best results moved northward to our neighbors, while in the arrangement made then and the agreement now before us there can not be found an exclusive American privilege.

Must the American farmer again compete with the Canadian rival on equal terms? His lands cost more, his taxes are higher, he must defend his own country by land and by sea, with no indulgent mother to watch over him by night and protect him by day. Shall we then "throw down the barriers and whip these two runners into competition, one heavily weighted, the other without an ounce of runner's ballast"? Sir, it does not require great wisdom to foretell the result of such an unequal contest. The tide of immigration will turn abruptly into Canada, while a general outcry is certain to be raised against the protective system, to which we owe our industrial supremacy, calculated to give encouragement to the free-trade party North and South. In such a controversy, with the House of Representatives now Democratic, so-called reciprocity may stand, but protection will fall. It is not necessary to sever the jugular vein of the body politic—no one in this presence has undertaken to do so now—but cut the smallest artery at the wrist or thigh and the result will be the same, although the agony may be prolonged.

Under the Elgin treaty Canada wanted a market for her agricultural products; to-day she is in a similar need; 54 per cent of the products of their farms is surplus, with no untaxed market in which to sell, and we are asked to ignore the pleadings of our own countrymen and extend this favor to aliens without recompense.

Yesterday was the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Lord Elgin, whose brilliant intellect conceived the last treaty and whose prophetic vision and fascinating personality guided it successfully across the troubled political sea, luring American Senators by blandishment far from their safer moorings, launching our country into a dismal diplomatic failure from which we have never entirely recovered, although we seem to be at this moment upon the verge of its reenactment.

The London newspapers say that long before his term of service as Governor General expired he was the most popular man in the Dominion, and when he returned to England was heralded by trumpets and promptly raised to a British peerage because the British-American treaty which bore his name was so universally satisfactory to the people he served, while it may be truthfully said that many of the American statesmen who actually participated in this fateful decree rapidly lost their public commissions and sank into that political oblivion which they so richly deserved.

Mr. Blaine, in a letter written in 1874, said that "the Elgin treaty cost the people of his State more than $50,000,000 in 10 years," and he added that "the so-called reciprocity was all on the Canadian side." It did not take the sagacious and far-sighted Lincoln long to detect it, while the vigorous denunciations of bluff old Zachariah Chandler and Ben Wade cleft the false doctrine in twain, driving it out of the public mind for over 50 years, there being but eight senatorial mourners attendant upon its demise, and most of these constituted the last-ditch advocates of free trade.

That treaty stimulated Canadian enterprise in her transportation facilities, and resulted in the expenditure of $200,000,000 on her canals, making traffic possible from the Atlantic Ocean to the head of Lake Superior, a distanec of 2,500 miles, on lines entirely her own. She has constructed over 30,000 miles of railroads, costing upward of $2,000,000,000. She has rapidly put herself in position to be independent of outside influences, and will soon realize her fondest dream. The arrangement which we are now considering is but a temporary makeshift, only useful until she can establish an equilibrium between her agricultural and manufacturing strength; scattered Provinces, formerly unknown to one another, have been knit together by highways and bridges and railroads, and a community of feeling and interest is now instinct in every part of her vast territory.

Last year we sold the Canadians $239,000,000 worth of our products; $106,000,000 entered the Dominion free, while the dutiable portion paid an average rate of 24 per cent. We bought from Canada last year $113,000,000 worth of her products; $36,000,000 worth came into our country free, while the rest paid an average rate of duty of 43 per cent, leaving a balance of trade in our favor of more than $125,000,000 in 12 months. The Canadians only shipped to England $149,000,000 worth of her products last year under free trade, and bought from her less than $100,000,000, while from all the rest of the world she took but $96,000,000. These figures strikingly attest the wisdom of our present policy, and warn us to beware of the dangers which attended the last trade arrangement with that country, which promptly reversed a wholesome tribute which they annually paid to us into an annual deficit of equal proportions against us.

American manufacturers will not be able to increase their sales when the agricultural communities of our own country are subjected to keen competition in markets whose purchasing power has been reduced by inability to dispose of their products at good prices at home. Under the old arrangement the border States were the first to cry out against the Elgin treaty, and New York and New England both remonstrated against its continuance.

Even if we were to have free trade with Canada, our manufacturers would not profit by the arrangement; the customers of both countries would be unable to distinguish between goods manufactured in the Dominion and goods produced in the mother country, while to-day Canadian tradesmen complain that the present differential allowed to England is made use of by other foreign states as a means of reaching the Canadian markets on a favored basis. Overstimulated international competition may be the means of supplanting the American workman in his profitable employment; he is the customer of every other calling and trade, and if his custom is desirable, his vocation must be secure and remunerative. Unlimited English capital will certainly find its way into the industrial development of its North American kinsman as we by favoritism increase the inducement. Is it possible that Canada can have all the advantages of a State in the American Union and enjoy all the blessings of kinship and territorial allegiance to Great Britain at one and the same time? This would indeed make her the polestar in the international firmament and give her an advantage never before enjoyed by any people in the history of mankind. If the statesmanship of Canada can climb to such a height, baronetcies and earldoms will indeed be slight compensation for services so transcendent.

The distinguished Canadian premier already stands high in the esteem of his monarch, while at the coronation conferences of the over-sea proconsuls he was easily the leader of British official thought. There is not the slightest disposition upon the part of any recognized Canadian official to discriminate against England or any of her sister colonies in matters of mutual concern, and even Mr. Fielding has been quoted as saying in an English chamber of commerce that "no differential duties in favor of Canada and against England would follow the ratification of this treaty." Were it otherwise this arrangement would rouse Great Britain in trade relation against us, in which event we would lose a hundred times more than we could possibly gain by this proposal, while the failure of Canada to do more for us by this agreement than she is compelled to do for every country with whom she has a favored-nation agreement robs us of that distinctive diplomatic triumph upon which the authors of this unfortunate pact have plumed themselves with so much vigor.

We have been frequently told that Canada does not want this arrangement perfected; that many of her most advanced thinkers feel that it will undermine her protective policy and drive her back to the open door from which she made a most heroic escape about the middle of the last century, aided by the skillful activities of Sir John McDonald, Sir Charles Tupper, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier, whose dynamic denunciation shattered the free-trade heresies of the motherland and gave to the Dominion the first taste of industrial independence. Indifference, sir, hardly accords with the persistence of her representatives. By this undertaking Canada must, on demand, throw open her ports to free or reduced entry to like products from such countries as now have favored-nation agreements with her, including Venezuela, Spain, Switzerland, Russia, Denmark, Japan, Sweden, Norway, Austria-Hungary, and Argentina, while it is claimed that the Republic of France will automatically claim far-reaching concessions from our neighbor at the north as her rightful due. Is this liberal Laurier government to voluntarily shackle her fiscal freedom, with no compensating advantage to herself? Is the dominant political party of Canada to jeopardize its supremacy and run the gantlet of partisan denunciation with no helpful motive in mind?

Oh, no, Mr. President. The surplus agricultural products of Canada are piled mountain high on every acre of her cultivated soil, and it is to move this tremendous crop, now ripening in the fields and peacefully reposing in the storehouses and granaries in every Province of her territory, that she makes the sacrifice necessary to its profitable and immediate conversion into American money, and the Senate is, I fear, about to place the stamp of its approval upon an arrangement so unfair and unjust to the tillers of our own fields. In my judgment, sir, this unfortunate concession is literally steeped in rancor and ruin, and in its ultimate consequences will make less remunerative and less attractive the vocation of the American husbandman. It was neither necessary nor desirable. Our trade with Canada over the high wall of protection on the same terms as with England and France and Germany has yielded a net return far in excess of anything that can possibly come to us as a result of this new device, and it is, indeed, scanty reward for the faithfulness and the constancy of the American farmer, whose devotion to his country on the field of battle and in the forum is one of the proudest boasts of our national life. Sir, this will shake his faith in the just leadership of men, and in the heat and burden of the day he will ponder over this inglorious surrender to his rivals and judge with sharper scrutiny the hidden motive for your course. And even if we who oppose you are wrong in our belief we shall at least feel some compensation for our course in braving the rising tide of public criticism and the disapproval of our temporary leaders in the unselfish solicitude we feel for the joint welfare of our citizens, producers and consumers alike.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I would like to ask if there is anyone else who desires to proceed this afternoon and speak upon the pending bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have an amendment here that I would like to have voted on this afternoon. It will not take a great while, though. The discussion will be short. I desire to offer the amendment I send to the Clerk's desk, and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That on and after the day following the taking effect of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the following articles when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila) the following rates of duty, namely:

Lead dross, lead bullion or base bullion, lead in pigs and bars, lead in any form not specially provided for in an act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes, approved August 5, 1909, old refuse lead run into blocks and bars, and old scrap lead fit only to be remanufactured; all the foregoing, 1⅛ cents per pound; lead in sheets, pipe, shot, glaziers' lead, and lead wire, 1¼ cents per pound.

Mr. REED. As a matter of inquiry, do I understand the Senator is going to ask for a vote this afternoon on this amendment?

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes.

Mr. REED. Then, in order that there may be an attendance, I make the point of no quorum. That is, if the yeas and nays are to be called for.

Mr. BRISTOW. I did not have in mind to call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. REED. Then I do not make the point of no quorum.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to state before the amendment is voted upon that it reduces the duty on lead bullion from 2½ cents per pound to 1⅝ cents per pound. The duty on lead contained in lead ore is 1½ cents a pound. This would fix the duty on lead bullion at 1⅝ cents, or one-eighth cent a pound more than the duty on lead contained in the ore, giving the smelters a protection of $2.50 a ton, which, according to all the evidence I have been able to find, ably compensates for the difference in the cost of smelting ores in our country and any other country in the world.

That is all I care to say. These facts will not be disputed, in my judgment, and I ask for a vote upon that amendment, if there is no one who cares to discuss it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will say that I am not calling for the yeas and nays, because on the amendments which have been heretofore presented the vote has been so decisive against amending this bill that I am convinced the result would be the same on these amendments that it has been on the amendments which have been voted upon when the roll has been called. I simply want to make the record clear that I have done all I could to amend the bill so as to take the duties off of products that are controlled by monopolies, since it removes the duties upon the products that are not controlled by monopolies and duties that have not been complained of, and which it is admitted here have never been a burden to the American people.

I send to the desk the following amendment and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That on and after the day following the taking effect of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the following articles when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila) the following rates of duty, namely:

Chrome yellow, chrome green, and all other chromium colors in the manufacture of which lead and bichromate of potash or soda are used, in pulp, dry, or ground in or mixed with oil or water, 3⅜ cents per pound.

Orange mineral, 2½ cents per pound.

Red lead, 1⅝ cents per pound.

Vermilion reds, when not containing quicksilver, but made of lead containing lead, 4⅛ cents per pound.

White lead, and white pigment containing lead, dry or in pulp, or ground or mixed with oil, 1⅝ cents per pound.

Lead: Acetate of, white, 2¼ cents per pound; brown, gray, or yellow, 1¼ cents per pound; nitrate of, 1⅛ cents per pound; litharge, 1¼ cents per pound.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to state that this amendment relates to the products of lead bullion, and it takes the same amount of duty off of the products of the lead bullion that was taken off of the lead bullion, so as to equalize the duties on the white lead and the red lead and the products of lead which are used by the people in their domestic affairs.

I made an effort as best I could two years ago to have these duties reduced. At that time I sought to prevent the raising of the duties in the Senate over the amount fixed in the bill when it passed the House. I believe that if these amendments could be incorporated into this bill they would be enacted into law, because up to this time I do not believe there has been a single amendment offered to the Canadian bill that would have in any way jeopardized its passage or its signing by the President. And in my judgment the refusal to amend the bill is practically a refusal to take the duties off of these products which the trusts control.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That on and after the day following the taking effect of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the following articles, when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), the following rates of duty, namely:

Type metal, 1½ cents per pound on the lead contained therein; new types, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. REED. How much reduction is that?

Mr. BRISTOW. From 25 to 15.

The reciprocity bill gives to the newspapers of the country free print paper and confers what the newspapers think will be a very great favor.

Now, I do not see why it is not just as fair to help the country printer. The duty on type is 25 per cent ad valorem. The duty on print paper has been about 10 per cent.

Now, this Canadian bill takes all the duty off of print paper and leaves the full duty of 25 per cent on the type which the country printer uses. There is no type imported into the United States to amount to anything. I think there was about $13,000 worth last year. So this 25 per cent serves no purpose, unless it is to bar importations. And, in the interest of equity, this amendment should be adopted.

I will not ask for a vote upon this amendment to-day. I will be glad if it can go over until to-morrow, because I am anxious to have a roll call on it, and I do not want to inconvenience the Senators who have depended on there being no vote here this afternoon. To-morrow we will have a full vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This amendment, then, will be the pending amendment to-morrow.

Mr. BRISTOW. I can withdraw the amendment for the present and offer it to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas withdraws his amendment, there having been no action thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, under the rule that has been adopted by the Senate there will be no opportunity for the discussion of any one of these amendments to-morrow, as we are to proceed to vote on each amendment without discussion. I have presented one amendment, which I will ask the Secretary to read, prefacing that reading with the statement that, inasmuch as we will by the enactment of this law deprive the northern farmer of all protection upon his own products, we ought at least to place him as near as it is possible to do so in a position that will equalize to some extent his commercial relations with the Canadian farmer.

Now, the Canadian pact, with Great Britain giving preferential rates, fixes a price that the Canadian farmer must pay for everything he purchases, assuming, of course, that he always pays the amount of the tariff levied, a sum very much less than the American farmer has to pay for those things which are necessary for his business.

I introduce this amendment, and will ask a vote on it to-morrow. I will ask no vote on it to-day, but will to-morrow.

I am introducing it on the principle that we ought to treat the American farmer about as well as we treat the Canadian farmer. I am still one of those who believe that the Canadian farmer is not much better than the American farmer. I am still one who believes that the American farmer is, after all, a white man. I am opposed to any rule that says that the other residents of the United States may ride in a parlor car, but that the American farmer must be satisfied with a Jim Crow car. And I am trying to fit up his car in this reciprocity agreement so it will look a little, at least in its trimmings, like that in which the protected industries are about to ride.

I ask that the Secretary read the amendment, so that Senators will understand it, and then I will call for a vote upon it to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. Add as a new section the following:

SEC. 4. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the articles hereinafter enumerated, the product or manufacture of any foreign country, when imported therefrom into the United States or any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), in lieu of the duties now levied, collected, and paid, the following duties, namely:

Earthenware, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Tinware, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Wire of all kinds, 10 per cent ad valorem.
Hats, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Sugar, 35 per cent ad valorem.
Carpets, 17½ per cent ad valorem.
Oilcloth, 25 per cent ad valorem.
Furniture, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Cotton cloth, 25 per cent ad valorem.
Soap, 65 cents per 100 pounds.
Gloves and mitts, 22½ per cent ad valorem.
Hose, 25 per cent ad valorem.
Dress goods, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Automobile farm trucks, 22 per cent ad valorem.
Pianos, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Celluloid goods of all kinds, 5 per cent ad valorem.
Underclothing, 22½ per cent ad valorem.
Axes, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Shovels, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Scythes, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Stoves, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Chains (iron), 5 per cent ad valorem.
Knives and forks, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Agateware, 22½ per cent ad valorem.
Sewing machines, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Window glass, 7½ per cent ad valorem.
Rice, 50 cents per 100 pounds.
Figs, 40 cents per 100 pounds.
Jute bags, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Cotton thread, 17½ per cent ad valorem.
Glassware, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Lamp chimneys, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Brass goods, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Lamps, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Rubber coats, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Rubber boots and shoes, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Books, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Clocks and watches, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Bicycles, 20 per cent ad valorem.

That the articles mentioned in the following paragraphs, the product or manufacture of any foreign country, when imported therefrom into the United States or any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), shall be exempt from duty, namely:

Tin plate, free.
Salt, free.
Oranges, free.
Lemons, free.
Baskets, free.
Lead, free.

Mr. McCUMBER. The dealers in farm cereals evidently do not agree with those Senators who have declared that the present protective duties were in reality no protection to the farm products. As soon as this reciprocity agreement was promulgated the importers of Canadian barley purchased their barley from Canada, and, on the assumption that it was being held in bond, bought it for 30 cents a bushel less than they would have to pay for the American barley.

It stopped in bond in Milwaukee, in Detroit, and in other great cities. The last information I had was that it was still being held there in bond waiting for this reciprocity agreement to go into effect. As soon as this reciprocity agreement does go into effect it will liberate all of this vast amount, I think something over 500,000 bushels of barley, in those cities, and that will immediately give to these people who purchased it an advantage of about 30 cents a bushel, an amount more than was received per bushel, on the average, during the years from 1893 to 1897.

I think Senators will agree with me that the bill was not specially intended for the benefit of the brewers, and yet this great amount of the cereal product of Canada is not only to be transported into this country that the American brewer may have cheaper barley and cheaper malt while he sells American beer upon a protective basis, but, in addition to that, that he may have a benefit of 30 cents a bushel on all of the barley that he has purchased from Canada and imported into the United States in bond during the last six months or since this reciprocity agreement was first promulgated.

Mr. HEYBURN. I desire to ask a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Does the Senator think that the release of goods in bond is the equivalent of importation, and that the barley that is now in the country in bond would have the benefit of this legislation?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is a question in my mind.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know of no law now that will compel those who have purchased this crop and brought it into this country in bond to continue it, because practically up to the present time it is the product of a foreign country. But the moment that this bill goes into effect it will be the product of a foreign country that is entitled to admission free. In legal effect it is not admitted into this country, but the legal effect of this bill operating upon it will be the free admission into this country, and no tariff will be collected on it.

Mr. HEYBURN. The language of this bill, which says, "which shall hereafter be imported into this country," it would hardly seem to me to justify the release of a commodity already in the country, because there will be no act of importation connected with that commodity.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is not imported into this country in the sense of an import. As I just explained, it is still a foreign article in bond and is not an import into the country and is not recognized as an import into the country as long as it is in bond.

Therefore, Mr. President, I think it would apply, and that is why, to make that doubly certain, I have offered this amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would be in some doubt as to the application of this bill, should it become a law, to commodities already in the country, regardless of the fact that they came in under a contract that they should go out. However, if the Senator's amendment will make that absolutely certain it might possibly be of some advantage. But I do not believe that the release of a commodity in bond under a contract by law would come within the provisions of this bill affecting imports into the country.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is all a question of when it becomes an import. It is not an import so long as it is held in bond. It becomes an import and the tariff is levied on it the moment that it is released from bond. That is the point I want to make to the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then I want to ask, does the Senator think that this law if enacted would abrogate the contract under which that commodity came into the country? It came into the country under a law that is not affected by this bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no, Mr. President, it can be released at any time by paying the duty. There is no contract when it enters the country that it will be carried through the country. There is a contract that if it is not carried through the country that those who have brought it over the line will pay a duty. But the moment you release it from that duty, then you really import it at that time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. Just a moment. The contract is that they shall pay the duty.

Mr. McCUMBER. No.

Mr. LODGE. That is the contract under which it comes in in bond—that they shall either pay the duty or take it out.

Mr. McCUMBER. When it is imported.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is when it is released.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator allow me? The act of importation occurs when the article is taken out of bond and the duty is paid.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is right, I think.

Mr. LODGE. We have had that occur again and again in changing the tariff on articles that were in bond. They paid the rate of the new tariff or paid no tariff, if there was no rate in the new tariff. The importation does not take place until the article is released.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the view I have taken.

Mr. LODGE. Until it is imported; until it is presented to the customhouse for entry. Until that time the article is considered a foreign article and is not an article that is imported.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is right.

Mr. LODGE. There can be no doubt of it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think there can be no doubt about it. I will to-morrow ask for a vote upon the amendment—not to-day.

THE NATIONAL MONETARY COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the following communication, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
July 21, 1911.

The VICE PRESIDENT, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I hereby tender my resignation as a member of the National Monetary Commission.

Very respectfully,

P. C. KNOX.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair, under the provisions of the act of May 30, 1908, announces the appointment, in place of Hon. P. C. Knox, as a member of the National Monetary Commission, Hon. BOIES PENROSE, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, several days ago the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] addressed an inquiry to me as to when the Committee on Finance would proceed to the consideration of the bill introduced by him and referred to the committee which provides for a report of the Monetary Commission on the 4th day of December next. I advised him that as soon as the chairman of the Monetary Commission, Mr. Aldrich, arrived in Washington I hoped to confer with him and, after having ascertained his views, would have the bill considered by the committee.

Yesterday I had an opportunity to see the chairman of the Monetary Commission, and he informed me that it is his purpose to make the final report of the Monetary Commission on December 4 next, and that under his construction of the law the report would involve the final termination of the commission and its ceasing to exist.

I spoke to him about the measure pending before the committee, and he advised me that under the circumstances, as he explained them, legislation would not be necessary; but that, of course, as the bill is in entire harmony with the plan he proposed, he had no objection to its being acted on favorably by the Finance Committee.

Therefore I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report back favorably without amendment Senate bill 854.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, out of order, the Senator from Pennsylvania makes the following report from the Committee on Finance.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 854) to require the National Monetary Commission to make final report on or before December 4, 1911, and to repeal sections 17, 18, and 19 of the act entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws," approved May 30, 1908, the repeal to take effect December 5, 1911.

Mr. PENROSE. I would state that I had intended to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill at the present time, but owing to the absence of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], who, as is well known, is not favorable to the report of the bill, I will not ask for the present consideration of the measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the calendar.

RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4412) to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, it is not my purpose at this time to enter into the field of speculation and discuss the question as to whether the reciprocity agreement is a Republican or a Democratic measure. I may say, however, with perfect confidence that this agreement is not such an agreement as a Democratic President would have negotiated. It is not such an agreement as a Democratic House would have initiated upon its own responsibility. This is not such an agreement as a Democratic Senate would have ratified upon its own motion and responsibility.

For my own part, I believe in perfect free trade between the United States and the Dominion of Canada. Prior to the adoption of the Constitution the several States maintained tariffs against their neighbors. Every State, excepting New Jersey, maintained a system of tariff duties against every other State in the original confederation. Prior to the federation act of 1867 the several Provinces of Canada maintained tariff duties against each other.

Mr. President, the policy of free trade has contributed much to the prosperity of the American States. The policy of free trade has contributed much to the prosperity of the Canadian Provinces.

Mr. President, if free trade between the States be a source of prosperity, if free trade among the Provinces be a cause of prosperity, why would not free trade between the States on the one hand and the Provinces on the other accelerate the progress of both and contribute to the prosperity of both? What reason can be assigned for maintaining high duties between Ohio and Ontario that would not justify high duties between Ohio and Kentucky? What reason can be imagined for obstructing trade between Minnesota and Manitoba that would not justify the obstruction of trade between Minnesota and Missouri?

Mr. President, there are eleven times as many people in the United States as there are in the entire Dominion of Canada. There are more people in the State of New York than there are in Canada. There are as many people in Pennsylvania as there are in the entire Dominion. There are half as many people in the State of Ohio as in Canada. There are one-fifth as many people in the State of Oklahoma as there are in the Dominion of Canada. Oklahoma produces one-sixth or one-seventh as much wheat as is grown in the Canadian Dominion. Oklahoma produces five times as much corn as is grown in the entire region to the northward. And Oklahoma produces 1,000,000 bales of cotton into the bargain. Why, sir, should a nation of 93,000,000 people shrink from trade and commerce with a dominion numbering less than 9,000,000 inhabitants? Can one Canadian put a thousand Americans to flight? Sir, if Canada had revolted, if she had joined the 13 Colonies, if she had become an integral part of the Union, would that have stayed the progress of our people or marred the destiny of our Republic?

Mr. President, if I could find it in my heart to vote a special privilege, a special favor to any class of American citizens, that class would be the American farmers. I realize that the farm is the foundation alike of individual and of national prosperity. It is the fountain not only of our prosperity, but of all our happiness and our well-being. If I could vote a special favor to any class of our people, certainly that class would be the occupants of the American farms; but it has been my proud faith that the American farmer has never asked a special favor at the hands of his Government. It has been my proud faith that the American farmer has never solicited a favor, has never received a favor at the hands of the Government, and has never accepted a special favor or a special privilege at the expense of his countrymen. The farmer has been the victim not the beneficiary of special privilege and protective duties. I have believed, sir, that the farmer demanded nothing but justice and equity; that he is unwilling to ask for more than justice; and that he is unwilling to accept less than justice.

Mr. President, what does this agreement propose to do? To allow the American people to secure to themselves the right and to avail themselves of the opportunity to sell a few articles to the people of Canada without being subjected to tariff duties and restrictions. It proposes to allow the American people to buy a few articles from the people of Canada without paying a tax on those articles.

This agreement proposes merely this and nothing more: To allow our people to buy what they need and to sell what they do not need. This simple right, it is alleged, would be fraught with the most disastrous consequences, with the most disastrous possibilities. The right to buy what we need, the right to sell what we do not need, seems to be fraught and freighted with greater calamities than all the plagues that afflicted the Egyptians of old.

Mr. President, as a rule protectionists will not reduce their benefits to a common denominator of dollars and cents. The manufacturers who are the beneficiaries of protection will never express in dollars and cents the exact measure of their special privilege, and the exact measure of the profits which they receive without rendering any value in return. That, sir, is a precaution which I commend to the self-appointed champions of the American farmer on occasions like this and during discussions like this.

But, sir, in an unwary moment the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], followed by the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], had the candor to tell the Senate and to tell the country the exact mathematical measure of profits which the farmers of North Dakota and South Dakota and Minnesota derive from the existing tariff duties.

The two Senators from North Dakota demonstrated beyond all doubt, I assume, that on the one article of wheat alone the people of North and South Dakota and Minnesota realized $25,000,000 a year on account of the tariff; that the people of those three States realize annually on account of the tariff $25,000,000 on the barley that they produce; and on the article of flax alone they realize a profit of $4,000,000 a year on account of the tariff.

Mr. President, this is the terrible tragedy which we are about to perpetrate. The people of those three States, according not only to the admission, but according to the demonstration of the Senators, realized on those three articles last year the neat sum of $54,000,000 on account of the tariff. They received on those three products $54,000,000 more on account of the tariff than they would have received without the tariff.

According to this admission, the people of those three States realized $54,000,000 last year for nothing. What do they render in return for this benefit, for this bounty, for this benefaction conferred upon them by the tariff?

Mr. President, if they net $54,000,000 on account of the tariff, if they get $54,000,000 for nothing on account of the tariff, somebody—somewhere—parts with $54,000,000 a year for nothing on account of the tariff. It is needless to cavil as to who pays the $54,000,000. If these people get it, somebody pays it. No matter who pays it, they get nothing in return. Under this agreement the people of those three States will be deprived of the privilege of getting $54,000,000 a year for nothing, and somebody somewhere in the United States will be afforded the opportunity to retain $54,000,000 a year, instead of parting with that amount as a bonus, as a pension, to the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, and Minnesota.

There are 3,100,000 people living in those three States. That, sir, is $18 apiece. It is about $80 for every family in the three States which I have enumerated—a bounty, a pension, a tribute levied on their fellow citizens for their exclusive benefit, a benefit for which they render no service, no value in return.

Now, why should we levy a tribute upon 90,000,000 people, or upon any portion of 90,000,000 people, to grant an annual gratuity to the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, and Minnesota? There are no better people 'neath the shining sun; there are no better people under our spangled flag than the citizens of the three States I have named. But, sir, whence did they derive the right, where did they obtain a title, to levy a tribute upon their countrymen and to exact $54,000,000 a year for nothing in return?

Now, that is the disaster which we meditate. That is the tragedy we are about to perpetrate upon the worthy citizens of the States I have named.

The junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] went a step further, and he admitted, nay, he demonstrated, that all the farmers derive an annual benefit of $300,000,000 on account of the existing tariff, and he complains that we are about to rob them of the right to collect the $300,000,000 for naught in return. He complains that we are about to inflict upon them an act of high-handed injustice in denying to them the right to collect $300,000,000 through the instrumentality of the tariff without rendering one cent of value or one cent of service in exchange for this munificent bounty.

Mr. President, I do not doubt that it could be demonstrated that an equal bounty is enjoyed by the woolen manufacturers in the United States. I believe it could be demonstrated beyond doubt that the annual enhancement of the profits of the manufacturer of woolen and worsted goods would more than pay for every sheep in the United States every year. But we have never had such an admission, much less have we ever had such a demonstration at the hands of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] or the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. President, the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], reenforced by several other able and eloquent Senators, has proven that the Dominion of Canada has more than 200,000,000 acres of land that can be sown to wheat. They have demonstrated to my perfect satisfaction that the vast acres of Canada are capable of producing 4,000,000,000 bushels of wheat every year. Yet, Mr. President, that is a larger production than has ever been witnessed during a single year since the world began.

The Senators from North Dakota seem to think that constitutes 4,000,000,000 reasons for opposing reciprocity. To my mind it constitutes 4,000,000,000 reasons for favoring reciprocity. When I have a neighbor who can produce 4,000,000,000 bushels of wheat as the years roll around, I desire to remain on borrowing terms with such a neighbor.

Mr. President, when I think of all the centuries this Republic is to endure; when I think of the countless generations of our posterity yet unborn; when I think of the millions of mouths that are to be fed during all the ages, I rejoice, sir, that adjoining our Republic for more than 3,000 miles is a fertile and fruitful region capable of producing 4,000,000,000 bushels of wheat every year as the centuries come and go.

Sir, I can not agree with those statesmen who think, or seem to think, it were better for the United States if the Dominion of Canada, instead of being a fertile region, were a frozen sea; instead of being a land of fruitful fields and gardens, were a burning, barren desert. I rejoice at the prosperity of our neighbor, and I have a resolute purpose to enhance and to share that prosperity.

Let us in transit contrast the revenue which the people of three States derive from three articles on account of the tariff with the revenue which the Government receives from the same articles imported from Canada on account of the tariff.

According to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] the farmers of the three States in question receive an annual profit of four millions a year on flaxseed in consequence of the duty, while the Government receives a revenue of $352,600.

On wheat those people receive an annual profit of $25,000,000 on account of the duty and the Government enjoys a revenue of only $38,096.

On barley the net profits of these people on account of the duty aggregate $25,000,000, while the Government receives a generous income from the duty on barley amounting to $726.

It is noteworthy to observe that by remitting the duty on corn imported from Canada the Government surrenders an annual income amounting to $654, and the remission of the duty on rye subjects the Government to an annual loss of revenue aggregating $5.

Mr. President, the revenue arising from imported eels and smelts is more than $100,000, but, sir, when eels are placed on the free list I look for an exodus of eels out of Canada—I expect to see the United States overrun with Canadian eels. The eel industry in the United States will be destroyed. There will be eels in front of us, eels to the right of us, and eels to the left of us, but some enemy of reciprocity will rush to the rescue and assume the rôle of St. Patrick and immortalize himself by ridding the land of these reptiles.

Mr. President, for nearly 100 years protection has been demanded against the pauper laborer of the Old World because he was a pauper. Now, sir, protection is demanded against the thrifty denizens of the New World because he is thrifty.

Witness the reversal of protectionist arguments. In the beginning it was argued that our industries were infant; that with ample protection we could stimulate the growth of our industries until domestic production would overtake and equal domestic consumption. Sir, witness the marvelous change. For more than a hundred years the tariff was unavailing to the farmer. During only the last three years, it is asserted, has he become the beneficiary of protective duties; but, sir, the time rapidly approaches—it is argued, it is admitted, that the time rapidly approaches—when the domestic production of wheat will not equal the domestic consumption of wheat, and, in view of that catastrophe, we must levy a tariff upon the importations of wheat from Canada. Nay, sir, the prospect of famine necessitates the imposition of a duty so that the pound of flesh may be cut nearest the heart.

I heard the eloquent Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD], in one of the most eloquent addresses delivered in this debate, picture the distress that prevails in the tenement district of New York City. He revealed the touching truth that in this congested section there are more than 1,200 human beings to the acre; he argued that they had not sufficient room; that they had not enough sunlight; that they had not enough air to breathe; and I wonder, Mr. President, how much it would add to the material comfort of those miserable wretches to levy a tax upon the bread they eat.

We hear Senators in this place insisting on a high tariff on wheat; we hear "most potent, grave, and reverend signiors"; we hear enlightened Senators; we hear civilized human beings demanding that we tax the crust upon the lips of hunger. Sir, shall we make merchandise of misery and declare a dividend upon famine? Mr. President, had such statesmen lived in the elder time they would have imposed a prohibitive tariff upon the manna that descended from heaven. They ask us to avert the calamity which might possibly ensue from a remission of the tax upon bread.

Mr. President, so long as Canadian wheat will feed the hungry, so long as Canadian lumber will shelter the homeless, why should we refuse to accept the blessings placed at our door by Him who fashioned the universe itself? We all agree that the vast forests primeval, stretching 1 mile south of the Canadian line, are a great national asset, ministering to the wants and contributing to the comfort of our people, building the homes of our people; but we do not all agree that the vast Canadian forests stretching 1 mile to the northward of this imaginary line are a natural blessing that would minister to the comfort of our people, that would build the homes of our countrymen. Nay, sir, we demand that a high tariff wall shall be erected to shield the American people against the blessings and benefactions of Almighty God. This is statesmanship; this, perhaps I should say, is statecraft.

Mr. President, I wish to say a few words touching alliances now and hereafter. It is true that the Democrats in this body have changed their alliances from time to time. We are governed by the laws of war. We make our alliances not from choice but from necessity. It is true that for the present we are following the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. Mr. President, for my part, I am willing to follow anybody that is going in my direction. I am willing to follow the senior Senator from Pennsylvania when he is going in my direction, when he is going in the right direction, when he is going in the direction of lower duties. I will go as far, I will go as fast as will the Senator from Pennsylvania, in the direction of lower duties—thus far, but no further. I am not at all fastidious about the leaders whom I follow.

The junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] stated the situation the other day when he declared that it was a little striking to see the free-trade Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the high protectionist from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] blowing out the gas and creeping under the same political counterpane.

But, Mr. President, that is a low-tariff bed. The Senator from Mississippi and myself are reposing upon that couch, and we have "compassion and a bed." Whoever seeks to slumber there will be thrice welcome. Just as striking is it to see the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] occupying the same couch and locked in each other's affectionate embrace. [Laughter.] On this side we are not at all fastidious about our bedfellows. We had just as soon repose in the brawny arms of the Senator from Pennsylvania as to rest in the sinuous arms of the Senator from Utah. [Laughter.] It is not exactly a question of taste. Whoever is going in the direction of lower duties is going in our direction; he is fighting our battle; he is our ally, and so long as he goes in that direction he may expect, and he will receive, our unshaken fidelity.

I see the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] strenuously resisting the reciprocity agreement, and I would rather fight side by side with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] in favor of reducing duties, than to fight side by side with the Senator from New Hampshire in resisting the reduction of those duties.

Mr. President, there seem to be other allies engaged in this contest. As I remember the testimony of Mr. Allen, a professional lobbyist of New York and the professed representative of the National Grange, before the Finance Committee, he stated that a representative of the American Protective Tariff League had signified a sympathy with the contest which he was waging against the reduction of duties on farm products, a sympathy with the contest which he was waging in behalf and in defense of the American farmer. The Protective Tariff League resisting a measure which exposes the farmers to foreign competition! Whence their solicitude in behalf of the American farmer?

Mr. Allen testified before the Finance Committee that Mr. Hastings, president of the Pulp and Paper Association, and Mr. Lyman, secretary of the Pulp and Paper Association, had signified an equal solicitude for the protection of the farmer against ruinous Canadian competition. Why should Mr. Hastings, why should Mr. Lyman contribute of their money to a campaign waged exclusively in behalf of the American farmer? Why should Mr. William M. Woods, president of the American Woolen Co., commonly denominated as the Woolen Trust—this agreement does not reduce the duty on woolen fabrics; this agreement does not reduce the duty on raw wool—feel such a tender solicitude in behalf of the American farmer? Why should he be willing to share the golden profits which he realizes from protection in defense of the farmer unless he does so in defense of the whole protective system?

Mr. Bronson, secretary of the American Lumber Manufacturers' Association, attested the same generosity. He was willing to divorce himself, as he stated, from a portion of his earnings in order to aid and abet Mr. Allen in his valiant defense of the American farmer. Has there ever been an exhibition of such splendid magnanimity, such unprecedented devotion to the farmer? Why should he be willing to "split the pot" with Mr. Allen in defense of the farmer against Canadian competition? [Laughter.]

Mr. Bronson is secretary of the concern presided over by the well-known Mr. Edwin Hines. Mr. Bronson, after we adjourned in March, issued a circular letter, a copy of which I have in my possession, in which he stated that the defeat of the Canadian agreement at the regular session was largely due to the activities of his association. Mr. President, I do not believe that. I do not believe that the activities of Mr. Bronson or of Mr. Hines and their association had anything to do with the defeat of reciprocity at the regular session. I think that is an exhibition of vainglory.

Those are some at least of Mr. Allen's allies and the allies of the grange. They profess to be waging war against the Canadian agreement to shield the American farmer against the Canadian farmer. The sinews of war are, however, not coming from the farmers themselves, but from these disinterested philanthropists who are the beneficiaries of the protective system.

Mr. President, the time is near at hand when Democrats will be called upon to change their alliance here in the Senate. We will change our alliance without any remorse, without any compunction, and without any sense of disloyalty to our former allies. It comes to pass, at least apparently, that if we desire to reduce the tariff on bread, we must cooperate with the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Massachusetts and by such a cooperation overcome the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW]. On the other hand, it appears that when we desire to reduce the duty on clothing we must cooperate with the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Wisconsin to overcome the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Massachusetts. That is the path of duty; and so far as I am concerned I shall pursue that path without any feeling of self-reproach. I am as willing to progress with the standpatters when they progress as I am unwilling to stand pat with the insurgents when they for the moment stand pat.

I know that if we could revise the tariff in an ideal way we would reduce it on everybody at once; but if we postpone a revision of the tariff until we can at one and the same time reduce it on the farmer and reduce it on the manufacturer, if we postpone the revision of the tariff until we can reduce the duties enjoyed by the producer of the raw material and reduce the duties on the producer of the finished product, sir, when will we begin, where will we begin, how will we begin, and who will be our allies? I repeat, we are beginning now, not where we would, but where we must. I doubt the dawning of that idyllic day when everybody who enjoys the benefit of a tariff will agree at one and the same time to take it off of everybody who is the beneficiary of a tariff at one and the same time.

Let me say, in passing, in regard to the free-list bill, that I will vote for that measure, not as a compensation to the farmer, but because the entire protective-tariff system is wrong. Every protective duty is wrong. When you remit such a duty you do right. When you deprive a man of that which he had no right to retain, you inflict upon him no injustice and you incur no obligation to vouchsafe to him any sort of compensation. I should have voted to attach the free-list bill to the reciprocity agreement but for the fact that the President declared in his Chicago speech that such a course would result in the defeat of both measures. I make no comment upon the propriety of such a declaration, but to me that hint was sufficient, whether I be wise or otherwise. I will vote for the farmers' free-list bill because the duties imposed upon those articles are wrong and because common justice dictates their removal and justice to the farmer demands their removal.

Mr. President, I discriminate between conferring a benefit upon a manufacturer by imposing a duty and conferring a benefit upon a manufacturer by remitting a duty. I have no hostility to the American manufacturers. I wish them all the utmost prosperity consistent with common justice; and I do not hesitate to render them any reasonable and just benefit which can follow the remission of an unjust tax. I begin here and now because it is an opportunity at hand.

I do not hesitate to say that during the remainder of this session I intend to follow the leadership of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I intend to aid and abet him in a reduction of duties on cotton. I intend to aid and abet him in a reduction of duties on woolen goods. I intend to follow the leadership of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. I intend to follow him in his effort to reduce the duty on steel and iron. I intend to follow him in his effort to effect a reduction of duties on linoleum and on other necessaries of life. I intend to follow the gallant and spirited Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] in his effort to reduce extortionate duties on sugar and in the effort to alleviate the burden of the people in reducing the exorbitant duties on rubber.

I intend to follow them, and they have no protection against me as a follower. I intend to follow them whether they will or no. They may quarantine, and yet I say to them, as Ruth said of Naomi, "Wherever thou goest I will go," so long as they are attempting a reduction of duties. And I lament to part with such excellent companions when they favor the maintenance of high duties. I feel in conscience bound to differ from them and to insist upon a reduction of duties where they would say nay.

Now, I say as to another alliance, it is not a matter of choice. In fact, it would have been agreeable to me if the opportunity had first arisen to aid the farmers and the Senators from the agricultural States to drive down extortionate duties upon the manufactured articles which the farmers use.

I wish, indeed, that occasion might have arisen first. Yet I do not hesitate to join with the manufacturers to reduce needless and deceptive duties on farm products, and I do not doubt that I shall then have the opportunity and the pleasure of joining with the farmers to reduce unreasonable exactions upon the part of the manufacturers.

I believe that the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] gave utterance to the truth when he said a house divided against itself can not stand, when he said this system can not stand half protected and half unprotected.

Mr. President, one or the other of these eventualities must happen: Republicans will either be driven to restore the duties on farm products or else the farmers will assist the Democrats to reduce the duties on manufactured products.

I disguise nothing as to my attitude. I am now reducing the duties on the farm products. I expect and I trust, through the aid of the farmers themselves, to reduce these extortionate taxes which have shielded the manufacturers against foreign competition.

To my mind that is the plain path of duty. Other men of greater experience and superior wisdom take a different view of the situation. But here every Senator is upon his own responsibility, and I take that course which I believe will best lead to the demolition of the entire temple of protection.

When I see the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] denouncing this measure because it lays destructive hand upon that temple I for one shall never stay the hand of that destroyer, but rather will I speed that hand. In that I do not mean that we should by violence overturn existing industries. Reductions should be made gradually. Industries should be given time and opportunity to adapt and adjust themselves to the change and the changing conditions.

I might admonish my friend not to venture out to sea in a vessel that was unseaworthy, and yet should I see him in mid-ocean I would not advise the scuttling of the ship merely because it was not the best that plys the sea.

For my own part I hope to see this Republic become not only the greatest industrial nation upon the earth, but become the greatest commercial nation upon the earth. What we need most of all things is wider foreign markets. The greater the number of our markets and the more stable our industries the more stable are prices, the more stable are wages, the more certain and enduring is the prosperity of our people. I indulge the hope, I indulge the ambition to see the United States become the first and foremost commercial power 'neath the blazing sun.

I favor those policies which I believe will contribute to a consummation so devoutly to be wished. I resist all those measures which I believe will obstruct and hinder trade, for I believe that trade is a blessing to be encouraged, not a curse to be prohibited. On this occasion and on all occasions, erring, perhaps, often in judgment, yet at all times I shall cherish but one hope, but one purpose, and one ambition, and that is to extend the influence, the trade, the commerce, the glory, and the destiny of this Republic.

Mr. President, to illustrate Democratic fidelity to their allies and to their principles, to show that our erstwhile allies can not shake their gory locks at us, I beg to cite the following authority and to submit the following quotations, heretofore cited and submitted in the Senate.

On June 22, 1909 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 3636) Mr. MCCUMBER, of North Dakota, said:

The wheat acreage to-day is producing a surplus of wheat which must be thrown into the world's market, thereby keeping down the price of the home product, tariff or no tariff.

On the 22d of June, 1909, in answer to the question whether he believed that the duty on wheat affected the price of wheat, Mr. CUMMINS, of Iowa, said:

I do not.

Further, he says:

I want Senators to remember that I come from a State which probably puts more in value into the channels of trade every year than any State in the Union in agricultural products. We will this year supply the people of the United States and the people of the world with a product that will surpass the value of $700,000,000, and it is idle for even an enthusiast to assert that the price of these products is directly affected by the protective tariff.

On the 10th of May, 1909, in the Senate, Mr. NELSON, of Minnesota, said:

I do not recall the millions of bushels produced in the State of Minnesota, but I desire to tell the Senator that the tariff on wheat which is on the statute books has not done us a particle of good. It would be like a tariff on cotton, because up to this time we have been exporting from 150,000,000 to 250,000,000 bushels of wheat a year. The price of our wheat is fixed by the Liverpool price—the export price—and no duty up to this time has helped us.

On the 2d of August, 1909, Mr. BRISTOW, of Kansas, had the following to say:

Schedule G—relating to agricultural products—has been increased about 2 per cent. There should have been reductions in this schedule. They could have been made without the slightest injury to American agriculture. High duties are placed on semitropical fruits, such as lemons and raisins, and on pineapples and rice, and on flour biscuits made by the Cracker Trust, for the benefit of a few individuals in limited sections of the country; and a high duty is placed on corn and wheat to make the great mass of farmers believe that they are being favored. But it is an insult to the intelligence of the American farmer to place a protective duty on corn when we are producing more corn than all the other nations combined. We sell our wheat and corn and the products thereof in the markets of the world, and no duty which might be imposed can affect the price which the farmer receives for them. We raise far more wheat, corn, cattle, and hogs than we consume, and the result is that the farmer can not be protected by a tariff because the price of his produce is fixed by the world market.

On the 24th day of May, 1909, during the tariff debate, Mr. CLAPP, from Minnesota, said:

There is another thing to be considered. Along this Canadian border, with nothing but an imaginary line across, it is idle, in my judgment, and idle in my experience and observation, to talk about any great difference in wages on one side or the other.

When a man by a day's walk can go from a mill on that side to a mill on this side, from a field on that side to a field on this side, that imaginary international boundary line will not maintain any very different scale of wages long upon one side or the other. And they are the same class of men. When we talk about a protective tariff and think of the overcrowded countries of Europe, and of the cheap wage scale of Europe—when we realize that the wage earner in Europe must and oftentimes has to borrow and incur a great expense to come to this country—there may be wisdom in attempting to maintain an artificial wall between this country and ours, but when we look to sparsely settled Canada, when we look to a class of men enjoying a wage scale practically the equal of our own wage scale, it seems to me that sooner or later the American people have got to recognize the impossibility of forever maintaining an artificial wall where there is no natural reason for the establishment or maintenance of that wall. Sooner or later, Mr. President, we shall have to recognize on a broader plane this natural relation to Canada. I predict here in the Senate to-day that the time will come when, even with the protective policy as firmly implanted as it is to-day in our general policy, yet in our tariff relation to Canada we will recognize that it must be limited largely upon the basis of revenue as required by that country and this.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, before closing this question, I want to make a few suggestions briefly.

One would suppose from the remarks of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], who has just taken his seat, that protection applied only to the owner of the manufacturing plant or to the owner of the mine or to the proprietor of the enterprise. He loses sight of the fact that when you protect the manufacturer you protect the man who makes the machinery of the manufacturer, you protect the man who produces the raw material that enters into it, you protect every artisan and laborer who contributes to the building of the plant of the manufacturer. When you protect the manufacturer you protect every man who depends upon the manufacturer for employment.

When you protect the mine or the mine owner you protect every man who works in the mine in the retention of his employment. When you protect any industry you protect those who contribute to the construction of the appliances of that industry and those who labor in that industry, those who receive the benefits that come from employment, and they are millions, while those who own the plants are only thousands.

All of the argument of the Senator from Oklahoma has been directed against the thousands, and he has lost sight of the fact that there are millions whose industry and livelihood are protected under the same provisions of law and system of government.

Mr. LODGE. If there is no one who wishes to continue the debate on the reciprocity bill this afternoon, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, July 22, 1911, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 22, 1911.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SMOOT and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

COLUMBUS MEMORIAL COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Acting Secretary of War, submitting a special estimate of appropriation of $2,500 required by the Columbus Memorial Commission for unveiling and dedicating the Columbus memorial, etc., which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed. (S. Doc. No. 73.)

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a petition of the city council of Greenville, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to authorize Federal aid for certain local improvements, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. CULLOM presented petitions of sundry citizens of New York and Texas and of the members of the Presbyterian Young People's Summer Conference, praying for the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MCLEAN presented a memorial of the Michael Davitt Club, of Hartford, Conn., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. OLIVER presented a memorial of the John Mitchell Club, of Hazelwood, Pittsburg, Pa., and a memorial of the Ancient Order of Hibernians of Uniontown, Pa., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. JONES presented memorials of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union, of Colton, Garfield County, Alderdale, Spangle, Howard, Mohler, Connell, Reardon, Canyon, Medical Lake, Leahy, Wilson Creek, Ruff, Mansfield, Starbuck, Nelson, Farmer, Hatton, Diamond, Endicott, Oakesdale, Plaza, Meridian, Baird, Eltopia, Byron, St. Andrews, Uniontown, and Spring Valley, all in the State of Washington, remonstrating against the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. O'GORMAN presented memorials of sundry citizens of Watertown, Glen Park, and Brownville, all in the State of New York, remonstrating against the proposed reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Kings County, Little Falls, Lockport, Ulster County, and Westchester County, all in the State of New York, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the North Side Board of Trade, of New York City, N. Y., praying for the ratification of treaties of arbitration between the United States, Great Britain, and France, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the National Association of Automobile Manufacturers, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the so-called corporation-tax law permitting corporations to make returns at the end of their fiscal years, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Society of the Descendants of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence, praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the incorporation of that society, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of New York, veterans of the War with Spain, praying for the enactment of legislation awarding campaign badges to ex-soldiers who participated in the War with Spain, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of the Patrick Keenan Association of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the treatment of American citizens by the Russian Government on account of nationality, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. POMERENE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 2792) to provide for the support and maintenance of bastards in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 106) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 3083) granting an increase of pension to Josiah W. Poorman; and

A bill (S. 3084) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Board; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROOT:

A bill (S. 3085) granting a pension to Melville A. Hays; and

A bill (S. 3086) granting an increase of pension to Robert Harcourt (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 3087) for the relief of the Plant Investment Co., of New York, N. Y. (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BRIGGS:

A bill (S. 3088) to transfer Capt. Frank E. Evans from the retired to the active list of the Marine Corps; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

RECIPROCITY WITH CANADA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Concurrent or other resolutions are in order. If there are none, the morning business is closed. The Chair lays before the Senate, under its unanimous-consent agreement, House bill 4412.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4412) to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest the want of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Bourne	Bristow	Burton
Bailey	Bradley	Brown	Chamberlain
Bankhead	Brandegee	Bryan	Chilton
Borah	Briggs	Burnham	Clapp
Clark, Wyo.	Guggenheim	Nelson	Simmons
Clarke, Ark.	Heyburn	Newlands	Smith, Md.
Crane	Hitchcock	Nixon	Smith, Mich.
Crawford	Johnson, Me.	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.
Culberson	Johnston, Ala.	Oliver	Smoot
Cullom	Jones	Overman	Stephenson
Cummins	Kenyon	Page	Stone
Curtis	Kern	Paynter	Sutherland
Davis	La Follette	Penrose	Swanson
Dillingham	Lippitt	Perkins	Taylor
Dixon	Lodge	Poindexter	Townsend
Fletcher	McCumber	Pomerene	Watson
Foster	McLean	Reed	Wetmore
Gamble	Martin, Va.	Richardson	Williams
Gore	Martine, N. J.	Root	Works
Gronna	Myers	Shively

Mr. TAYLOR. My colleague [Mr. LEA] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. THORNTON] is temporarily absent from the Senate on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

Mr. MCCUMBER. I move to strike out line 12 of the amendment on page 1.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It does not require a motion; it has not been acted upon. The Senator from North Dakota modifies his amendment. The modification will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 1 strike out line 12 in the following words:

Sugar, 35 per cent ad valorem.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. MCCUMBER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I suggest that the amendment be read before the vote is taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the amendment will be again read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. 4. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the articles hereinafter enumerated, the product or manufacture of any foreign country, when imported therefrom into the United States or any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), in lieu of the duties now levied, collected, and paid, the following duties, namely:

Earthenware, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Tinware, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Wire of all kinds, 10 per cent ad valorem.
Hats, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Carpets, 17½ per cent ad valorem.
Oilcloth, 25 per cent ad valorem.
Furniture, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Cotton cloth, 25 per cent ad valorem.
Soap, 65 cents per 100 pounds.
Gloves and mitts, 22½ per cent ad valorem.
Hose, 25 per cent ad valorem.
Dress goods, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Automobile farm trucks, 22 per cent ad valorem.
Pianos, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Celluloid goods of all kinds, 5 per cent ad valorem.
Underclothing, 22½ per cent ad valorem.
Axes, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Shovels, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Scythes, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Stoves, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Chains (iron), 5 per cent ad valorem.
Knives and forks, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Agate ware, 22½ per cent ad valorem.
Sewing machines, 20 per ad valorem.
Window glass, 7½ per cent ad valorem.
Rice, 50 cents per 100 pounds.
Figs, 40 cents per 100 pounds.
Jute bags, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Cotton thread, 17½ per cent ad valorem.
Glassware, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Lamp chimneys, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Brass goods, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Lamps, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Rubber coats, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Rubber boots and shoes, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Books, 15 per cent ad valorem.
Clocks and watches, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Bicycles, 20 per cent ad valorem.

That the articles mentioned in the following paragraphs, the product or manufacture of any foreign country, when imported therefrom into the United States or any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), shall be exempt from duty, namely:

Tin plate, free.
Salt, free.
Oranges, free.
Lemons, free.
Baskets, free.
Lead, free.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I ask leave to amend my amendment by striking out the last line, line 25, on page 3.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered. Is there objection to the modification? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is thus modified. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3 strike out line 25, in the following words:

Lead, free.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota as modified.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. I do not know how the Senator from Maine would vote upon this amendment. I have no doubt as to how he would vote on the main proposition, as I have his instructions in regard thereto. In the meantime, without announcing that as to the main proposition, I transfer the pair I have with the Senator from Maine to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], but my understanding is that I am at liberty to vote on this amendment. I vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I have made an arrangement by which the pair of the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY] is transferred to the senior Senator from New Hampshire, thus enabling both the senior Senator from North Dakota and myself to vote. I therefore vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I am informed that in respect of all amendments to this bill he would vote "nay." I am therefore at liberty to do the same. I make this announcement for the day as relating to all amendments to the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. If the Senator from Vermont does not object, I should like to have him incorporate in the RECORD upon whose authority it is that he makes the statement as to the attitude of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I make the statement upon the authority of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], to whom I am referred by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] in a letter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont vote?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS. For fear that the RECORD might be somewhat obscure as to my meaning a moment ago in the transfer of my pair to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY], I meant to state that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] will stand paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. I desire this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] is absent for reasons well known to the Senate. He has a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. If my colleague were present and voting, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MCCUMBER (when his name was called). I desire to confirm the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] with reference to the transfer of my pair to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and the transfer of the pair of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS] to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. The Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Mississippi being paired, I am at liberty to vote. I vote "yea." I desire to say that this statement will stand with reference to all votes during the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If he were present and I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FOSTER (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. He is absent, but I am reliably informed if he were present he would vote "nay." Therefore I will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 64, as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bailey	Brown	Cummins	La Follette
Borah	Clapp	Dixon	McCumber
Bourne	Clarke, Ark.	Gronna	Nelson
Bristow	Crawford	Kenyon	Simmons

NAYS—64.

Bacon	Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Richardson
Bankhead	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Root
Bradley	Foster	Myers	Shively
Brandegee	Gamble	Newlands	Smith, Md.
Briggs	Gore	Nixon	Smith, Mich.
Bryan	Guggenheim	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.
Burnham	Heyburn	Oliver	Smoot
Burton	Hitchcock	Overman	Stephenson
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Owen	Stone
Chilton	Johnston, Ala.	Page	Swanson
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Paynter	Taylor
Crane	Kern	Penrose	Townsend
Culberson	Lippitt	Perkins	Watson
Cullom	Lodge	Poindexter	Wetmore
Curtis	Lorimer	Pomerene	Williams
Davis	McLean	Reed	Works

NOT VOTING—10.

du Pont	Lea	Sutherland	Warren
Frye	Percy	Thornton
Gallinger	Rayner	Tillman

So Mr. MCCUMBER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. It relates to three different schedules of the bill, but I am content to have one vote on the amendment as an entirety.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the following words in line 8, page 16, and in line 2, page 20, to wit: "Wheat, rye, oats, barley, and buckwheat," and insert at the end of line 3, page 3, and at the end of line 9, page 10, the words:

Wheat, 12½ cents per bushel.
Barley, 15 cents per bushel.
Oats, 8 cents per bushel.
Rye, 6 cents per bushel.
Buckwheat, 7 cents per bushel.

Strike out the word "Potatoes" in line 12, page 16, and in line 7, page 20, and insert at the end of line 9, page 3, and at the end of line 15, page 10, the words:

Potatoes, 15 cents per bushel.

Strike out the words "Flaxseed or linseed" in line 4, page 17, and in line 22, page 20, and insert before the words "Wheat flour," in line 4, page 3, and before the words "Wheat flour," in line 10, page 10, the words:

Flaxseed or linseed, 15 cents per bushel.

Strike out the following words in lines 5 and 6, page 16, and in line 24, page 19, to wit: "Live animals; cattle, horses and mules, swine, sheep, lambs, and all other live animals," and insert at the end of line 9, page 1, and at the end of line 4, page 9, the following words:

Cattle, if less than 1 year old, $1 per head; all other cattle, valued at not more than $14 per head, $2.50; if valued at more than $14 per head, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Swine, $1 per head.
Horses and mules, valued at $150 or less per head, $20 per head; if valued at over $150 per head, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Sheep, 1 year old or over, $1 per head; less than 1 year old, 50 cents per head.
All other live animals not specially provided for in this section, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Strike out in line 21, page 16, and in line 14, page 20, the words "Butter, cheese, and," and insert at the end of line 13, page 2, and at the end of line 20, page 9, the words:

Butter and cheese, 4 cents per pound.

Mr. NELSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I make the same announcement which I formerly made in regard to my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] being transferred to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA].

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I wish to make the same statement as before in regard to the pair of my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] and to say that, if present and voting, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. I will let this announcement stand for all other votes which may be taken to-day without repeating it. If the Senator from Maryland were present, and I were permitted to vote on this amendment, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 58, as follows:

YEAS—23.

Bailey	Clarke, Ark.	Gronna	Oliver
Borah	Crawford	Kenyon	Simmons

So Mr. NELSON's amendment was rejected.

Mr. SIMMONS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out on page 2, line 1 to line 16, inclusive, the following words:

Fresh meats: Beef, veal, mutton, lamb, pork, and all other fresh or refrigerated meats excepting game, 1½ cents per pound.
Bacon and hams, not in tins or jars, 1½ cents per pound.
Meats of all kinds, dried, smoked, salted, in brine, or prepared or preserved in any manner, not otherwise herein provided for, 1½ cents per pound.
Canned meats and canned poultry, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Extract of meat, fluid or not, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Lard and compounds thereof, cottolene and cotton stearine, and animal stearine, 1½ cents per pound.
Tallow, 40 cents per 100 pounds.

Insert on page 17, after line 11, the following words:

Fresh meats: Beef, veal, mutton, lamb, pork, and all other fresh or refrigerated meats excepting game.
Bacon and hams, not in tins or jars.
Meats of all kinds, dried, smoked, salted, in brine, or prepared or preserved in any manner, not otherwise herein provided for.
Canned meats and canned poultry.
Extract of meat, fluid or not.
Lard and compounds thereof, cottolene and cotton stearine, and animal stearine.
Tallow.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I offered that amendment when the bill was before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, but I did not then ask for a yea-and-nay vote upon it. I wish now to ask for a yea-and-nay vote upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). Again announcing the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], I vote "nay."

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). If my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] were present, he would vote "nay" upon this amendment.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 16, nays 64, as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bailey	Brown	Cummins	La Follette
Borah	Clapp	Dixon	McCumber
Bourne	Clarke, Ark.	Gronna	Nelson

Gallinger	Percy	Thornton

So Mr. SIMMONS's amendment was rejected.

Mr. SIMMONS. I now offer an amendment to put flour and cereals on the free list, and upon it I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out, on page 10, from line 10 to line 11, page 11, the following words:

Wheat flour and semolina, and rye flour, 50 cents per barrel of 196 pounds.
Oatmeal and rolled oats, including the weight of paper covering, 50 cents per 100 pounds.
Corn meal, 12½ cents per 100 pounds.
Barley malt, 45 cents per 100 pounds.
Barley, pot, pearled, or patent, one-half cent per pound.
Buckwheat flour or meal, one-half cent per pound.
Split peas, dried, 7½ cents per bushel of 60 pounds.
Prepared cereal foods, not otherwise provided for herein, 17½ per cent ad valorem.
Bran, middlings, and other offals of grain used for animal food, 12½ cents per 100 pounds.
Macaroni and vermicelli, 1 cent per pound.
Biscuits, wafers, and cakes, when sweetened with sugar, honey, molasses, or other material, 25 per cent ad valorem.
Biscuits, wafers, cakes, and other baked articles, composed in whole or in part of eggs or any kind of flour or meal, when combined with chocolate, nuts, fruits, or confectionery; also candied peel, candied popcorn, candied nuts, candied fruits, sugar candy, and confectionery of all kinds, 32½ per cent ad valorem.

And insert on page 16 of the bill, after line 14, the following words:

Wheat flour and semolina, and rye flour.
Oatmeal and rolled oats, including weight of paper covering.
Corn meal.
Barley malt.
Barley, pot, pearled, or patent.
Buckwheat flour or meal.
Split peas, dried.
Prepared cereal foods not otherwise provided for herein.

So Mr. SIMMONS's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

The act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," is hereby amended by striking out paragraph 121 of Schedule C thereof and inserting the following:

"121. Beams, girders, joists, angles, car-truck channels, T. T. columns and posts, or parts or sections of columns and posts, deck and bulb beams and building forms, together with all other structural shapes of iron or steel, whether plain, punched, or fitted for use, or whether assembled and manufactured, three-tenths of 1 cent per pound."

The said Schedule C in the act aforesaid, being paragraphs 117 to 199, both inclusive, is hereby further amended as follows, to wit:

"From and after the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the articles mentioned in the several paragraphs of said Schedule C, when imported from any foreign country into the United States, or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), 60 per cent only of the rates of duty which are in and by said paragraphs of said schedule prescribed; but the foregoing shall not apply to paragraph 121, which is hereinbefore repealed and a substitute reenacted therefor."

Mr. CUMMINS. Upon the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). Again making the announcement of the transfer of my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], and permitting that announcement to stand on all future amendments, I vote "nay."

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER], if present and voting, would vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 17, nays 64, as follows:

So Mr. CUMMINS's amendment was rejected.

Mr. CUMMINS. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section as follows:

The act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," is hereby amended by striking out paragraph 347 of Schedule J of said act and substituting therefor the following, as paragraph 347:

"347. Oilcloth for floors, linoleum, corticine, and all the fabrics or covering for floors made in part of oil or any similar product, whether plain, stamped, painted, or printed, or the composition of which forms designs or patterns, whether inlaid or otherwise, by whatever name known; and cork carpets, cork mats, oilcloth, or corticine mats, waterproof cloth, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber whether composed in part of india rubber or otherwise, 40 per cent ad valorem."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer the following amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add, after section 3 of the bill, the following new section:

SEC. 4. The act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," is hereby amended by striking out all of Schedule K thereof, being paragraphs 360 to 395, inclusive, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SCHEDULE K. WOOL AND MANUFACTURES THEREOF.

"360. All wool, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, shall be divided, for the purposes of this act, into the three following classes:

"361. Class 1, that is to say, merino, mestiza, metz, or metis wools, or other wools of merino blood, immediate or remote, Down clothing wools, and wools of like character with any of the preceding, including Bagdad wool, China lamb's wool, Castel Branco, Adrianople skin wool, or butcher's wool, and such as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Buenos Aires, New Zealand, Australia, Cape of Good Hope, Russia, Great Britain, Canada, Egypt, Morocco, and elsewhere, Leicester, Cotswold, Lincolnshire, Down combing wools, Canada long wools, or other like combing wools of English blood and usually known by the terms herein used, and all wools not hereinafter included in class 2.

"362. Class 2, that is to say, Donskoi, native South American, Cordova, Valparaiso, native Smyrna, and all such wools of like character as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Turkey, Greece, Syria, and elsewhere, excepting improved wools hereinafter provided for.

"363. Class 3, that is to say, the hair of the camel, Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals.

"364. The standard samples of all wools which are now or may be hereafter deposited in the principal customhouses of the United States, under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be the standards for the classification of wools under this act, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to renew these standards and to make such additions to them from time to time as may be required, and he shall cause to be deposited like standards in other customhouses of the United States when they shall be needed.

"365. Whenever wools of class 2 shall have been improved by the admixture of merino or English blood from their present character as represented by the standard samples now or hereafter to be deposited in the principal customhouses of the United States, such improved wools shall be classified for duty as class 1.

"366. The duty on wools of the first class shall be 40 per cent ad valorem.

"367. The duty upon wools of class 2 shall be 10 per cent ad valorem.

"368. The duty on wools on the skin shall be as follows: Class 1, 35 per cent ad valorem; class 2, 10 per cent ad valorem; the quantity and value of the wool to be ascertained under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

"369. Top waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, and garnetted waste, 30 per cent ad valorem.

"370. Shoddy, noils, wool extract, yarn waste, thread waste, and all other wastes composed wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, and not specially provided for in this section, 30 per cent ad valorem.

"371. Woolen rags, mungo, and flocks, 30 per cent ad valorem.

"372. Combed wool or tops, and all wools which have been advanced in any manner or by any process of manufacture beyond the washed or scoured condition, not specially provided for in this section, 45 per cent ad valorem.

"373. On yarns made wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, the duty shall be 50 per cent ad valorem.

"374. On cloths, knit fabrics, blankets, and flannels for underwear, composed wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloths, bunting, clothing, ready-made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, including shawls, whether knitted or woven, and knitted articles of every description made up or manufactured wholly or in part, felts not woven, and not specially provided for in this section, webbings, gorings, suspenders, braces, bandings, beltings, bindings, braids, galloons, edgings, insertings, flouncings, fringes, gimps, cords and tassels, ribbons, ornaments, laces, trimmings, and articles made wholly or in part of lace, embroideries and all articles embroidered by hand or machinery, head nets, nettings, buttons or barrel buttons, or buttons of other forms for tassels or ornaments, and manufactures of wool ornamented with beads or spangles of whatever material composed, any of the foregoing made of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, whether containing india rubber or not, 60 per cent ad valorem.

"375. Aubusson, Axminster, moquette, and chenille carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description; Saxony, Wilton, and Tournay velvet carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description; Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description; velvet and tapestry velvet carpets, figured or plain, printed on the warp or otherwise, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description; tapestry Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, printed on the warp or otherwise; treble ingrain, three-ply, and all chain Venetian carpets; wool Dutch and two-ply ingrain carpets; carpets of every description, woven whole for rooms; oriental, Berlin, Aubusson, Axminster, and similar rugs; druggets and bockings, printed, colored, or otherwise; all the foregoing, made of wool, or of which wool is the component material of chief value, 40 per cent ad valorem.

"376. Carpets and carpeting of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this section, 40 per cent ad valorem.

"377. Mats, rugs for floors, screens, covers, hassocks, bedsides, art squares, and other portions of carpets or carpeting made wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, and not specially provided for in this section, shall be subjected to the rate of duty herein imposed on carpets or carpeting of like character or description.

"378. Whenever, in any schedule of this act, the word 'wool' is used in connection with a manufactured article of which it is a component material, it shall be held to include wool of the sheep, whether manufactured by a woolen, worsted, felt, or any other process.

"379. All manufactures of hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other like animal, or of which any of the hair mentioned in paragraph 363 forms the component material of chief value, shall be subject to a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem."

Paragraph 583 of the free list of the act of August 5, 1909, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"583. Hair of the camel, Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals; hair of horse, cattle, and other like animals, cleaned or uncleaned, drawn or undrawn, but unmanufactured, not specially provided for in this section; and human hair, raw, uncleaned, and not drawn."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. First, before making the parliamentary inquiry, I will allow the Senator from Wisconsin to ask for the yeas and nays, which I suppose he rose to do.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. Now, a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Is the amendment divisible? I mean by that, I want to vote for all of it except the provision which places mohair and certain other materials on the free list. Against that I desire to vote if I can have it divided.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair imagines it is a divisible amendment, although he has not examined it.

Mr. BAILEY. I will state another form by which I can probably reach it. I will ask if it is in order to move to strike out that part of the amendment which places those articles on the free list.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. BAILEY. I move, then, to amend the amendment by striking out the provision which transfers certain materials of the manufacturer to the free list.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 6 of the amendment strike out from and including line 21, down to and including line 3 on page 7, in the following words:

Paragraph 583 of the free list of the act of August 5, 1909, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"583. Hair of the camel, Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals; hair of horse, cattle, and other like animals, cleaned or uncleaned, drawn or undrawn, but unmanufactured, not specially provided for in this section; and human hair, raw, uncleaned, and not drawn."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I merely wish to inquire if any debate is in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER], if present, would vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 16, nays 64, as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bailey	Brown	Cummins	La Follette
Borah	Clapp	Dixon	McCumber
Bourne	Clarke, Ark.	Gronna	Nelson

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill as new sections the following:

SEC. 4. The act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," is hereby amended by striking out all of Schedule I thereof, being paragraphs 313 to 332, inclusive, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"SCHEDULE I. COTTON MANUFACTURES.

"313. Cotton card laps, roping, sliver, roving, and cotton thread and cotton yarns of all kinds, 20 per cent ad valorem; cotton waste and flocks, manufactured or otherwise advanced in value, 20 per cent ad valorem.

"314. Cloth made of cotton, or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, not bleached, 20 per cent ad valorem; bleached, 25 per cent ad valorem; dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed, 30 per cent ad valorem.

"315. The term cotton cloth, or cloth, wherever used in the paragraphs of this schedule, unless otherwise specially provided for, shall be held to include all woven fabrics of cotton in the piece, or cut in lengths, and shall not include any article, finished or unfinished, made from cotton cloth.

"316. Cloth, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber and silk, or artificial silk, whether known as silk striped sleeve lining, silk stripes, or otherwise, of which cotton or other vegetable fiber is a component material of chief value, 35 per cent ad valorem.

"317. Handkerchiefs, or mufflers composed of cotton, or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, whether in the piece or otherwise, and whether finished or unfinished, hemmed or not hemmed, 30 per cent ad valorem; if embroidered in any manner, or tamboured, appliquéd, or trimmed wholly or in part with lace or with tucking or insertion, 35 per cent ad valorem.

"318. Clothing, ready-made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, or of which cotton or other vegetable fiber is the component material of chief value, 35 per cent ad valorem.

"319. Plushes, velvets, velveteens, corduroys, and all pile fabrics, cut or uncut, composed of cotton, or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, 35 per cent ad valorem.

"320. Curtains, table covers, and all articles manufactured of cotton chenille, or of which cotton chenille is the component material of chief value; tapestries, and other Jacquard figured upholstery goods, composed wholly of cotton, or of which cotton is the component material of chief value; any of the foregoing, in the piece or otherwise, 35 per cent ad valorem.

"321. Stockings, hose and half hose, made on knitting machines or frames, composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, or of which cotton or other vegetable fiber is the component material of chief value, and not otherwise specially provided for in this section, 30 per cent ad valorem.

"322. Stockings, hose and half hose, selvedged, fashioned, narrowed, or shaped wholly or in part by knitting machines or frames, or knit by hand, including such as are commercially known as seamless stockings, hose and half hose, and clocked stockings, hose and half hose, all of the above composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, or of which cotton or other vegetable fiber is the component material of chief value, finished or unfinished, 35 per cent ad valorem.

"323. Men's and boys' gloves, knitted or woven, made of cotton or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, 35 per cent ad valorem.

"324. Shirts and drawers, pants, vests, union suits, combination suits, tights, sweaters, corset covers, and all underwear of every description composed of cotton, or of which cotton is the component material of chief value, 35 per cent ad valorem.

"325. Bone casings, garters, tire fabric, or fabric suitable for use in pneumatic tires, suspenders and braces, and tubing, any of the foregoing made of cotton or other vegetable fiber and india rubber, or of which cotton or other vegetable fiber is the component material of chief value; spindle banding, woven, braided, or twisted; lamp, stove, or candle wicking made of cotton or other vegetable fiber, or of which cotton or other vegetable fiber is the component material of chief value; loom harness, healds, or collets made of cotton or other vegetable fiber, or of which cotton or other vegetable fiber is the component material of chief value; boot, shoe, and corset lacings made of cotton or other vegetable fiber, or of which cotton or other vegetable fiber is the component material of chief value; labels for garments or other articles composed of cotton or other vegetable fiber, or of which cotton or other vegetable fiber is the component material of chief value; mats, matting, rugs, carpets, and carpeting made of cotton or other vegetable fiber, or of which cotton or other vegetable fiber is the component material of chief value, 35 per cent ad valorem. "SEC. 5. The act approved August 5, 1909, entitled 'An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes,' is hereby amended as follows:

"Strike out the word 'cotton' whenever used in Schedule J, entitled 'Schedule J. Flax, Hemp, and Jute, and Manufactures of.'

"Strike out all of paragraph 350.

"Strike out all of paragraph 405.

"SEC. 6. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of sections 4, 5, and 6 of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed. The provisions of sections 4, 5, and 6 of this act shall take effect and be in force on and after January 1, 1912."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On the amendment, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, before the yeas and nays are ordered, I desire to move an amendment by inserting the word "cotton" and a comma immediately after the figures "313" in line 9, on page 1, so as to impose a duty on cotton as well as on the products of cotton.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 9, after the numerals "313," it is proposed to insert the word "cotton" and a comma.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] asks for the yeas and nays on his amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). Upon this amendment my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER], if present, would vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 15, nays 63, as follows:

YEAS—15.

Bailey	Brown	Cummins	La Follette
Borah	Clapp	Dixon	McCumber
Bourne	Clarke, Ark.	Gronna	Nelson
Bristow	Crawford	Kenyon

NAYS—63.

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill a section to be numbered section 4 and to read as follows:

SEC. 4. That on and after the 1st day of January, 1912, the articles mentioned in the following paragraph shall, when imported into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), be exempt from duty.

Pulp of wood, mechanically ground; pulp of wood, chemical, bleached or unbleached; news-print paper and other paper and paper boards, manufactured from mechanical wood pulp or from chemical wood pulp, or of which such pulp is the component material of chief value, colored in the pulp or not colored, and valued at not more than 4 cents per pound, not including printed or decorated wall paper.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Upon that amendment, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I heard a part of the amendment read, but not quite all of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will again read the amendment.

Mr. STONE. I did not rise to ask that the amendment be now again read, but I rose to ask the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] in what essential particular——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the Senator could not be interrogated. That would be in the nature of debate. The amendment can be again reported, but the Chair thinks that the unanimous-consent agreement prevents any Senator's explaining the effect of any amendment.

Mr. STONE. I presume that is true; but I wanted to know whether there was any difference between this and——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask that the amendment be again read, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment of Mr. LA FOLLETTE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Upon agreeing to the amendment, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I wish to make the same announcement regarding my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] as I made on the previous votes. If he were present, he would vote "nay" on this amendment.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 11, nays 67, as follows:

YEAS—11.

Bristow	Crawford	Gronna	McCumber
Brown	Cummins	Kenyon	Nelson
Clapp	Dixon	La Follette

NAYS—67.

Bacon	Davis	Martin, Va.	Root

Curtis	McLean	Richardson

NOT VOTING—12.

Borah	Frye	Percy	Sutherland
Cullom	Gallinger	Rayner	Thornton
du Pont	Lea	Simmons	Tillman

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

SEC. 4. That on and after the day following the passage of this act the following articles shall be exempt from duty when imported into the United States:

Plows, tooth and disk harrows, headers, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills and planters, mowers, horserakes, cultivators, thrashing machines and cotton gins, farm wagons and farm carts, and all other agricultural implements of any kind and description, whether specifically mentioned herein or not, whether in whole or in parts, including repair parts.

Bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and all similar fabrics, materials, or coverings, suitable for covering and baling cotton, composed in whole or in part of jute, jute butts, hemp, flax, seg, Russian seg, New Zealand tow, Norwegian tow, aloe, mill waste, cotton tares, or any other materials or fibers suitable for covering cotton; and burlaps and bags or sacks composed wholly or in part of jute or burlaps or other material suitable for bagging or sacking agricultural products.

Hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel, cut to lengths, punched or not punched, or wholly or partly manufactured into hoops or ties, coated or not coated with paint or any other preparation, with or without buckles or fastenings, for baling cotton or any other commodity; and wire for baling hay, straw, and other agricultural products.

Grain, buff, split, rough, and sole leather, band, bend, or belting leather, boots and shoes made wholly or in chief value of leather made from cattle hides and cattle skins of whatever weight, of cattle of the bovine species, including calfskins; and harness, saddles, and saddlery, in sets or in parts, finished or unfinished, composed wholly or in chief value of leather; and leather cut into shoe uppers or vamps or other forms suitable for conversion into manufactured articles.

Barbed fence wire, wire rods, wire strands or wire rope, wire woven or manufactured for wire fencing, and other kinds of wire suitable for fencing, including wire staples.

Timber, hewn, sided, or squared, round timber used for spars or in building wharves, shingles, laths, fencing posts, sawed boards, planks, deals, and other lumber, rough or dressed, except boards, planks, deals, and other lumber, of lignum-vitæ, lancewood, ebony, box, granadilla, mahogany, rosewood, satinwood, and all other cabinet woods.

Sewing machines, and all parts thereof.

Salt, whether in bulk or in bags, sacks, barrels, or other packages.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, on that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER], if present, would vote "nay" on this amendment.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 15, nays 63, as follows:

YEAS—15.

Bailey	Clapp	Dixon	McCumber
Borah	Clarke, Ark.	Foster	Nelson
Bristow	Crawford	Gronna	Simmons
Brown	Cummins	La Follette

NAYS—63.

Davis	Martine, N. J.	Root

NOT VOTING—12.

Briggs	Gallinger	Lea	Sutherland
du Pont	Johnston, Ala.	Percy	Thornton
Frye	Kenyon	Rayner	Tillman

So Mr. BAILEY's amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. On page 18, after line 24, and also on page 22, after line 20, in the original bill, I move to insert—

Harness, saddles, saddlery, in sets or in part finished or unfinished—

so as to bring those articles within those which are reciprocally free between Canada and the United States, and on it I ask for the yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Dakota offers an amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the bill by inserting, on page 18, after line 24, the following:

Harness, saddles, saddlery, in sets or in part finished or unfinished.

And, on page 22, after line 20, to insert the same amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Upon agreeing to the amendment the Senator from North Dakota asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I wish to announce that if my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 15, nays 64, as follows:

YEAS—15.

Bailey	Brown	Cummins	McCumber
Borah	Clapp	Dixon	Nelson
Bourne	Clarke, Ark.	Gronna	Simmons
Bristow	Crawford	La Follette

NAYS—64.

Bacon	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Root

Burnham	Heyburn	Oliver	Smoot
Burton	Hitchcock	Overman	Stephenson
Chamberlain	Johnson, Me.	Owen	Stone
Chilton	Johnston, Ala.	Page	Swanson
Clark, Wyo.	Jones	Paynter	Taylor
Crane	Kern	Penrose	Townsend
Culberson	Lippitt	Perkins	Warren
Cullom	Lodge	Poindexter	Watson
Curtis	Lorimer	Pomerene	Wetmore
Davis	McLean	Reed	Williams
Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Richardson	Works

NOT VOTING—11.

Bradley	Gallinger	Percy	Thornton
du Pont	Kenyon	Rayner	Tillman
Frye	Lea	Sutherland

So Mr. McCUMBER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer the following amendment, which I explained yesterday. I ask that it may be read, and then I desire the yeas and nays upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, line 4, after the word "namely," insert the following proviso:

Provided, however, That any or all of such articles so enumerated that may have been imported into the United States under bond and that may be held in bond or in any bonded warehouse in the United States at the time this act shall go into effect shall not be exempt from the duty now imposed by law, and the full duty so imposed shall be levied and collected on all such articles held in bond in the United States when sold for delivery in the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota asks for the yeas and nays on agreeing to his amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and, being taken, resulted—yeas 21, nays 54, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Bailey	Clark, Wyo.	Gronna	Simmons
Borah	Clarke, Ark.	Heyburn	Smith, Mich.
Bourne	Crawford	La Follette	Warren
Bristow	Cummins	Lorimer
Brown	Dixon	McCumber
Clapp	Gamble	Nelson

NAYS—54.

Bacon	Fletcher	Myers	Shively
Bankhead	Foster	Newlands	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Gore	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Guggenheim	Overman	Smoot
Burnham	Hitchcock	Owen	Stephenson
Burton	Johnson, Me.	Page	Stone
Chamberlain	Johnston, Ala.	Paynter	Swanson
Chilton	Jones	Penrose	Taylor
Crane	Kern	Perkins	Townsend
Culberson	Lippitt	Poindexter	Watson
Cullom	Lodge	Pomerene	Wetmore
Curtis	McLean	Reed	Williams
Davis	Martin, Va.	Richardson
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Root

NOT VOTING—15.

Bradley	Gallinger	Oliver	Thornton
Briggs	Kenyon	Percy	Tillman
du Pont	Lea	Rayner	Works
Frye	Nixon	Sutherland

So Mr. McCUMBER's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to offer two amendments, and I shall ask for a yea-and-nay vote upon one of them. The first I offer relates to printers' type, which I submitted yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That on and after the day following the taking effect of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the following articles, when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), the following rates of duty, namely:

Type metal, 1½ cents per pound on the lead contained therein; new types, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. BRISTOW. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER'S name was called). I wish to state that my colleague, if present, would vote nay on this amendment.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 16, nays 61, as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bailey	Brown	Cummins	Kenyon
Borah	Clapp	Dixon	La Follette
Bourne	Clarke, Ark.	Gronna	Nelson
Bristow	Crawford	Heyburn	Simmons

NAYS—61.

Bacon	Dillingham	Myers	Shively
Bankhead	Fletcher	Newlands	Smith, Md.
Bradley	Foster	Nixon	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Gamble	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.
Briggs	Guggenheim	Oliver	Smoot
Bryan	Hitchcock	Overman	Stephenson
Burnham	Johnson, Me.	Owen	Stone
Burton	Johnston, Ala.	Page	Swanson
Chamberlain	Jones	Paynter	Taylor
Chilton	Kern	Penrose	Townsend
Clark, Wyo.	Lippitt	Perkins	Warren
Crane	Lodge	Poindexter	Watson
Culberson	Lorimer	Pomerene	Williams
Cullom	McLean	Reed
Curtis	Martin	Richardson
Davis	Martine	Root

NOT VOTING—13.

du Pont	Lea	Sutherland	Works
Frye	McCumber	Thornton
Gallinger	Percy	Tillman
Gore	Rayner	Wetmore

So Mr. BRISTOW's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That on and after the day following the taking effect of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the following articles, when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), the following rates of duty, namely: Manufactures of india rubber, or of which india rubber is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in section 1 of an act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes, approved August 5, 1909, 25 per cent ad valorem; sponges made of rubber, 30 per cent ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I offer an amendment, which I shall not ask to have read. It is in lieu of section 1 of the bill, providing that all articles the growth, product, or manufacture of the Dominion of Canada, when imported into the United States or any of its possessions, except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila, shall be exempt from duty under the same conditions as now provided in the bill when the President shall issue his proclamation that Canada has enacted a law removing the duty from the articles as provided in the present section and reduced the duties according to the rates provided in the section as it now stands.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not desire to have the amendment read at length nor to have a roll call upon it. I was simply making a statement to relieve the Senate. The amendment also provides for striking out section 2 of the bill.

The amendment submitted by Mr. CRAWFORD was to strike out all of section 1 of the bill and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That all articles the growth, product, or manufacture of the Dominion of Canada, when imported therefrom into the United States, or any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), shall be exempt from duty: Provided, That the President of the United States shall have satisfactory evidence and shall make proclamation that the following articles the growth, product, or manufacture of the United States, or any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), are admitted into the Dominion of Canada free of duty, namely:

Live animals: Cattle, horses and mules, swine, sheep, lambs, and all other live animals.

Poultry, dead or alive.

And also to strike out all of section 2 of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAILEY. I offer the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas proposes an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill the following additional section:

SEC. 4. That on and after the day following the passage of this act the following articles shall be exempt from duty when imported into the United States:

Bagging for cotton, gunny cloth, and all similar fabrics, materials, or coverings, suitable for covering and baling cotton, composed in whole or in part of jute, jute butts, hemp, flax, seg, Russian seg, New Zealand tow, Norwegian tow, aloe, mill waste, cotton tares, or any other materials or fibers suitable for covering cotton; and burlaps and bags or sacks composed wholly or in part of jute or burlaps or other material suitable for bagging or sacking agricultural products.

Hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel, cut to lengths, punched or not punched, or wholly or partly manufactured into hoops or ties, coated or not coated with paint or any other preparation, with or without buckles or fastenings, for baling cotton or any other commodity; and wire for baling hay, straw, and other agricultural products.

Mr. BAILEY. On agreeing to the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I wish to state that if my colleague were present he would vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 17, nays 62, as follows:

YEAS—17.

Bailey	Crawford	Johnston, Ala.	Nelson
Borah	Cummins	Jones	Simmons
Bristow	Dixon	Kenyon
Clapp	Foster	La Follette
Clarke, Ark.	Gronna	McCumber

NAYS—62.

Bacon	Davis	Myers	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Dillingham	Newlands	Smith, Mich.
Bourne	Fletcher	Nixon	Smith, S. C.
Bradley	Gamble	O'Gorman	Smoot
Brandegee	Gore	Oliver	Stephenson
Briggs	Guggenheim	Overman	Stone
Bryan	Heyburn	Owen	Swanson
Burnham	Hitchcock	Page	Taylor
Burton	Johnson, Me.	Penrose	Townsend

Curtis	Martine, N. J.	Shively

NOT VOTING—11.

Brown	Gallinger	Percy	Thornton
du Pont	Lea	Rayner	Tillman
Frye	Paynter	Sutherland

So Mr. BAILEY's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further amendments to be proposed to the bill in the Senate? If there are no further amendments, the question is on ordering the bill to a third reading.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and it was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BRISTOW and Mr. CUMMINS called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. I am instructed by him to say that, if he were present, he would vote against the passage of the bill. I transfer my pair with him to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], who, if present, would vote for the passage of the bill, and the Senator from Maine, as I stated, would vote against the passage of the bill. I myself, the transfer I have stated having been made, vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Upon this question my general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] stands. I therefore withhold my vote. Were he present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. RICHARDSON (when Mr. DU PONT's name was called). My colleague [Mr. DU PONT] is absent from the Senate. On this question he is paired with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON]. If my colleague were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I desire to again announce that my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] is necessarily absent. He has a general pair with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS], but by a transfer of pairs my colleague is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. If present and voting, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when Mr. PERCY's name was called). My colleague [Mr. PERCY], as has been stated, is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea," and the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. If he were present and I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. THORNTON (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. If he were present, he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 53, nays 27, as follows:

YEAS—53.

Bacon	Crane	Johnston, Ala.	O'Gorman
Bankhead	Culberson	Jones	Overman
Bradley	Cullom	Kern	Owen
Brandegee	Davis	Lodge	Paynter
Briggs	Fletcher	McLean	Penrose
Brown	Foster	Martin, Va.	Perkins
Bryan	Gore	Martine, N. J.	Poindexter
Burton	Guggenheim	Myers	Pomerene
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Newlands	Reed
Chilton	Johnson, Me.	Nixon	Richardson
Root	Stephenson	Townsend	Works
Shively	Stone	Watson
Smith, Md.	Swanson	Wetmore
Smith, S. C.	Taylor	Williams

NAYS—27.

Bailey	Clarke, Ark.	Heyburn	Oliver
Borah	Crawford	Kenyon	Page
Bourne	Cummins	La Follette	Simmons
Bristow	Curtis	Lippitt	Smith, Mich.
Burnham	Dixon	Lorimer	Smoot

Clark, Wyo.	Gronna	Nelson

NOT VOTING—10.

Dillingham	Gallinger	Rayner	Tillman
du Pont	Lea	Sutherland
Frye	Percy	Thornton

So the bill was passed.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11019) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, that will be done.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, after conferring with a large number of Senators, I move that until otherwise ordered the Senate meet daily at 12 o'clock meridian.

The motion was agreed to.

RETURN OF EXPORTED ARTICLES.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the House of Representatives be requested to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 12312) to amend paragraph 500 of the act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," which was passed by the Senate on the 20th instant; and I wish to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. In explanation of why I desire the bill recalled, I will say that I simply wish to add to the bill a provision that poultry which may be sent to Canada or to Mexico may be returned without paying duty, when they have been sent there for show purposes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I do not understand the exigency which requires the Senate to recall this bill. The bill as passed by both the House and the Senate was intended to remedy a defect growing out of the last tariff law, as interpreted by the Court of Customs Appeals, the interpretation being quite contrary to the expectation of the administrative officers of the Government. The House bill as passed remedied a situation which was burdensome to the people of the city of Detroit, and it seems to me that it is unwise to recall it for the purpose of loading it down with something not a part of the original bill and not finally passed upon by the Court of Customs Appeals.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is no intention whatever of changing the provisions of the bill applying to animals crossing the line. It is only intended to provide that the bill shall apply to fowls, as in the case of live animals of all kinds. There are many of our people who show fowls in Canada, and they want the privilege of taking them from this country, exhibiting them in Canada, and returning them without paying duty, except, of course, on those that may have been sold.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Was it inadvertence that caused the Senator to change the place from "Mexico" to "Canada"? I understood the Senator to state, as a reason why this measure should be recalled and amended, that it was desirable to send fowls into Mexico.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the proposed law would apply to Mexico, if citizens of the United States wanted to exhibit fowls in that country, the same as it would apply to Canada.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is this bill intended to allow fighting cocks to be taken across the line between the United States and Mexico? Is that the real purpose of it?

Mr. SMOOT. That is not the real purpose of it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Some of us have received some suggestions about that. I ask that question in all good faith, because it has been suggested to me that that was a defect in the law, and that it should be remedied.

Mr. SMOOT. There are many requests——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield further?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. There are many requests from different parts of the country for such an amendment as I have indicated. Of course, if the Senate feel that they want to prevent American fowls from being shown in a foreign country, then there is no need of recalling the bill; but if they do not feel that way, we should like to add such an amendment to the bill and perfect it so that all kinds of fowls and animals may be taken to a foreign country for show purposes and returned to this country without paying a duty, provided they are not sold in the foreign country.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, the true situation is simply this, that the Customs Court of final resort has construed in a most sweeping and comprehensive manner the tariff law affecting the right of travel in carriages and otherwise between Detroit and Windsor and the American and Canadian "Soo," a merely local convenience. There is no appeal from the decision, and vehicles crossing and recrossing are obliged to pay duty, contrary to the spirit and purpose of the law. The suggestion of the Senator from Utah does not come with the same force, because the ruling that he seeks to avoid is only the ruling of a customs officer and not the court of last resort. Therefore, it seems to me, the orderly procedure would be to appeal the case to the Customs Court rather than the legislative department of the Government.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Just a moment, until I finish my sentence. It seems to me that we might very appropriately consider the bill of the Senator from Utah on its merits as a separate proposition when it has run the gantlet of the courts and let the parliamentary situation alone, as it is in the final transitory stage. Therefore I hope that the bill will not be recalled from the House of Representatives.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield the floor?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; I do not yield the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then, does the Senator yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I yield for a question.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan is laboring under a misapprehension. The purpose of recalling the bill is to amend it so as to provide for sending crowing roosters into Canada and gamecocks into Mexico. [Laughter.]

Mr. BACON. Is anything said about lame ducks?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. After the vote which we have just taken, I think the crowing-rooster suggestion for Canada would be very appropriate.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator from Michigan, in all seriousness, that it is not proposed to interfere at all with the provision of the bill as passed the Senate affecting animals.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It will, unless the House of Representatives and the Senate finally concur in the suggestion of the Senator from Utah, which I seriously doubt.

Mr. SMOOT. If the House should not agree to the amendment, the amendment would not be insisted upon by the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the bill is recalled, if the amendment of the Senator from Utah is made part of it, and the House fails to concur, then the remedial provision goes to conference and may die there, as some other legislation promises to do. I do not want that to be the result and must object to the request of my honored friend.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Utah. I understand that this is a House bill?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a House bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It has been passed by the Senate without amendment, has it not?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; without amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. And the purpose of recalling it from the House now is that we may amend it?

Mr. SMOOT. That we may add such an amendment as I have indicated.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That amendment may not be agreeable to the House or the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I understand that. I just wanted to get the parliamentary situation.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In which event we will be in a deadlock, and legislation important to my constituents which we have unanimously passed in both branches may indeed, is quite likely to, fail.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; but my question was regarding the legislative situation. We simply passed the bill without amendment yesterday, and now it would appear that we have changed our minds, and the Senator from Utah wants us to pass it with an amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment that I have in mind was not offered at the time of the passage of the bill. I care very little whether it is adopted or not, but I know that it would perfect the bill so that fowls passing from one country to the other for show purposes could be returned without payment of duty. If the Senate does not wish to agree to that I am perfectly willing that they shall vote it down.

Mr. STONE. Just a moment before the Senator consents to that. What objection has the Senator from Michigan to the proposed amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. My objection is this——

Mr. STONE. Pardon me. I know that in my State, and I am quite sure the same is true of other States, the fowl industry, eggs, chickens, and the like, is a very important one in the aggregate——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The bill does not affect the egg industry at all.

Mr. STONE. Running up into many millions of dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But the Senator is mistaken in its scope.

Mr. STONE. Well, if people in any of the States are engaged in raising fine fowls for any purpose, for meat or eggs or anything else, and desire to exhibit them in Canada or Mexico or other countries, would the Senator from Michigan at all object to their doing so?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; I would favor an independent bill providing for the suggestion of the Senator from Utah, but I think it most unfair to recall legislation that has now practically ripened into law and undertake to burden it with a proposition upon which the highest court having to do with customs matters has not passed. I do not desire to subject a bill, which in its effect is largely local to my State, to the possibility of defeat at this stage of the session, and therefore I object to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the conferees on the part of the House should object to the amendment, I do not think for a moment that the conferees on the part of the Senate would insist upon it, and it would then go out; but I do not see——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Why not introduce it as an independent proposition?

Mr. SMOOT. We could hardly get it through at this session in that form.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, you may not get it through if the House bill is recalled and your amendment attached.

Mr. SMOOT. I will guarantee to the Senator that it is not going to jeopardize the passage of the bill. If the House objects to the amendment, it will go out.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If we get the bill back here, the Senate may object to it.

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest to the Senator from Utah that he withdraw his motion.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I withdraw the motion, and will have a bill covering the matter introduced in the House, and endeavor to have it passed as a separate bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah withdraws his motion.

CONSIDERATION OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, which I ask may be read and lie on the table. I give notice that I will call it up on Monday next.

The resolution (S. Res. 109) was read, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that, in addition to the special orders heretofore made, legislation should be considered at this session upon the following objects:

First. Providing for the physical valuation of railroads engaged in interstate commerce.

Second. Providing for the control by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the stock and bond issues of railroads engaged in interstate commerce, with a view to preventing overcapitalization.

Third. Providing for an interstate trade commission with powers of investigation, correction, and recommendation regarding corporations engaged in interstate trade, similar, so far as practicable, to those conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission regarding corporations engaged in interstate transportation.

Fourth. Providing for the reform of the banking laws with a view to security of bank depositors and the prevention of bank panics.

Resolved further, That it is the sense of the Senate that after the disposition of the standing orders and the consideration of such further bills as shall be passed by the House of Representatives a recess shall be taken to the first Monday in November, 1911, with a view to the consideration of the foregoing measures.

SARAH E. EVANS.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 104, submitted by Mr. LODGE on the 14th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Sarah E. Evans, widow of John W. Evans, late a skilled laborer in the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

MARY E. PULSIFER.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 36, submitted by Mr. GALLINGER [for Mr. FRYE] on May 8, 1911, reported it with an amendment in line 5, before the word "salary," to strike out "one year's," and to insert "six months'," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, from the contingent fund of the Senate, to Mary E. Pulsifer, widow of Pitman Pulsifer, late compiler of the Navy Yearbook and indexer for Senate public documents, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving at the time of his demise, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ROOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, July 24, 1911, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 22, 1911.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by Mr. ROBINSON as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee that the way is ever open to the improvement of conditions, that whosoever will may enter in and possess himself of the larger, intellectual, moral, and spiritual life which goeth before the betterment of the home, the state, the church. Grant, O most merciful Father, that we as individuals and as a people may go forward day by day to the higher ideals, to the glory and honor of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, July 19, 1911, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Platt, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 12312. An act to amend paragraph 500 of the act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes."

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 12109. An act to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1911, and for other purposes.

ELECTION OF MEMBERS TO COMMITTEE VACANCIES.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], leader of the minority, I move the election of the following gentlemen to the standing committees of the House to fill vacancies now belonging to the minority: On the Committee on Claims, Mr. THERON E. CATLIN and Mr. WILLIAM R. GREEN; on the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, Mr. WILLIAM S. REYBURN; on the Committee on Railways and Canals, Mr. WILLIAM S. REYBURN; on the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, Mr. WILLIAM S. REYBURN; on the Committee on Revision of the Laws, Mr. WILLIAM R. GREEN.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves the election to the following standing committees of the House of the gentlemen whose names have been reported.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the names be again reported.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would ask that the Clerk again report the names.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will again report the names.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Committee on Claims, THERON E. CATLIN and WILLIAM R. GREEN; to the Committee on Industrial Arts and Exposition, WILLIAM S. REYBURN; to the Committee on Railways and Canals, WILLIAM S. REYBURN; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, WILLIAM S. REYBURN; to the Committee on Revision of the Laws, WILLIAM R. GREEN.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the Members be elected?

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL WEDNESDAY.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama moves that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent,

Mr. WOODS of Iowa was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of H. R. 9501, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House of Representatives, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of William H. Beare, in the Sixty-second Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet on Wednesday next, July 26, 1911, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of examination and survey of Brazos River, Tex., with a view to the selection of sites for additional locks and dams between Old Washington and Waco (H. SENATE.

MONDAY, July 24, 1911.

The Senate met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

CONSTITUTIONS OF NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA.

Mr. OWEN. As a member of the Committee on Territories, I ask permission of the Senate to submit my views to accompany House joint resolution No. 14, to admit the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona as States into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States. I ask that the views be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the views submitted by the Senator from Oklahoma will be printed as a part of the report of the committee on the joint resolution (Rept. No. 100, pt. 2).

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 3089) to provide for the condemnation of land for highway and park purposes to preserve the Klingle Ford Valley (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3090) to provide a connecting highway between Massachusetts Avenue and R Street NW., along Lovers Lane (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 3091) to correct the military record of Jacob Scott; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3092) granting an increase of pension to Martin Dolsby (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3093) granting an increase of pension to Thomas B. Davis (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3094) granting an increase of pension to Wesley Hunt (with accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 3095) granting an increase of pension to David Brown;

A bill (S. 3096) granting an increase of pension to Charles B. Worden; and

A bill (S. 3097) granting an increase of pension to John C. Porter; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS:

A bill (S. 3098) for the relief of the heirs of Joshua Nicholls; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

A bill (S. 3099) granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Yates (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3100) granting an increase of pension to John W. Forester (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 3101) to increase the pensions of the blind who served in the War with Mexico, the Civil War, and the War with Spain;

A bill (S. 3102) granting an increase of pension to Clark Colvin; and

A bill (S. 3103) granting a pension to Emily Fisher; to the Committee on Pensions.

EMPLOYEES ON PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. CLAPP. I submit a resolution which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The resolution (S. Res. 110) was read and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be instructed to investigate and make report to the Senate whether or not the circular, No. 315, signed by George E. Goethals, chairman and chief engineer of the construction of the Panama Canal, published in the Canal Record for the month of March, 1910, in its reference to employees who have been discharged from South American railroads, has any application as a prohibition to citizens of the United States applying for employment in Government work on the Isthmus;

And to further inquire whether or not the arrangements and agreements with men employed as locomotive engineers, conductors, steam-shovel engineers, and dredgemen, on the Panama Canal, made by the Hon. W. H. Taft, when Secretary of War, in relation to compensation for overtime when overtime work was actually necessary, and for longevity pay, has been violated or broken, and whether or not employees who entered upon such work, in reliance upon the arrangements and agreements made with Secretary Taft have been deprived of the benefits of the arrangements and agreements under which they entered upon such work;

And to further inquire if the provision in the act making the appropriation for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, prohibiting any part of the appropriation for the Isthmian Canal being applied to the payment for allowance for longevity service on lay-over days other than such as may have accumulated under existing orders of the commission prior to July 1, 1909, is a violation of the understanding, arrangement, and agreement under which the men were employed in constructive and operative work on said canal, and to report whether such prohibition ought to be modified or repealed to effectuate the understanding under which employees entered upon that work.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. BURTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 130) making appropriations for certain expenses of the House of Representatives incident to the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

EX-SOLDIERS IN EMPLOY OF SENATE.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer a resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 111), as follows:

Resolved, That Senate resolution No. 72 of July 14, 1911, be amended by inserting after the word "War," in the fourth line thereof, the words "and the War with Spain."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WARREN. I should like to hear it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will, without objection, again read the resolution.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] stepped out of the Chamber. I shall object to the consideration of the resolution at least until he returns.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Utah understands, I suppose, the purport of the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I hardly understand the purport of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio is now returning to the Chamber.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio the purport of the resolution which he asks consideration of?

Mr. BURTON. I have not asked consideration of a resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will again read the resolution submitted by the Senator from Washington.

The Secretary again read the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood that the Senator from Ohio offered the resolution, but I am told it was the Senator from Washington.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington offered the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Senator from Washington explain the purport of the resolution.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Resolution No. 72, which is referred to, was introduced by the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] and passed by the Senate on the 14th instant. It provided that veterans of the Union Army in the Civil War, when otherwise satisfactory, should be continued in the service of the Senate. This resolution provides an amendment so as to insert after the words "Civil War" the words "and the War with Spain," so as to include the veterans of both wars.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know how many would be affected by the resolution. I ask that it may go over for a day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over on objection.

WATERWAYS OF CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. TOWNSEND submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 112), which was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved, That the President be, and he hereby is, respectfully requested to enter upon negotiations with Great Britain or the Dominion of Canada with a view to an international agreement for the concurrent or cooperative improvement of navigation in waterways used, or which can be used, in common for the commerce of Canada and the United States.

CLAIMS FOR CAPTURED AND ABANDONED PROPERTY.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 113), which was read and referred to the Committee on Claims:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate:

1. Whether any calls for information in regard to claims for captured and abandoned property under section 162 of the Judicial Code, March 3, 1911, have been received from the Court of Claims; and if so, how many.

2. How many such calls have been answered; and if not answered, what steps are now being taken to answer them, and in about what time it may be expected they will be answered.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL (S. DOC. NO. 74).

Mr. STONE. I ask the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. I have had prepared a table relating to Schedule K of the tariff law, which is affected by the pending bill, now the unfinished business. It sets forth the articles with the rate of duty prescribed by the Payne law, and also reduced to its ad valorem.

Mr. SMOOT. The equivalent ad valorem?

Mr. STONE. The equivalent ad valorem. It also shows the revenue collected for the last fiscal year—that is, 1910—under the Payne law, and in another parallel column it shows the ad valorem under the House bill, the rate prescribed in the substitute proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and the ad valorem equivalent prescribed in the substitute proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. I ask that it may be printed as a document.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection. I think it ought to be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is no objection, and the order is entered.

CONSIDERATION OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 109, submitted by Mr. NEWLANDS on the 22d instant, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that, in addition to the special orders heretofore made, legislation should be considered at this session upon the following subjects:

First. Providing for the physical valuation of railroads engaged in interstate commerce.

Second. Providing for the control by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the stock and bond issues of railroads engaged in interstate commerce with a view to preventing overcapitalization.

Third. Providing for an interstate trade commission with powers of investigation, correction, and recommendation regarding corporations engaged in interstate trade similar, so far as practicable, to those conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission regarding corporations engaged in interstate transportation.

Fourth. Providing for the reform of the banking laws with a view to security of bank depositors and the prevention of bank panics.

Resolved further, That it is the sense of the Senate that after the disposition of the standing orders and the consideration of such further bills as shall be passed by the House of Representatives a recess shall be taken to the first Monday in November, 1911, with a view to the consideration of the foregoing measures.

Mr. CULBERSON. Will the Senator from Nevada yield to me for a moment? I wish to suggest two amendments, which he may accept.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair wishes to inquire of the Senator from Nevada whether he desires to have the resolution disposed of now or wishes to have it referred?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should like to have it disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest, on page 1, line 9, after the word "commerce," to insert the words "and incorporated under the laws of the United States," so that the second proposition will read:

Providing for the control by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the stock and bond issues of railroads engaged in interstate commerce and incorporated under the laws of the United States with a view to preventing overcapitalization.

That is the first. The second amendment which I suggest is, on page 2, after the word "panics," in line 3, to insert:

Fifth. Revision downward of the iron and steel tariff schedule.

I hope the Senator from Nevada will accept these two amendments.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Texas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Nevada yield for that purpose?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the amendment suggested by the Senator from Texas is, after the word "commerce," in line 12, to insert "and incorporated under the laws of the United States."

Mr. CULBERSON. Yes; the proposition being that the Federal Government has no control over the stock and bond issues of railroad corporations or any other corporations organized under the laws of the respective States of the Union.

Mr. BORAH. I do not care to discuss that question in connection with this particular resolution.

I supposed that was the point to which the Senator was directing his amendment. I would not want to concede that statement in all its import. While the National Government may not be able to primarily control the issue of stocks and bonds of a State corporation, it may do so indirectly by prescribing certain conditions precedent to the corporation engaging in interstate commerce. At least that is a debatable subject.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the Senate has been in session three months. During that time it has disposed of three measures—the reciprocity bill, the campaign publicity bill, and the joint resolution providing for the election of Senators by the people.

Early in the session I introduced a resolution providing for a legislative program embracing nine subjects for the consideration of Congress at the present session, and embracing seven subjects upon which committee action was desirable, with a view to legislative action at the next regular session. Of the nine subjects referred to for immediate action at this session in that program the three I have already referred to have been acted upon. Three others are embraced in the standing order of the Senate covering questions which are to be disposed of by a final vote before August 10.

In the process of evolution of the Senate from the old dominance of party leaders and from the tyranny of committees into a self-governing body, my idea was that it is necessary for the Senate, as a self-governing body, at the very commencement of the session to outline a definite program of legislative consideration.

We wasted more than one-half of this extra session when we might have been engaged, through our committees, in the consideration of the questions referred to in this resolution, upon which public sentiment has practically been made up. Those questions relate to the physical valuation of railroads engaged in interstate commerce, the supervision of their stock and bond issues, the creation of an interstate trade commission and the merger therein of the Bureau of Corporations, the cooperation of the National Government with the States, each acting within its powers and jurisdiction in devising and carrying out comprehensive plans for the regulation of river flow by irrigation, reclamation of swamp lands, storage and use of flood waters, development of water power, conservation of forests, and other practicable methods, the strenghening of the individual banks of the country by requirements regarding the relation of capital and reserves to obligations by associating these banks together in national associations for mutual protection, for the protection of depositors, and for protection against bank runs, and the federalizing of these various associations through a national commission fairly representative of every section of the country, possessing powers of examination, investigation, and of recommendation to the President and to Congress, through which the various local associations could be federalized for mutual protection and the protection of depositors, the development of Alaska by connecting the coast with the Yukon River by a national railroad, thus doing away with the contentions that now exist as to private rights and private enterprises, and which have so long delayed the development of that rich Territory, and also by so amending the laws regarding the public domain as to promote and encourage enterprise in Alaska and enterprise everywhere upon the public domain, at the same time guarding our national resources in timber, in coal, in iron, and in oil against monopolization, the temporary diminution of the construction of the fighting ships of the Navy and the substitution of auxiliary ships, with a view to developing a well-proportioned Navy capable of sustaining itself in case of war, these auxiliary ships to be used in times of peace in opening up new routes of commerce, the neutralization of the Philippines, a question which Congress in the near future must take up for consideration in response to the demand of a public opinion which regards the continued possession of the Philippines as involving vast complications and great danger in the future.

The resolutions which I originally introduced covered two other questions. One was the reduction of the military and naval expense to the extent of $30,000,000 annually, giving the President the power, with a board of experts, of apportioning the reduction, giving the executive department a freer hand in the assignment of the money for military expense with a view to economy and efficiency.

Another proposition was a provision for a graduated increase in the corporation tax to meet the deficit caused by reduction in customs duties, and also sufficient to provide a fund for river development. These two questions may well be turned over to the regular session for solution, for by that time, it is to be hoped, a budget committee, taking the place of the old Committee on Public Expenditures, which has now been abandoned, will be organized in such a way as to bring the chairmen of all our appropriation committees and the chairman of the Finance Committee and other Members of the Senate in cooperation and team work, with a view to adjusting expenditures to revenues in such a way as not only to take care of the efficient and economical administration of the Government, but also to take care of the constructive work of the Government in the way of river development and the construction of public buildings and works.

Mr. President, when the standing orders of the Senate were made a few days since, whilst I viewed with satisfaction the fact that the Senate had made progress as to consideration of six of the questions covered by the resolutions which I had introduced, I expressed my regret that the reciprocity bill had not been left for consideration at the close and that the reduction in the duties upon print paper had not been left for the final accomplishment in legislation.

I then stated that just as soon as the standing orders were disposed of there would be an immediate public demand created by the press for the adjournment of Congress upon the ground that its continued session was prejudicial to business. Already we see that prediction realized. The papers of the country having secured what they wish to gain from tariff reform are now demanding the adjournment of Congress, and this demand will increase as time goes on. I believe, Mr. President, that if at the very commencement of the extra session the Senate, as a self-governing body, had adopted the resolution which I offered, we would by this time have had full reports from the committees upon the subjects embraced within that resolution, and today we would have been able to make standing orders regarding the subjects, finally disposing of them before our adjournment in August, just such disposition as we have made of the questions relating to statehood and the tariff.

Now, the question comes before us as to what we are to do. The heat of the season is discouraging to effort. It is desirable that a recess should be taken until the weather is more clement. The suggestion of the resolution which I offered last Saturday is that the Senate should express its sense that a recess shall be taken until the first Monday in November, and that then the Senate shall take up for consideration certain questions—three or four of those enumerated in the resolution which I originally introduced—and shall instruct its committees to report upon those questions as soon as practicable. If this resolution is adopted we will have the opportunity for a needed rest and will come back in November refreshed and able to meet the strenuous requirements of legislation in the future.

There is no reason, Mr. President, why the disposition of these questions, which have been the subject of party platform after party platform for years, which have been discussed from the stump, in the newspapers, and in the forum, should be further delayed. We have the opportunity and we have the time if we will meet a month or more before the regular session and determine to take up these questions seriously and consecutively. We all know, of course, that if this is not done we will meet as usual in December in regular session; that there will be the usual inertia and inactivity until after the Christmas holidays; that then the appropriation bills will have the right of way; and we all know how the appropriation bills and other legislation can be managed in such a way as to obstruct and delay needed legislation. We will then be in all the excitement that marks a period just before the national election. There is danger always of party jockeying—jockeying for position in the Presidential race—and that means that fair and earnest consideration is not always given to needed measures.

Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] asked me to withdraw from consideration two matters covered by my resolution. One was the control of stock and bond issues of great corporations engaged in interstate commerce. I do not recall the other——

Mr. CULBERSON. The other, Mr. President, was not a suggestion of withdrawing any subject for consideration, but adding as number 5 a revision downward of the iron and steel tariff schedule, which I trust the Senator will accept.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; I will be very glad to accept that amendment; but as to the first I shall accept it with some reluctance, and only with a view to diminishing the opposition to the passage of this resolution.

The Senator proposes that the control of the stock and bond issues shall be confined only to corporations organized under the laws of the United States, whereas the proposal of this resolution is that the control of stock and bond issues by the Interstate Commerce Commission shall extend to all corporations engaged in interstate transportation.

Mr. President, I am aware that there is a difference of opinion among Democrats with reference to constitutional power upon this subject. It is a matter greatly to be regretted that the Democratic Party, devoted as it is to great reforms, should be divided as to the method in which those reforms are to be carried out. Those reforms relate entirely, or almost entirely, to the exercise of the power granted to the Nation by the States of regulating interstate commerce.

The grant is an absolute one to Congress. Commerce is divided by our dual government into two branches, State and interstate. Over State commerce the States have exclusive jurisdiction. Over interstate commerce the Nation has exclusive jurisdiction, and the question is whether in the exercise of that jurisdiction over interstate commerce the Nation has a right to regulate the capitalization of an instrumentality of interstate commerce. Individually I claim that it has, whether that instrumentality be of State creation or of national creation.

And so also the power exists in the States, as to purely State commerce, to regulate an instrumentality of commerce, whether created by the Nation or the States. The power of the State over State commerce is as large as the power of the Nation over interstate commerce; and the powers of each over the instrumentalities of State commerce on the one side, and interstate commerce on the other, are equal.

Now, if an instrumentality of commerce seeks to engage in both State and interstate commerce, it must submit to the domination of both sovereigns, each within its jurisdiction. If the decrees of these sovereigns are contradictory, that is one of the difficulties attendant upon our dual Government. The power of either is not diminished by the fact that the exercise of the power by both may result in a contradiction.

Mr. President, we all realize that the States, or most of them, have not taken hold efficiently of the question of capitalization of the corporations created by them.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Do I understand the Senator's position to be that if a transportation company is engaged in interstate commerce at all it is to be considered as thus engaged for all purposes, the commerce being the act of the corporation and having no reference to the item of business?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Without regard to the volume of business, if it is engaged in interstate commerce at all, it is subject to the regulation of the Nation; but that regulation is not exclusive if the corporation is also engaged in State commerce. In that event it is subject to regulation by both sovereigns, national and State.

Mr. HEYBURN. If it is engaged in it at all, even though it is engaged also in intrastate commerce?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; that is my position.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator from Nevada permit me there——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. How would the Senator from Nevada get at a remedy? For instance, a corporation is engaged in State commerce quite extensively and to a lesser extent in interstate commerce. Could the Federal Government do any more in the way of regulation than to prescribe the conditions under which it could engage in interstate commerce, and, failing to comply with those conditions, enjoin it from conducting interstate commerce? In other words, could it go further than that and undertake to prohibit the transaction of any business, or go to the extent of destroying a corporation that received its charter from a State? Where does the Senator stop in his proposal to regulate? Does he go to the extent of winding up or destroying this corporation if it should violate interstate regulation?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I have not gone into the question of the refinements as to the method of compelling obedience to national legislation upon this subject. My contention simply is that so long as a corporation of State creation engages in interstate commerce it is subject to regulation by the Nation, and that it can only escape that regulation by going out of interstate commerce. Of course, if it abandons interstate commerce, that moment it ceases to be controlled by the National Government.

Mr. HEYBURN. Will the Senator yield for another question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is there any railroad in the United States, under the rule suggested by the Senator, that is not engaged in interstate commerce? Would it not be equally interstate commerce if a railroad company, being all within a State, received goods for transportation over its own line, and thereafter over other lines outside of the State, under a contract of shipment? Would that not be interstate commerce?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Undoubtedly; and the regulation of the National Government would apply to such corporations existing entirely within the boundaries of a State but engaged in the transportation of passengers or freight between the States.

Mr. President, I was stating that the States themselves, or most of them, had not efficiently regulated the great railroad companies and other corporations engaged in both State commerce and interstate commerce; and even where they have sought to apply the proper limitations and restraints upon corporations created under their jurisdiction they have found that other States not so scrupulous have organized corporations with little restraint and large powers, whose purpose is not to engage in trade within the boundaries of the States under which they are created, but to engage in interstate commerce.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. If the Senator will pardon me, I suggest to him for his consideration this idea: Under our dual system of Government the States may regulate intrastate and the Federal Government may regulate interstate traffic.

That traffic is severable and divisible. But the issuance of stocks and bonds by a railroad company is not severable or divisible, measured by interstate or intrastate traffic; and the effect of any constitutional law passed by the Congress of the United States regulating the issuance of stocks and bonds by State corporations engaged in transportation would, in effect, destroy the rights of the States in those particulars to regulate freight carried wholly within the limits and confines of their territory.

The main suggestion I wish to make to the Senator is that the question of the issuance of stocks and bonds, unlike that of interstate and intrastate commerce, is not severable or divisible and it must be exercised wholly by one authority, as I believe.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator permit me there?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It seems to me the Senator from Texas touches upon a question that is really in the twilight zone, especially under the decision of Judge Sanborn. If a railroad is an interstate road, engaged in interstate commerce as well as intrastate commerce, can you separate what you call intrastate traffic from interstate traffic? Can you separate them effectively, or do they not, after all, so run into each other in effect that they are inseparable?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I recognize——

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest, in reply to the Senator from South Dakota, that the distinction is clearly drawn and the authority of Congress pointed out in the Nebraska case in the opinion by Mr. Justice Harlan, as I recall it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is the other decision to which the Senator refers a Supreme Court decision?

Mr. CULBERSON. Not in the Supreme Court. It is by Judge Sanborn, in a late case, construing the reasonableness or the unreasonableness of the combination of railroads. That was in the eighth circuit.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not want to trench on the time of the Senator from Nevada, but he is leading to an extremely interesting situation, that has not yet been settled, on that proposition. I think it was discussed by the Senator from Nevada two years ago. For instance, here is a railway, running through a half dozen States, engaged in interstate commerce, belonging to one owner. As a property it is an entirety. It has a common treasury and belongs to one set of stockholders.

Now, if one State through which it runs can say, "In this State you may charge for carrying passengers only a cent a mile," and another State, acting independently of that State, can say, "When you are in this State you may charge only three-fourths of a cent a mile," and then an adjoining State says, "In this State you may charge only 1 cent a mile," and then the Federal authorities say, "In interstate carriage you can charge only a cent and a half a mile," you have three or four different States, each acting independently of the others, taking a bite out of that cherry. You will have the Federal authority taking a bite out of that cherry; the States acting independently of each other and without regard to the result. Where are you going to stop? Where are you going to find the rule to apply when the question of confiscation of property is involved?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I recognize the force of the distinction as made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], but he must recall the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States has determined that the Interstate Commerce Commission, in the exercise of the rate-fixing function, must inquire into the valuation of the roads, the capitalization, the income, and other matters. So that capitalization becomes a factor to be considered by the National Government in the exercise of its power of regulation. Capitalization means fair capitalization, not an unfair or fictitious capitalization; and the Nation, in the exercise of the power of fixing rates, should not be deprived of one of its most important functions. It should have the right to deny a corporation created by the State the right to engage in interstate commerce unless it complied with the national requirements regarding capitalization.

It is not my purpose, however, to enter into an extended argument upon this question. If I find that upon this side of the Senate there are those who are so doubtful of the constitutional power of the Nation to regulate the capitalization of corporations engaged in interstate commerce when created by the States, I will, of course, yield to the withdrawal of this subject matter from the legislative program which I have presented, for I am intent upon the major proposition, namely, that the Senate shall take an orderly, decisive method of determining its own procedure, and shall reestablish itself in the confidence of the country by an utter abolition of the inertia and the inactivity which have characterized the past, and which have placed the Senate under strong condemnation by the country.

But with a view simply of making my statement upon this subject complete, I wish to present to Democrats who maintain the view of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], that this is a matter concerning which there has been contention in national Democratic conventions in the past, and concerning which there will be contentions in the future. I believe the voice of the Democracy of the country is in favor of the full exercise of the national power to regulate interstate commerce, wherever that power may lead. The last national convention so declared itself upon this very subject, and unequivocally declared in favor of the control of stock and bond issues of railroads engaged in interstate commerce by the National Government.

Unless the Democratic Party does take strong ground with reference to the exercise of national power upon this subject, it admits its incapacity to deal with the great questions that are pressing upon the consideration of the American people more than any others to-day, for almost all of them are embraced within the interstate-commerce power.

I was remarking that most of the States had not sought sufficiently to control the capitalization of corporations created by them and that even where they did they were the victims of corporations created in other States, less scrupulous and less virtuous, with a view to raiding upon the commerce between the States and oftentimes monopolizing it. We have found the State of New Jersey exercising the great national function of creating corporations, not for local business, but for the purpose of entering into interstate trade and interstate transportation upon the largest and most monopolistic scale, and the strictest adherents of State rights stand by and make no protest against such a State exercising a function which belongs to the Nation.

I can understand how a State could be somewhat jealous with regard to the interference with the powers and privileges of corporations created by itself, but we all know that the transportation and the commerce of the Southern States, where the State rights theory prevails in its utmost intensity, is practically absorbed by corporations organized in States other than the Southern States. We have the whole system of transportation of 10 or 11 States in the South controlled in the case of the Southern Railway by a corporation organized in the single State of Virginia, and in the case of the Louisville & Nashville by a corporation organized in the State of Kentucky, I believe, and in the case of the Atlantic Coast Railway by a corporation organized under the laws of Connecticut, in which State there is not a mile of the railroad. Then we have outside of the South the great Southern Pacific Railroad, organized and transacting a large national business under a charter granted by the State of Kentucky, in which there is not a mile of the track of the Southern Pacific Railroad.

So during the last 20 years States like New Jersey have usurped the national function by creating corporations with almost unrestrained powers, holding companies organized to unionize corporate properties in the different States for the purpose of interstate commerce. The devoted adherents of State rights have looked on with complacency while this was being done, being content, apparently, that a single sister State should usurp a function which belongs to the Nation rather than that the Nation itself should exercise it. So this is a question that will not down. It has to be discussed amongst ourselves. It will have to be discussed in the next national convention.

The Democratic Party will have to declare itself in favor of the fullest exercise of the national power over interstate commerce or it will confess its inability to meet great national requirements and will have to content itself with the position of simply being a State party, devoted to economy, devoted to reform, devoted to the regulation of monopoly within the boundaries of the respective States, but confessing its inability to deal with these great questions of interstate commerce in comparison with which State commerce has become a thing of insignificance, for commerce to-day has no regard whatever for the imaginary lines that bound States.

My contention, Mr. President, is that true Democratic consistency demands that we should not only preserve the distinction between State sovereignty and national sovereignty; we should not only demand the full exercise of the State rights and deny to the Nation the right to intrude upon State rights, but that we should also declare our determination to exercise to the full the powers granted by the States to the Nation in the interest of all the people; and that with reference to this power, the most unequivocable power granted in the Constitution, the right to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, the only right that an individual State has is to demand that its Representatives in Congress shall exercise the power granted to the Union of States.

Mr. President, I do not know whether it will be possible now to have action upon this resolution. I should like to hear from other Senators in this body regarding it. I should like to hear from my party associates upon this subject. It is true that I have referred to many subjects matter concerning which public opinion is made up and with reference to which legislation is demanded, but this has only been in a suggestive way. The whole resolution is subject to the powers of inclusion and of exclusion. I should like to listen to a full discussion of the question; first, as to whether we should take a recess at all; second, as to the date to which that recess shall be taken; third, as to the questions which shall be taken up either for legislative or committee action.

Mr. CULBERSON. I judge from the remarks of the Senator from Nevada that he does not desire to take final action on the resolution this morning; and in view of other business which is desired to be transacted by several Senators of which I have notice, I will defer any further remarks in reply to what has been submitted by the Senator from Nevada.

WEYMOUTH BACK RIVER BRIDGE, MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I submit a report from the Committee on Commerce. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3024) to provide for the reconstruction, alteration, and repair of a bridge across the Weymouth Back River in the State of Massachusetts, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 107) thereon.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for the present consideration of the bill. It is brief.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF BLACK WARRIOR RIVER, ALA.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama obtained the floor.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I simply wish to state that I did not intend to yield the floor for other business. I understood that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] wished to speak on the pending resolution, and I was not disposed to allow other business to intervene.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the Senator from Nevada yielded the floor because the Senator took his seat, and the Chair recognized the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. The Chair has now recognized the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I wish to call up the bill (S. 943) to improve navigation on Black Warrior River, in the State of Alabama. It is a local bill. It relates solely to Alabama, and it has had its third reading.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will ask whether the bill has any provision in it for payment for the use of water power.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. There is already an amendment to that effect. It is all approved by the Board of Engineers. The amendments have been agreed to, and the bill has been read the third time.

Mr. SMOOT. I personally have not gone into the provisions of the bill, but I know that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is interested in it.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is in entire sympathy with me, I assure the Senator from Utah. I conferred with him this morning.

Mr. SMOOT. And he stated it would be satisfactory to him?

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. He stated that it would be entirely satisfactory to him.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the passage of the bill, if it is satisfactory to the Senator from Ohio.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Davis	McCumber	Pomerene
Bailey	Dillingham	McLean	Reed
Bankhead	Foster	Martin, Va.	Root
Borah	Gore	Martine, N. J.	Shively
Bourne	Gronna	Myers	Smith, Mich.
Brandegee	Guggenheim	Nelson	Smoot
Bryan	Heyburn	Newlands	Stone
Burnham	Johnson, Me.	O'Gorman	Sutherland
Burton	Johnston, Ala.	Oliver	Swanson
Chamberlain	Jones	Overman	Taylor
Chilton	Kenyon	Owen	Thornton
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Page	Townsend
Crane	La Follette	Paynter	Warren
Culberson	Lippitt	Perkins	Wetmore
Curtis	Lodge	Poindexter	Works

Mr. CHILTON. My colleague [Mr. WATSON] is detained at home by the death of a relative, and is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, in view of the changed condition and the suggestion of the Senator from Nevada that he wants this resolution now disposed of, I desire to say a word or so more than I did awhile ago.

The second proposition in the resolution of the Senator reads:

> Second. Providing for the control by the Interstate Commerce Commission of the stock and bond issues of railroads engaged in interstate commerce, with a view to preventing overcapitalization.

Obviously, Mr. President, if this resolution shall be adopted, it will commit the Senate to the cold proposition that the control of the States over the issue of bonds and stocks by railroad companies chartered by a State, wherever they are engaged in interstate commerce, will be absolutely ousted and conferred upon the Federal Government. To that proposition I am absolutely and unequivocally opposed, and I believe that all Democrats, when they consider the matter, will occupy to it the same relation.

I have suggested an amendment, after the word "commerce," to insert the words "and incorporated under the laws of the United States." As so amended I would not object to this provision of the resolution, because of the Federal character of the corporation. The Federal Government might constitutionally regulate the issuance of stocks and bonds; but wherever the corporations are created by the States in good faith for operation within their borders, although they may be engaged in interstate commerce, and although they must engage in interstate commerce if it is offered to them, the Federal Government has constitutionally no power to regulate their internal affairs. The Senator from Nevada suggests that he will expunge from his resolution the second provision, and I hope that will be done if the amendment I have suggested is not adopted.

One word further, Mr. President. I understood the Senator from Nevada to suggest that the Democratic national platform provided, in effect, that the Federal Government should, through the Interstate Commerce Commission, exercise control over the issuance of stocks and bonds by corporations engaged in interstate commerce and chartered by the States. I do not so recollect the platform, and upon examining it I have found no such provision. In substantiation of what I have said, I ask that there shall be inserted at this place in what I am saying two paragraphs of the national platform, one entitled "The Rights of the States" and the other under the heading of "Railroad regulation," as printed in the World Almanac.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE RIGHTS OF THE STATES.

Believing, with Jefferson, in "the support of the State governments in all their rights as the most competent administration for our domestic concerns, and the surest bulwark against anti-Republican tendencies," and in "the preservation of the General Government in its whole constitutional vigor, as the sheet anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad," we are opposed to the centralization implied in the suggestions now frequently made, that the powers of the General Government should be extended by judicial construction. There is no twilight zone between the Nation and the State in which exploiting interests can take refuge from both; and it is as necessary that the Federal Government shall exercise the powers delegated to it as it is that the State governments shall use the authority reserved to them; but we insist that Federal remedies for the regulation of interstate commerce and for the prevention of private monopoly shall be added to, not substituted for, State remedies.

RAILROAD REGULATION.

We assert the right of Congress to exercise complete control over interstate commerce and the right of each State to exercise like control over commerce within its borders.

We demand such enlargement of the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission as may be necessary to compel railroads to perform their duties as common carriers and prevent discrimination and extortion.

We favor the efficient supervision and rate regulation of railroads engaged in interstate commerce. To this end we recommend the valuation of railroads by the Interstate Commerce Commission, such valuation to take into consideration the physical value of the property, the original cost and cost of reproduction, and all elements of value that will render the valuation made fair and just.

We favor such legislation as will prohibit the railroads from engaging in business which brings them into competition with their shippers; also legislation which will assure such reduction in transportation rates as conditions will permit, care being taken to avoid reduction that would compel a reduction of wages, prevent adequate service, or do injustice to legitimate investments.

We heartily approve the laws prohibiting the pass and the rebate, and we favor any further necessary legislation to restrain control and prevent such abuses.

We favor such legislation as will increase the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission, giving to it the initiative with reference to rates and transportation charges put into effect by the railroad companies, and permitting the Interstate Commerce Commission on its own initiative to declare a rate illegal and as being more than should be charged for such service. The present law relating thereto is inadequate by reason of the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission is without power to fix or investigate a rate until complaint has been made to it by the shipper.

We further declare that all agreements of traffic or other associations of railway agents affecting interstate rates, service, or classification shall be unlawful, unless filed with and approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

We favor the enactment of a law giving to the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to inspect proposed railroad tariff rates or schedules before they shall take effect, and if they be found to be unreasonable, to initiate an adjustment thereof.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understood further, Mr. President, that the Senator from Nevada would accept an amendment which I noted in this language:

> Revision downward of the iron and steel schedules.

Am I correct in that?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes. I will accept that as a substitute for the second paragraph of my resolution. I will simply quote from the platform of the Democratic Party the following words:

> We favor such legislation as will prohibit the railroads from engaging in business which brings them into competition with their shippers; also legislation preventing the overissue of stocks and bonds by interstate railroads.

That I understand to be——

Mr. CULBERSON. From what platform is that?

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is from the last platform, the platform of 1908. However, Mr. President, I do not wish to provoke a discussion upon this matter. I know that there is a sincere difference of opinion amongst Democrats as to the constitutional power——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, we can not hear what is being said on the other side of the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan makes the point of order——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, there seems to be a confusion as to the meaning of the Democratic platform. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has his view of it and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] has his view of it; but we can not hear either one of those Senators. We are not able over here to hear satisfactorily.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, as I simply wish to get the matter in the RECORD, it is unnecessary to repeat it.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, whatever differences there may be about the Democratic platform, there are none with reference to the Republican platform.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not find any such provision as that read by the Senator from Nevada in the Democratic platform as published in 1908.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is in the copy I have, and is just as I have read it.

However, Mr. President, it is unnecessary to engage in a contention upon this point. I accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas regarding the revision downward of the iron and steel tariff schedules as a substitute for the second paragraph of my resolution.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I wish to give my approval to the purpose of the resolution of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and to the resolution itself as amended. I go somewhat further than the Senator from Nevada, perhaps, believing, as I do, that the personal convenience of Senators and of the Members of the House of Representatives should not be weighed too heavily in comparison with the duties they have to perform and the services which they might now render to the people of the United States by continuous active work in giving the country relief from monopoly. I should much prefer that there should be no adjournment at all, but that Congress should proceed with the business of legislating for the relief of the people of this country. In order to do that efficiently, I think the Senate ought to lay down a program by which they shall be guided; and the consideration of the questions proposed by the Senator from Nevada is certainly of the first magnitude.

For 40 years this country has been trying to arrive at reasonable freight and passenger rates. For a long period of time the Interstate Commerce Commission, charged with the duty of studying this question, have year after year recommended to Congress the necessity for the physical valuation of railroads as a necessary basis upon which to determine what is a reasonable freight rate and a reasonable charge for passenger service. It has been 5 or 6 years since the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], in a magnificent speech, pointed out the sound reasons and urgent need for such legislation as this.

Why is it that the representatives of the people of the United States in the Senate sit still and refuse the most obvious relief necessary to the adjustment of this question? I do not understand why the Senate of the United States not only will not pass legislation which is essential and which has been repeatedly declared over and over again by the Interstate Commerce Commission as necessary in order to arrive at a fair freight rate, but I do not understand why the Senate sits in its place, gives no response, and will not even now, in all human probability, declare in favor of the program of considering the physical valuation of the railroads.

At present the Interstate Commerce Commission are compelled to compare the rates of one road with the rates of another road in order to determine whether the rate in either case is reasonable, although both rates are grossly excessive that are compared with each other; but in no case have they a definite, reliable foundation. You must know what the physical valuation of the property is, what the amount of freight carried is, what the earning power is, in order to determine as a rational proposition what is a fair and just rate; and if you do not give the opportunity for the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine by the physical valuation and the volume of freight what a fair rate is, in effect you deny the people of this country the relief from the transportation monopolies that have so long dominated not only the commerce but the governing function itself. Their influence upon this body has made it a bulwark of special privilege, and it ought not to be so any longer. The time has come for plain speech, and I hope my speech is not misunderstood on this question. The Senator from Wisconsin seemed to stand alone six years ago, but he has support now.

Here is a proposal from the Senator from Nevada, asking the Senate to consider what it will do—whether it will or whether it will not proceed to the settlement of these most important questions of railway and industrial monopoly. I am heartily in favor of the resolution, and I hope a majority of Senators are in favor of it.

Equally important as the physical valuation of railroad properties, if not more important, is the regulation of industrial monopolies which control all the manufactured goods in this country, whether they be fabrics, whether they be textiles, whether they be woolen goods or cotton goods or silk goods, or whether they be goods of iron and steel and brass and copper, whether they be materials for clothing men or for sheltering men or building materials. All of these things and all manufactured articles and many food products are controlled by industrial monopolies, which are taking from the people of this country a very large and unfair part of the proceeds of their labor by superior commercial craft, by the restraint of competition, by monopoly artfully established throughout this Union. The time has come to consider the termination of these cruel wrongs. Will the Senate agree to it or will they refuse?

The Senator from Nevada proposes that the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of these vital questions and their solution. What are you going to do about it? Nothing. Sit still, let no vote be taken, or vote "no." There ought to be a record vote upon this proposal.

Then there is the consideration of the lowering of the steel schedule proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and provision for the reform of the banking laws, with a view to the security of bank depositors and the prevention of bank panics. That is a matter of easy solution, a matter which several years ago I urged vigorously upon the floor of the Senate. There is no reason why there should not be established a mutual insurance plan for the protection of depositors. It will cost the banks nothing; it will benefit the contributing banks; it will give greater stability to the banking fraternity; it will give a greater volume of credit, and promote the commerce of this country and promote our prosperity. Why should the Senate not consider this question?

The control of transportation, the control of industrial monopoly, the stability of commerce by the protection of bank deposits are fundamental economic questions, and urgently demand immediate consideration and early settlement.

I am in favor of this resolution, and I am in favor of the Senate of the United States staying in continuous session until they have offered the country a satisfactory solution of all of these questions.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to take just about three minutes of the time of the Senate in discussing this resolution. I am in favor of all of it except the last part of the resolution, which provides for a recess of Congress until November. To my mind, matters which are pressing upon the attention of Congress, including those matters which are referred to in this resolution, are of such overmastering importance to the country that there is absolutely no excuse for the adjournment of this session of Congress until it is merged by lapse of time into the opening of the next session. I will not say that a recess of two weeks might not be provided for at some time during the summer, in order to give Senators and Representatives the opportunity to return to their homes to arrange their business affairs; but I do say this——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. REED. For a question, of course; or for a remark.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I simply desire to suggest to the Senator that the latter part of the resolution is purely tentative, with a view to getting the opinion of the Senate as to the time of the recess that we should take. We can easily get the sense of the Senate on all the provisions in the resolution except the last, and then take the last one separately.

Mr. REED. I understand the sincerity of the Senator from Nevada; and I want to say to the Members of the Senate that I think we can all afford to put off conversation in the Senate and think a little bit now and here about matters that the country is thinking about and that the country will think more about.

Now, to begin with, the people of the United States are paying us our salaries to stay here and attend to public business that needs attention. I think the people of the United States are entitled to all of our time, and that the only excuse for ever adjourning is that the public business has been attended to and attended to properly.

There is no method known to the criminal lawyer or to the man who stands to defend a dishonest case so potential as that of continuances. There is no method known to the legislator who stands opposed to any change or any reform quite so potential and seductive as to propose that you hurry up and get through with the present pending bills and adjourn.

There is not a trust magnate in the United States who does not want to see this Congress adjourn to-morrow. There is not a special interest that does not want the Senate to adjourn on the instant. And why? Because a peculiar situation has been developed here. It is now manifest that the progressive element of the Republican Party and the Democrats command the legislative field.

The progressives claim to be, with the Democratic Party, ardently in favor of many great reforms for which Democracy has contended for years. That progressive element of the Republican Party and the Democrats can write these reforms into the laws of the country if they want to stay here and do it. Therefore there is in the situation a menace to these great interests. They understand that the Senate no longer is the bulwark behind which they can safely repose. They understand there is a real majority against the evils they have so long perpetrated, I shall regret exceedingly to hear any talk of adjournment from the progressive Republicans or from the Democrats.

I want to appeal to some on the other side who have not classed themselves as progressive Republicans. We passed on Saturday the reciprocity bill. I saw man after man, not classing himself as a progressive Republican, stand upon the other side of this Chamber and declare that that bill was fraught with every kind of injustice to the farmers of this country. They did not claim that the injustice consisted in the fact that the tariff was being taken off of the farmer's products so much as they insisted that he was being taxed upon all he bought and protected upon nothing he had to sell.

If that is true, then I appeal to those men to stay here in this body until the tariff has been so reformed that the agriculturists of this country will be treated fairly, according to their theory as to what is fair. If we are to believe what we hear and what we must know is true, from all the facts, then, as has been said by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], the great transportation problem is pressing upon us. The railroads of this country have fought, and will continue to fight, against any investigation of their property that will get at its real value. These great transportation companies have fought, and will continue to fight, against any method that may be proposed to limit the issuance of fraudulent stocks and bonds upon which the people who ship and who travel are constantly compelled to pay interest and dividends.

We have the power to right these evils if we will stay and work; and I ask the insurgent Republican if he means business and proposes to stay? I turn and with the same force ask the Democrats, who for 40 years have been going before the people of this country demanding reforms they could not obtain, if they are willing to stay until we find whether the progressive Republican really will help us write these remedies into the law.

And I ask the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], who has stood here in this Senate for weeks looking like the living embodiment of intellectual jaundice, and proclaiming that the world was about to come to an end, at least in North Dakota, if we passed the reciprocity bill, if he is not willing to stay here and help us right some of the evils he has declared exist?

We have no right to adjourn this session now that the reciprocity bill is passed. Democrats, that bill came to you from a Republican President. It was his measure. There is not a Democrat here who has ever said or will say that it is a Democratic measure. All we have ever said of it is that it took the top rail off the fence of protection; that at best it was just a little hole through the dike of privilege; that at most it was only one step in the right direction. I ask you now if you are not willing to stay here and pass up to the Republican President some real tariff reform that will give the people of this country relief? We have no right because the month of August approaches and the hot weather is upon us and has been upon us, to abandon the post of duty, to seek the leisure of our homes or to rush to the lecture platforms that we may gather fees and percentages to fill our private purses. Our business is here; our duty is here; and for one I am ready to stay here every day this summer and on through the fall until the next session of Congress is convened.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have not changed my mind with respect to the propriety of doing something to relieve the people of this country from the burdens they are now bearing. I have done what I could to induce the Members of the Senate to take off some of the duties levied upon imports, which would furnish some relief to a suffering people. Hitherto, however, we have been unsuccessful. That unsuccess does not in the least diminish my desire to continue the efforts that we have been making, and I am quite willing to turn from the tariff, which seems to be an unfruitful subject—during this session at least—to another of vastly more importance that the tariff.

I believe it to be true that the regulation of our combinations of enterprise and of capital, the check upon the tendency toward monopoly and agreement, present the most serious as well as the most vital problem before the American Congress and the American people; and I for one am quite willing to remain at my desk until we have done whatsoever we could to find the real solution for this problem. I favor this resolution in its spirit, but there are two objections to it which I now point out for the consideration of its author.

First, I do not think it is wise to limit the pledge which is contained in the resolution, if it should pass, to this session. Every Senator here knows that, working as diligently as we could, the field is too great to be fully occupied or fully covered during the present session. I think we ought to pledge ourselves to continue this work until it shall be completed. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], with his usual public spirit, with his usual long vision into a somewhat clouded future, must know that if we adjourn or take a recess now until the 1st of November we can not, during the month which intervenes between that time and the regular session of December, complete a single one of the bills which may grow out of this resolution. I believe, therefore, that he ought to be willing, and I have no doubt that he will be willing, so to enlarge the scope of his resolution that its passage will constitute a pledge on the part of the Senate that we will take up those questions and continue with them and about them until we have determined what ought to be done with respect to them.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would be very glad to accept any amendment in that direction. The suggestion as to the recess was purely tentative. I myself would prefer a shorter recess than the one named in the resolution, but I assumed that it would be a matter for discussion on the floor of the Senate, and that we would get the sense of the Senate upon that question. I quite agree with the Senator from Iowa that these matters ought to be considered until they are finally disposed of and the legislation itself is enacted.

Mr. CUMMINS. With respect to the recess, I am not particular as to its exact duration. I feel that we must have a period of rest and recuperation, after the arduous labors both of mind and body during the last few weeks. I believe a brief respite would heal some of the wounds, possibly, and would return us to the Chamber with a better temper for legislation than now seems to exist. But I think the recess should be short, and that we should resume our work upon these matters just as soon as the convenience or the necessities of the various Members of the Senate can be served, as suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

I now come to my second objection to the resolution. It grows out of the third paragraph, which I will read:

> Third. Providing for an interstate trade commission with powers of investigation, correction, and recommendation regarding corporations engaged in interstate trade, similar, so far as practicable, to those conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission regarding corporations engaged in interstate transportation.

In my opinion, Mr. President, this is altogether too narrow. If I may be permitted to lay my view of the subject before the Senate in a very few words, I would suggest that I think it was in 1889 that John Sherman introduced the bill out of which finally came the law of 1890, known as the antitrust law. In the bill which he introduced, and as it was originally reported to the Senate, instead of the words "restraint of trade," which are the vital and governing words of the antitrust law, there were employed these words—I do not pretend to quote them exactly—"substantial and real competition." I mention that only to call to the attention of Senators the fact that the antitrust law was originated in a desire to preserve competition in the industrial life of the United States.

The course of this bill through the committee and through the Senate was a very interesting one; but those who are familiar with it will bear witness, I think, to the truth of this conclusion, that never at any time was there a departure from the original idea, namely, a desire to maintain competition as an active, real force in fixing prices and in determining conditions; and the law of 1890, as it was finally passed, has no other object except to preserve competition. It passed into law, and I think everyone must agree that however effectually it may be enforced, I care not how stringently it may be enforced, it will not preserve that full measure of competition which the people of this country have a right to demand and expect. It will not preserve competition as the governing force in trade and commerce for the fixing of prices. Therefore, if we are to carry out the design of the author of the antitrust law and the design of the great number of Senators who espoused it upon the floor of the Senate, and by whose votes it finally became the law of the country, it is essential that we shall do something to supplement it in order to make it a more effective instrument in preserving competition and in preventing combination and monopoly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa will suspend for a moment. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 11019) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. CUMMINS. The course of development of the last 20 years has very clearly indicated that in and of itself it will not accomplish the full purpose of those who gave it being. Now, in these last days another theory has arisen, and I am not disparaging it. I do not want to condemn it because——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator give way to the Chair for a moment? Under the rule of the Senate the resolution offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] will go to the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I was going to ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the consideration of the resolution be continued.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. I object to the unfinished business being temporarily laid aside; but the Senator from Iowa, of course I need not suggest to him, can go right on with his speech.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly; the Senator from Iowa has the floor. But the Chair wanted to clear up the situation about the resolution. It has gone to the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. CUMMINS. As I was remarking when interrupted, in recent days another school of thought has been established and it finds a great many disciples and advocates. It is practically that the law of civilization or the fundamental law of our development has made competition impossible, and therefore we must acknowledge and must recognize combination and monopoly, and in looking forward to the further functions of the Government with respect to combination and monopoly it is necessary that we shall take the additional step, namely, of giving to the Government of the United States the power through some tribunal to fix prices or determine profits. Here, I think, is the greatest issue of modern times, that we must recognize and that we must determine in so far as the Senate of the United States can determine an issue.

We must now—it can not be delayed—determine whether competition is to be a live force in the industry of the United States in the future, whether we shall allow combinations and monopolies to come into existence, or allow them to be perpetuated if already in existence, and protect the people against their exactions through some governmental instrumentality fixing prices or limiting profits.

I have no hesitation in saying that while I recognize the very great ability of many who are advocating the modern theory, advocating it as the president of the United States Steel Corporation recently advocated it, recognizing it as the distinguished Attorney General recognized it a few days ago in his address delivered before the Bar Association of Minnesota at Duluth, but recognizing those views as honest and sound views and recognizing that these very monopolies and combinations have come into existence in spite of and in violation of the antitrust law, I am still for competition; I still believe that the antitrust law ought not to be repealed, and it must be repealed if these modern views are to prevail. I still believe that the antitrust law, coupled with a further regulation with respect to corporations so organized, whether under Federal law or whether under State law, can be preserved; and I would be very sorry to see a resolution adopted which does not recognize this issue, which limits our consideration apparently to the mere organization of an interstate commerce tribunal or industrial commission.

I think the paragraph ought to be broadened so as to embrace the entire subject of which I have been speaking, and so that it would take in any bill that may be introduced along the lines I have suggested, whether introduced to accomplish governmental regulation of monopoly or whether introduced to insure effective competition.

If the Senator from Nevada would change his resolution in that respect so that it would meet the real situation as I know he desires to meet it, I would be wholly in favor of it. I do not say that I am against it as it is, but I make these suggestions in order that the author of the resolution may consider them, and possibly when the resolution is to be voted upon bring in such amendments to it as he thinks will meet the suggestions or objections I have made, if he deems them worthy of consideration or approval.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to state regarding the third subdivision of the resolution providing for an interstate trade commission that my purpose in framing it was not to commit anyone who voted for the resolution to any prescribed powers in the commission. My view was that an interstate trade commission could be organized similar to the Interstate Commerce Commission, without interfering in anyway whatever with the enforcement of the Sherman antitrust act. The Senator realizes, of course, that the act creating the Interstate Commerce Commission is being enforced as to the railroads pari passu with the antitrust act.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely; but, Mr. President, I know the view of the Senator from Nevada. He has expressed that view in a bill which he has introduced, which is now pending before the Interstate Commerce Committee. I have a different view with regard to some of these things. Whether more radical or less radical than the views of the Senator from Nevada I do not undertake to say, but it is a different view. I do not think the Senator from Nevada wants a resolution passed that will practically limit the consideration of the Senate to the bill he has introduced. There will be a good many views upon this subject, I have no doubt, because it is a great, comprehensive topic. I hope the Senator will be willing to so amend or so rewrite the third paragraph as will enable the Senate, without going beyond the resolution, if it should be adopted, to take up and consider all the suggestions or views in the way of bills upon this subject which may come in.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to state that I would be very glad to modify the paragraph in accord with the views of the Senator from Iowa. It is not my purpose to commit any Senator in voting for the resolution to any particular form of legislation. The purpose was to call the attention of the Senate to the subject matter.

I will state, with reference to the bill to which the Senator has referred, regarding the creation of an interstate trade commission, which I have introduced and which is now pending before the Interstate Commerce Committee, I expressly stated that the purpose of the bill was to maintain free competition, and not to interfere with it; and the bill contains no provision whatever for fixing prices by this commission.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely; it is the very——

Mr. NEWLANDS. So I think we are in substantial accord upon that question. At the same time, I will state that the bill is not inconsistent with the granting of such a power, if hereafter it should be deemed advisable, for I imagine there will be a great contention in this country between those who insist upon it that free competition, which many characterize as brutal competition, should be continued, and that others are equally zealous in favor of the new idea of beneficial cooperation and the doing away with so-called brutal competition.

Mr. CUMMINS. All that I desire is that the third paragraph shall be broad enough so that it will embrace whatever supplementary legislation is thought desirable; I mean supplementary to the antitrust law, which is the only legislation we now have respecting industrial enterprises.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would be very glad to consult with the Senator regarding a modification of the paragraph.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would be very glad. If it is not voted upon now, when it comes before the Senate again I would propose a substitute for paragraph 3 which, I believe, will meet the approval of the Senator from Nevada, and I hope he will change the first sentence so that if the resolution is adopted it will not expire with the present session.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that if I had placed the interpretation upon the resolution which the Senator from Iowa fears may be placed upon it, I could not support it. I did not understand the resolution to intend to commit the Senate to the creation of any board or to commit the Senate upon any matter further than that it would take up and consider these various questions.

I am very far from believing that we have arrived at a time in the history of the industrial development of our country when we must accept the views of the president of the Steel Corporation and make the Government a partner in the various great industries, and then divide the entire profits among the proprietors of the industry. I understood the resolution simply to express the sense of the Senate that we should consider these matters. I agree with the Senator from Iowa that probably the language ought to be enlarged so that there can be no possible misunderstanding.

I want to say one word further. The Senator from Iowa speaks of going home and "coming back better natured." I never saw a better-natured body in the world, and I never saw a better-natured man in the body than the Senator from Iowa. He does not need to go home to get any kind of soothing sirup or nerve tonic. I think he is in good working condition. But I do not agree with the Senator from Iowa in his statement—which, if not plainly set forth, has at least expressed by innuendo—that he and other progressive Republicans have been trying to have some real tariff legislation enacted, and that because this legislation was not accomplished at once and in the manner they desired, it should now be abandoned and consideration given to other matters. The plain truth about the matter is this: There was before this body the reciprocity bill. There was in this body a majority of Senators who believed that if reciprocity was passed there ought to be also passed certain tariff reductions—certain tariff reforms. They also believed that whether reciprocity was passed or not these reforms ought to take place.

The Senator from Iowa has his idea of reduction. The Democrats upon this side probably have a more radical idea of reduction; but there were certain of us, and it was a majority of the Senate, who believed that the reciprocity bill ought to be passed alone and that the other measures ought to be considered afterwards. Now, because the Senator from Iowa was not able to amend the reciprocity bill before its passage it does not relieve him from the obligation and it does not relieve the Senate from the obligation of considering these measures, now that they are before the Senate. I am sure the Senator from Iowa does not mean to abandon tariff-reform legislation at this session simply because his amendments were not agreed to as a part of the reciprocity bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I hope that nothing I said will leave any such impression upon the mind of either the Senator from Missouri or any other Senator. I was never more devoted to tariff reform than I am at this moment, or tariff revision, if those words express my meaning better. I think that having put the farmers of this country into free competition with their only rivals, it becomes a more sacred and a more imperative duty, if there can be degrees of duty, than ever before to give them an opportunity to buy in a freer market than they have had.

I will say to the Senator from Missouri and to the Senate that before the 1st day of August shall come to an end every Senator here will have an opportunity to vote for a reduction, and marked reductions, in all the prominent schedules of the tariff law. I believe the Senator from Missouri, while we have differed with regard to the propriety of amending the so-called reciprocity measure, will hail that opportunity and will improve it as well, because I have faith that all those who are in favor of lower duties will concur now in some of these measures which will be intended and are intended for the relief of the people.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am very glad to hear the statement of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] regarding the promised tariff reduction. Undoubtedly a majority on this floor is in favor of tariff reduction, and it would be a disgrace to the controlling element in this body, which has demonstrated so often at this session its ability to control it, if we should adjourn without a substantial reduction in the tariff.

I am aware that this purpose may or can be defeated by a maneuvering for position in the next presidential race, but I do not believe those considerations will control. There has been a difference of view between the friends of tariff revision regarding the reciprocity treaty, the Democratic Senators insisting that it would be endangered by amendments, and therefore joining in voting down propositions for a reduction which under other conditions it would have sustained. The reciprocity treaty is now out of the way. I trust that no such feeling amongst the friends of a substantial reduction was created by the contentions of the past as to prevent them from getting together in the future.

I made no reference in the substitute resolution which is now before the Senate to tariff legislation because I felt that under the standing orders of the Senate it would be possible to get a vote before the 10th of August next upon every form of proposition for tariff reduction of every scale, if the Senate should deem it advisable. So I made no reference to that question because I feel it was disposed of by the standing orders.

Mr. President, as I have already stated, the purpose is not to commit the Senate to any prescribed form of action with reference to the subject matter covered by the resolution.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. I desire to remind the Senator from Nevada that with the exception of the free list, in which some of the items of the steel schedule are placed on the free list, there is not anything in the standing orders looking to a revision of the iron and steel schedule.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That is true, Mr. President, but there is nothing to prevent us from moving a reduction of the iron and steel schedule as an amendment either to the free-list bill or the wool bill or the cotton bill. Under that process we again cover every phase of legislation regarding the tariff.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know whether the Senator from Nevada noticed it or not, but the other day I introduced an amendment to the reciprocity measure which was intended to reduce the duty upon the iron and steel schedule, or indeed the entire metal schedule, 40 per cent. I think the duties would still be fairly protective if reduced 40 per cent.

I only rose to suggest to the Senator from Nevada that when we come to consider, say, the free-list bill, I intend to offer the reduction or revision of the metal schedule as an amendment to the free-list bill, and I hope it will prevail. I not only hope but I have the expectation that we will be able to reduce the duties on the steel schedule long before we can pass through the program which is contained in the resolution of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I see no reason why the Senator from Iowa should not reasonably hope for the accomplishment of that which he has in view.

Mr. President, there was some discussion between the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and myself regarding the national platform of the Democratic Party. The Senator read from the platform, as printed in the World Almanac, under the head of "Railroad regulation," the fourth paragraph, and that paragraph contained no allusion to legislation preventing the overissue of stocks and bonds by interstate railroads.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit me to conclude my statement——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I desire to know what the Senator is reading from.

The VICE PRESIDENT. One moment. The Senator from Nevada asks that he be not interrupted until he has completed his statement.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I wanted to know what the Senator was reading from.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I read from the platform in a pamphlet compiled by the Clerk of the House of Representatives and printed by the Government Printing Office, which, in the fourth paragraph under the heading above referred to, provided for legislation preventing the issue of stocks and bonds by interstate railroads. The Senator from Texas has shown me the official record of the Democratic national convention at Denver, Colo., for 1908. I find that this print in the fourth paragraph under the head of "Railroad regulation" is substantially as the Senator from Texas asserts, and contains no allusion to preventing by legislation the overissue of stocks and bonds by interstate railroads.

I am in some confusion about this matter, for I happened to be a member of the subcommittee and of the general committee on platform of the last Democratic national convention, and the impression that I had was verified by the pamphlet which I produced. It was that the platform explicitly called for legislation preventing such overissue. I am, of course, however, compelled to yield to the official print of the national platform and to admit the correctness of the statement of the Senator from Texas.

THE STANDARD OIL AND THE AMERICAN TOBACCO COS.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, several days ago I gave notice that I would call up Senate concurrent resolution No. 4 this morning. The resolution which has been under discussion has consumed the morning hour, and the unfinished business is now the order. I therefore desire to give notice that at the conclusion of the routine business in the morning I shall then call up Senate concurrent resolution No. 4.

PRINTING OF TARIFF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I bespeak the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and of other members of the Finance Committee. By reference to the Journal of the Senate of the 28th day of April, 1911, I find that the following order was made:

Ordered, That the Committee on Finance be authorized and directed to have prepared and printed all proceedings in the Senate with reference to the tariff act of 1842, including the act itself, together with the two veto messages of President Tyler.

Also all proceedings with reference to the tariff act of 1846, including the act itself, together with the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, made to Congress in December, 1845, known as the Walker report, and the act of 1857 modifying the act of 1846.

Also all proceedings with reference to the reciprocity treaty of 1854, together with the act passed in pursuance thereof; also the repealing act.

That order, as it appears, was made by the Senate nearly three months ago, and was made with special reference to legislation coming before the Senate at this session. I must assume that it was on the authority of this order that there has been printed and laid on our desks Senate Document No. 21. This volume contains over 500 pages. It embodies the proceedings of the Senate on the tariff act of 1842. It contains no reference to the tariff act of 1846. It contains no reference to the tariff act of 1857. It contains nothing with reference to the Canadian reciprocity treaty of 1854. These measures were the subjects of the express order of the Senate. Nothing else was included in that order. Now, an examination of this volume discloses that while it contains no reference to three of the four measures included in the order of the Senate, it does include 27 tariff acts passed prior to the act of 1842, not one of which was included in the order of the Senate. Not only are these 27 acts set out in full in these pages, but also the yeas and nays taken on them on their passage in the Senate are published. What I want to know is how it comes to pass that these 27 acts and the votes thereon which were not ordered into this document by the Senate are incorporated in it while the proceedings on three of the four measures which the Senate did order published are not incorporated in it?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the first place, I wish to say to the Senator that the customs tariff act of 1842 is in the first volume, and to-morrow we shall have a book almost the size of the document to which the Senator has referred, containing the act of 1846, and then will follow a volume containing the act of 1857; in other words, there will be three large volumes.

In further answer to the Senator as to the question of why these acts have been included in this volume, I will state that that was done by order of the committee. The matter was passed upon by the committee, at the request of a member of the committee, while we were in session as a committee. I believe that that answers all the questions which the Senator has propounded.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, the practical difficulty attending this matter arises out of the fact that the information which the publication ordered by the Senate was designed to supply is laid before the Senate only after legislation on the particular subject has passed the Senate or has been otherwise disposed of by the Senate. I do not question the authority of the Finance Committee to order the publication of matter for their convenience. I do question the propriety of the committee ordering the publication of these 27 acts, to the neglect, delay, and exclusion of the publication expressly ordered by the Senate.

Now the Senator informs me that on to-morrow there will be laid before the Senate another volume, bearing on what?

Mr. SMOOT. On the act of 1846. That was ordered by the Senate.

Mr. SHIVELY. The debate has closed on the Canadian agreement. The vote has been taken. The bill has been passed and has gone to the President. When does the Senator think the proceedings of the Senate on the Canadian treaty of 1854, which were ordered published for use in considering the Canadian reciprocity bill of 1911, will be laid before the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we shall have it as soon as it is prepared. I wish to say to the Senator that it has been a most tedious work to gather all of this matter together, and there has been no time lost either in the Senate Finance Committee room or at the Public Printing Office. I recognize as well as does the Senator that the documents are late in getting into the hands of Senators, but it could not be helped. We have secured the data as quickly as possible from a great many sources, and it is being printed just as quickly as it is possible to print it.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, it is manifest that the purpose of the publication is not served, and that its usefulness is lost when delayed until after the subject matter on which it bears has been enacted into law. The only reason or excuse for its publication is light on pending legislation. It is still obviously peculiar that we should have published and placed before us a long series of acts not ordered by the Senate, and no timely publication of the proceedings expressly ordered by the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it took no time whatever to get the acts ready, because that was done within a very few hours; but if the Senator had the three volumes here he would find that there are quite a number of matters included in the three volumes that were not ordered printed by the Senate resolution. Members of the Finance Committee desired to have incorporated in the document certain information and certain letters, especially referring to the Walker tariff, and certain letters by Government officials; and those have all been secured as best they could be. I think the Senator will find those and a good many other things in the volumes that were not included in the resolution which passed the Senate.

Mr. SHIVELY. I have no doubt of it. This volume makes that statement probable. But a word further. As I understood the Senator a moment ago, he assured the Senate that there will be an additional volume ready by to-morrow.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; referring to the act of 1846.

Mr. SHIVELY. And when does the Senator think that the third and final volume of this publication will arrive?

Mr. SMOOT. It is now set up in print and will follow perhaps within a couple of days.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Indiana that it is very unfortunate that the Finance Committee did not publish this volume with reference to Canadian reciprocity before we passed upon that bill. I am quite sure that the light which would have been thrown upon the debate here and the facts which we would have obtained from that Canadian reciprocity agreement of 1854 would have changed a number of votes, especially upon the minority side of this Chamber. It is very unfortunate that the Finance Committee has been so slow in getting this information before the Senate.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. SHIVELY. Does the Senator from Idaho suspect that the Finance Committee had any ulterior motive in delaying the publication of these documents?

Mr. BORAH. I am very much of the opinion that the Finance Committee was withholding light from the minority side of this Chamber.

Mr. SMOOT. I will simply say, Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I will simply say that the Finance Committee had no intention of doing that, even though the result was as the Senator intimates.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator from Indiana and myself will agree that it is unfortunate that the light was not given.

Mr. SHIVELY. I am not agreeing as to the place or the extent of the misfortune. So far as light is concerned, we had plenty of it on our side.

Mr. SMOOT. Without this information?

Mr. SHIVELY. Certainly. But that does not excuse the delay in placing the information before the Senate in the convenient form and within the time contemplated by the order of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if there is no Senator who desires to address the Senate upon the unfinished business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 20 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, July 25, 1911, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate July 24, 1911.

INJUNCTION OF SECRECY REMOVED.

July 24, 1911, the Senate removed the injunction of secrecy from a convention looking to the protection and preservation of the fur seals and sea otters in a certain defined zone of the North Pacific Ocean, signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia, at Washington on July 7, 1911.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 25, 1911.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PROTECTION OF FUR SEALS.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for a reprint of the message from the President of the United States, transmitting a convention looking to the protection and preservation of the fur seals and sea otters in a certain defined zone of the North Pacific Ocean, signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia, at Washington on July 7, 1911.

The convention has been ratified and the injunction of secrecy removed. The supply is entirely exhausted, the executive clerk states. I ask that it be printed as a document. (S. Doc. No. 75.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order will be entered.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to state for the information of the Senate that in the document I had printed yesterday morning—Document No. 74, which is a comparison of the present and proposed rates on Schedule K—an error appears. On the second page, in the second item, in the column under the headline "Revenue for 1910," the revenue in the print on unwashed wool not on the skin is given at $111,879,578.40. It should have been $11,879,578.40. The Printing Office informs me that the error will be corrected.

There is also one item in the manuscript sent to the Printing Office relating to carpets which was omitted. That item will be included in the reprint.

Mr. CULBERSON. What was the last item?

Mr. STONE. An item relating to carpets, which was left out in the print, but it will appear in the corrected print.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that the Printing Office is going to reprint the document and make the corrections referred to by the Senator from Missouri.

I also want to call attention to another error in the document, which the Senator will notice, on wools of the second class in the comparison under what is called the Smoot rate. Under the item wool, scoured, it gives at 20 per cent under the Underwood ad valorem rate, and unwashed, 27 cents per pound under the Smoot rate, which of course is wrong. If the Senator has no objection, that correction will be made as well.

Mr. STONE. Certainly, I have no objection. I should like to ask the Senator, however, if he refers to the last two items on page 2?

Mr. SMOOT. No; not the last two items. That is camel's hair that the Senator refers to there. It is under class 2 wool, on page 2, where it gives the Payne rate at 36 cents per pound, actual and computed ad valorem rate, of $129.60; revenue for 1910, $19.44.

Mr. STONE. Yes; I have it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Underwood ad valorem is given at 20 per cent, and then it says Smoot rate, unwashed, 27 cents per pound. That is not true. It should be scoured, 27 cents per pound, instead of unwashed. So that ought to be changed.

Mr. STONE. Just that one item.

Mr. SMOOT. Then two lines below, under camel's hair, where it says scoured, unwashed, 27 cents per pound, that ought to read scoured, 27 cents per pound. Those are the two errors that I ask to have corrected.

Mr. STONE. I suggest to the Senator that he phone to the Printing Office and have the correction made, for it is likely to go to press again very soon.

Mr. SMOOT. I am aware of that, and I called the Senator's attention to it at this time because I wanted to telephone to the Public Printer to make the change.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented the memorial of G. C. Tanner, of the city of Washington, D. C., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CULLOM presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Illinois, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Texas and Indiana, praying for the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BURTON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Toledo, Ohio, praying for the adoption of the proposed constitution for the Territory of Arizona, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. McLEAN presented a memorial of the Fourth Division, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Hartford, Conn., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of the Merchants' Association of Pawtucket, R. I., praying that an appropriation be made providing for a 30-foot channel for Providence Harbor, in that State, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CLAIMS FOR LOSS OF PROPERTY.

Mr. OLIVER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 323) for the payment of certain claims for damages to and loss of private property, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 108) thereon.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE LIBRARY.

Mr. WARREN. From the Committee on Rules I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 21) increasing the membership of the Joint Committee of Congress upon the Library. The joint resolution is very short, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that the Joint Committee of Congress upon the Library, authorized by section 82 of the Revised Statutes, shall hereafter consist of eight Members of the Senate and eight Members of the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS OF THOMAS M. BROWER AND OTHERS.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am directed by the Committee on Claims to report favorably a resolution referring two claims to the Court of Claims. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 114) was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the claims of Thomas M. Brower and John M. Brower, heirs of Jacob W. Brower, deceased (S. 2962), and S. and W. Welsh and others (S. 2999), now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States, approved March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Tucker Act. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. CUMMINS introduced a bill (S. 3104) granting an increase of pension to John Fair, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMOOT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 130) making appropriations for certain expenses of the House of Representatives incident to the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSENGER TO COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. NELSON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 115), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger at a salary of $1,440 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. GRONNA submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 116), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk at a salary of $1,440 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

SUGAR-BEET CULTURE.

Mr. SMOOT. I present a letter, together with certain data prepared by Truman G. Palmer, concerning the indirect agricultural benefits which are derived from the culture of sugar beets. I move that the matter be printed as a Senate document. (S. Doc. No. 76.)

The motion was agreed to.

LOANS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill 25, known as the loan-shark bill. It ought not to take very much time. There are certain amendments proposed by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 25) to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, pawnbrokers, and real-estate brokers in the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has been read. Is there objection to its present consideration?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to be a very important measure. I think it had better be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 5, page 6, line 7, before the words "per centum," to strike out "two" and insert "one and one-half," so as to read:

SEC. 5. That no such person, firm, voluntary association, joint-stock company, incorporated society, or corporation shall charge or receive a greater rate of interest upon any loan made by him or it than 1½ per cent per month on the actual amount of the loan, and this charge shall cover all expenses, demands, and services of every character, including notarial and recording fees and charges, except upon the foreclosure of the security.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 6, line 23, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three" and insert "one," so as to read:

No such loan greater than $100 shall be made to any one person.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, there seems to be general consent that this legislation shall go through with very scant consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. The bill was discussed for several days in the last Congress.

Mr. HEYBURN. Was this amendment in the bill at the last Congress?

Mr. CURTIS. It was not.

Mr. HEYBURN. I thought not.

Mr. CURTIS. This amendment was adopted by the committee, changing the amount which might be loaned from $300 to $100.

Mr. HEYBURN. I recognize it.

Mr. CURTIS. There is also another amendment that——

Mr. HEYBURN. Follows.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has the floor.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have no particular desire to discuss this matter, but it does not appeal to me as being conservative legislation, and I think goes beyond the power of Congress in some respects. Since the last consideration of the bill at the previous session some seem to have arrived at the conclusion that if they could get a part of it they could get a good bit more; and these amendments are very radical. This is a bill in the interest of the banks, and it had its inception there. They want a monopoly on the business of dealing in money. I have just as much sympathy with the weaklings who are taken advantage of as any man can have. Just how far the Government should enter upon the question of regulating how much money one man may loan another, because he is a weakling and incapable of taking care of himself, is a large question and should receive careful consideration.

I do not know what was the motive for the amendment just reached and under consideration, except that it be upon the theory that I have suggested, that they could get anything they wanted, that they could make this monopoly just as tight as they desired. Under the bill, as it was considered at the previous Congress, if my recollection serves me—and I think I am correct—the limitation was placed at $300. I doubt our power to make that limitation; but, waiving that question for the moment, some one has conceived the idea of reducing that to $100.

I suppose what they want is just about to cover one month's pay, so that a man could only borrow what he would be entitled to receive as his compensation at the end of the current month. I presume that is the purpose. I will not go further at this time, although when the next amendment is reached I may desire to make a suggestion or two.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not yet quite through. I want to feel that the Senate, at least, looked at this bill as it went by. That is the way I feel about it.

There are some very radical provisions in the bill. The committee have also changed the rate of interest in line 7, page 6. That amendment has just been adopted as in Committee of the Whole. I wonder if that change was not suggested by some bank to make it conform to their back-door business? In this age banks have a back door at which they transact business which would be illegitimate if transacted at the front door. I do not believe that we want to overlook that fact. I never had occasion to appeal to any such institution; I am speaking from an entirely impersonal standpoint; but still recognizing a duty to scan every bit of legislation that is proposed in this body.

I do not know whether any Senator would care to arise and say that this bill was not a banker's bill; that its object, so far as the banks are concerned, is not to put other people out of the business in order that they may transact it. It bears that label all over it. I am not inclined to sit silently in my place in this body and allow that kind of legislation to glide along as smoothly as this seems to be gliding down the ways. I at least intend to suggest to Senators that it is worthy of serious consideration. I think the courts will take care of it, should we enact it, by holding that we had no power to do so. It is quite certain that no court would sustain legislation that undertook to say that one man could only loan money to another man after having taken out a license to do so, because that is one of the rights that are fundamental. We have not the power to do everything that somebody would like to have us do. We have not the power to say that a man must have a license to transact the ordinary business of life. The power of license restriction is limited, but this undertakes to go further and say who may have a license. Then it undertakes to go further than that, and say how much money a man who has a license may loan some other man. It obliterates the right of contract, which is one of the best established of the rights under our Government. When dealings are had between individuals, it obliterates that right.

There is need of some restraining force. Whether it can best be administered from the lecture platform or through missionary work or through legislation is a question seriously to be considered.

I would be inclined to think that persons capable of serving the Government of the United States in any capacity ought to possess some capacity for attending to their own business. Of course, the information that has been gathered in this matter would not lead one to the conclusion that any very large number of the Government employees needed this protection. It is intended, I think, confessedly for the protection of Government employees. No complaint has been made that the men who are working for the ice company, the gas company, or any of those companies need the protection of this law; that they are so extravagant and careless as to make contracts to do that which no sensible person would think of doing; but it is intended purely—and if I am wrong in this I should like to be corrected—as a protective measure for Government employees. They now are under civil service; they have a guaranty of law that their position is a life position, regardless of their efficiency, so that they feel justified in mortgaging this life tenure of office to an almost unlimited extent. I have been told that some persons who are in the Government employ are continually mortgaged for a year; that their wages are anticipated for a year at a very unreasonable rate of interest. Such a person as that should have a guardian rather than a Government position. I would doubt the capacity, the conservative intelligence of any person of that kind to perform any duty for the Government.

So, Mr. President, I merely want the Senate to pause before it runs over this so rapidly; I want it to pause before it makes the amendment now under consideration or reduces from $300 to $100 the amount that a person may borrow. I want to know why the amendment is suggested. I would be interested to know who suggested that amendment, and the purpose, the foundation, of it. That much for that amendment. The next amendment is entitled to more consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Idaho clearly misunderstands the intention of the amendment. A bill precisely similar to this passed the Senate at the last session of Congress after very careful consideration, fixing the amount of interest at 2 per cent a month and limiting the amount of such loans to $300. The pending bill was introduced and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. When the measure was taken up by that committee several Senators opposed the large interest charge. Among others was the Senator from Kansas, who reports this measure. After considerable discussion in the committee and an effort to reduce the rate of interest to 12 per cent, a majority of the committee voted to make the amount 18 per cent. The Senator from Kansas, believing that 18 per cent was too high a rate of interest to charge on $300, moved, on his own motion, and not at the suggestion of any bank or person, to reduce the amount to $100, because the Senator from Kansas believed that 18 per cent was too much interest to pay on a loan to the amount of $300 and that any person who desired to borrow that sum of money should be able to secure it at a very much lower rate of interest. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Kansas was agreed to, and the amount of the loan to which this rate would apply was reduced to $100. That was the sole reason for offering the amendment, so that parties would not be held up for a large rate of interest.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I notice the bill provides for issuing licenses to those who are engaged in loaning money at a rate of interest greater than 6 per cent. If we limit the amount of the loans to a hundred dollars, as provided for in this amendment, would not that prevent a loan being made at 7 per cent for as much as $200 or $150 or any amount over $100?

Mr. CURTIS. That would depend upon the institution from which the money was borrowed. I want to say to the Senator that I think some Senator or Member of the House of Representatives would do a good service to the District of Columbia if he would redraw the banking and loan laws of the District. Under existing law the banks and loan companies are limited to a certain rate of interest, 6 per cent, and by contract may charge 10 per cent, I believe, while pawnbrokers may charge 2 per cent a month up to $25 and 12 per cent interest per annum on loans above $25.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What I want to know from the Senator from Kansas is this: If we adopt this amendment and pass this bill, whether or not under the existing law, it will then be impossible for anybody to borrow a sum exceeding $100 at interest exceeding 6 per cent?

Mr. CURTIS. I should judge so, unless the money be from persons or companies not included in this act, which is intended to apply to small loans.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator think that would be wise legislation?

Mr. CURTIS. I do. I think if a man borrows over $200 or over $100, 6 per cent is abundant interest to pay for it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is a smaller rate of interest than I think is allowed in most of the States of the Union. The legal rate of interest in my own State, for example, I think, is 8 per cent.

Mr. CURTIS. But the Senator must remember that this bill applies only to men engaged in a certain class of business. Other acts fix the rate of interest which other parties may charge.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, does the Senator understand, then, that if an individual desires to borrow a sum exceeding $100 he could go to a bank in the city——

Mr. CURTIS. He could go to a banking institution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And that the bank would be authorized to charge him more than 6 per cent?

Mr. CURTIS. The bank would be authorized to charge up to the lawful rate of interest in the District of Columbia, which, I believe, is 10 per cent, although I am not sure about that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is simply the legal rate of interest.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That would be the amount that could be recovered in case there was no contract covering the amount of interest. Unless the law provided that an amount in excess of that would be usurious, it would not prevent charging him by special contract.

Mr. CURTIS. I think the act of Congress limits the banks. I have not, however, had time to examine the act. I only have examined the act in reference to pawnbrokers, because of its being similar to the bill now under consideration. I will state that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] had charge of the bill during the last session, and I was simply authorized to report the bill because two or three of the amendments proposed by me were adopted by the committee, and the time of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] was fully occupied by work upon another committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will simply say to the Senator from Kansas that I am in hearty sympathy with what appears to be the purpose of this legislation, but I should like to know more about what the effect is going to be and what the existing laws in the District are before voting upon it.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. May I ask whether there is any general usury law in the District of Columbia?

Mr. CURTIS. That I can not tell. I have not had the time to look that up and ascertain.

Mr. BURTON. I am quite positive, Mr. President, that at one time there was no usury law in this District. A manual published some years ago gave that as a fact, with reference to the District of Columbia and one State and one Territory, every other jurisdiction having a usury law.

Now, one or two other questions. This law is aimed at those who lend money on collateral security—the general business of the pawnbroker, is it not?

Mr. CURTIS. It is not. This does not apply to pawnbrokers at all.

Mr. BURTON. What is it aimed at?

Mr. CURTIS. The act is aimed at the people who loan money to Government clerks and others on personal security, such as chattel mortgages, personal and other security. It is not wholly intended to cover Government employees, as suggested by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN], because the showing before the committee during the former Congress disclosed that many other people had been charged as high as 361 per cent by the so-called loan sharks. It is to relieve the class of people who borrow five, ten, fifteen, twenty, or fifty dollars from those who are willing to loan them on chattel mortgages on their furniture or on the indorsement of a friend, and charge the borrower outrageous rates of interest. It is the object of the bill to do away with that kind of business.

Mr. BURTON. Then, am I to understand that this bill regulates the individual lender who loans small sums on chattel mortgages in the same manner as the pawnbrokers are now regulated?

Mr. CURTIS. Exactly, except that it does not permit them to charge as much interest as the pawnbrokers are permitted to charge on $25 loans.

Mr. BURTON. I note that in section 8 banks, trust companies, building and loan associations, and pawnbrokers are not included in this act, but that they are regulated by an earlier act.

Mr. CURTIS. That is because they are provided for in separate acts.

Mr. BURTON. May I ask the Senator from Kansas what rates of interest pawnbrokers in the District are allowed to charge?

Mr. CURTIS. Pawnbrokers in the District are permitted to charge, under the act of March 2, 1889, 24 per cent per annum upon any loan not exceeding the sum of $25, and not more than 12 per cent per annum upon any loan exceeding the sum of $25.

Mr. BURTON. And they are licensed and under public regulation?

Mr. CURTIS. They are.

Mr. BURTON. One other question I should like to ask. Does this bill prevent one individual from engaging to loan to another unless he is licensed?

Mr. CURTIS. In the ordinary course of business, no. I think this bill applies only to men who are engaged in the business of making small loans on personal security. I believe there is nothing in the bill that would prevent one man from lending $5,000 or $10,000 or any other sum as he may now do.

Mr. BURTON. At whatever rate of interest is allowed in the District of Columbia and without license?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; that is my judgment.

Mr. BURTON. I will state in that connection, Mr. President, that if this bill takes away the right of contract between private individuals it would give an undue advantage to the banks——

Mr. CURTIS. There was no intention of that kind.

Mr. BURTON. And the institutions that are included in section 8. I note that in the very beginning the first section provides—

That hereafter it shall be unlawful and illegal to engage in the business of loaning money—

That provision, I take it, the committee interpreted as limiting this act to those who are engaged in the business of loaning money.

Mr. CURTIS. To those engaged in the business. That is my understanding.

Mr. BURTON. How do you know that some person in a department will not charge an exorbitant rate of interest, and when a penalty is sought to be enforced he can simply say, "I have not engaged in the business; the loan was just a chance transaction"?

Mr. CURTIS. I think that will be prevented by the amendment which has been offered and agreed to by the committee, requiring the dismissal from the Government employ of any person who violates the provisions of the act.

Mr. BURTON. He might not be in the employ of the Government. He might be an outsider, who was in touch with Government employees. As the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] suggests, he would not violate the act if he were not in the business of lending money, and it might be a difficult task to draw the line between those engaged in the business and those who were not. Does not the Senator from Kansas think that a better way to regulate this whole matter would be to confine the business to those having licenses and engaged in the business—in some such manner as the pawnbroker or the professional money lender?

Mr. CURTIS. That is what is intended, so far as the business is concerned, to limit it to the men who have licenses; but it would not, I believe, apply to an individual who desired to borrow or loan a few thousand dollars in the ordinary transaction of business between men and by men who did not make a regular business of lending money.

Mr. BURTON. It is not aimed at the regular business of the pawnbroker, whose rate of interest is already regulated, but, for the most part, to those loans which are made in the departments to individuals in Government employ?

Mr. CURTIS. Largely; yes.

Mr. BURTON. Where some individuals charge exorbitant rates of interest.

Mr. CURTIS. In some cases—in many cases over 300 per cent. We have had cases where over 350 per cent was charged.

Mr. BURTON. That discloses a rather singular situation.

Mr. CURTIS. There is great demand for this legislation, and I hope the Senate will enact the bill into law. I want to say that for myself I think the interest is too high. The amendment proposed by me fixed the interest at 12 per cent; but a majority of the committee thought it should be 18 per cent, and then limited the amount to $100; the amendments and the bill were agreed to by the committee, and the Senator from Kansas was authorized to report the bill as amended by the committee.

Mr. BURTON. Just one more question. May I ask whether the committee considered the subject of prohibiting that class of loans entirely?

Mr. CURTIS. I think not. I want to say to the Senator, to be very frank, that this bill was thoroughly gone over in the last Congress, when the Senator from Kansas and several others who are now members were not members of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

At that time full and complete hearings were had. All the different loan agents in the city were called upon. The District Commissioners were called upon, and after a full and complete hearing in the last Congress the bill was reported, fixing the interest rate at 2 per cent. The necessity for the legislation was set out in a letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, dated December 10, 1909. During this session the committee did not think it important to have further hearings, and so the bill was recommended for report, without additional hearings upon such amendments as the committee agreed to after consideration by the members of the committee. There were no outside hearings at all, and I therefore regret not to be able to give the Senator the full information he desires, because I was not a member of the District Committee at the last session, when the hearings were held.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I want to ask the Senator from Kansas why it is necessary to go in this roundabout method to reach a particular object? Nearly every State has its usury law. It imposes a penalty for charging more than a given amount of interest, no matter who charges it. It makes no distinction between different classes of its own citizens. Why should we have a provision in the District of Columbia that some particular persons may charge a certain amount of interest, while some other person, who is not in that business of loaning, may not be able to loan above a certain amount and may not charge more than a certain amount? If 10 per cent is as much as ever ought to be charged under any circumstances, why not have a usury law making it unlawful to charge anyone more than that amount, and forfeit the amount in excess; or forfeit the entire interest charged, if you wish to make it punishable?

I can not see any reason why one person is to be prohibited from doing that which, under a law of nature and under all business ideas, he is entitled to do, and that is to loan to anyone for any reasonable length of time and for any reasonable rate and take his security, and make it a criminal offense to charge an exorbitant rate.

Mr. BURTON. In that connection, if the Senator from North Dakota will yield to me——

Mr. MCCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BURTON. I have now the statute of the District of Columbia, which, I think, will clarify this situation somewhat. It seems there was no usury act up to 1902, when an act was passed providing:

SEC. 1178. Rate of interest.—The rate of interest in the District upon the loan or forbearance of any money, goods, or things in action, and the rate to be allowed in judgments and decrees, in the absence of express contract as to such rate of interest, shall be $6 upon $100 for one year, and at that rate for a greater or less sum or for a longer or shorter time.

SEC. 1179. Express contracts.—The parties to a bond, bill, promissory note, or other instrument of writing for the payment of money at any future time may contract therein for the payment of interest on the principal amount thereof at any rate not exceeding 10 per cent per annum.

So, in the absence of any express declaration, 6 per cent is the general legal rate, but the parties may contract for a rate not exceeding 10 per cent.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. MCCUMBER. That being the case, I confess I can not see any necessity whatever for this legislation. You can reach those persons by the criminal law.

If you wish to make also a law that will subject these usurers to dismissal if they are in the Government employ, that can be done. It seems to me we have an adequate provision there.

Mr. CURTIS. The difficulty is that many of these people who are loaning money are not in Government employ. They are loaning money to people who are in Government employment and others. I would suggest to the Senator that it would be impossible to reach these people under this law. There is an amendment, adopted upon the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas, providing a forfeiture of a part of the principal and all of the interest in case of the violation of this law, the amount forfeited to be paid to the borrower.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me to ask the Senator from Ohio a question?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. What is the penalty in that law?

Mr. BURTON. The penalty is the forfeiture of the interest.

Mr. NELSON. Is that all?

Mr. BURTON. That is all. There may be some other provision here——

Mr. NELSON. Then I will say that is no penalty at all.

Mr. BURTON. I take it that is all which is contained in the general statute upon interest.

I should add that there is an exception in the case of pawnbrokers:

That nothing in this chapter contained shall be held to repeal or affect the act of Congress approved March 2, 1889, relating to pawnbrokers.

Under that statute, as stated by the Senator from Kansas, interest at the rate of 24 per cent can be charged on an amount up to $25 and 12 per cent on a loan of more than that amount.

There are the three classes of penalties in regard to usury: One, the forfeiture of the excess paid; another, the forfeiture of the whole interest; and another, in some of the States, the forfeiture of the whole debt. In this case the creditor shall forfeit the whole of the interest contracted to be received.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, what more is necessary then than to close the courts to the collection of a loan made in violation of existing law? That will completely answer every possible necessity assumed to exist for the enactment of this legislation. The existing law fixes the rate of interest at 6 per cent where there is no contract and at 10 per cent when there is a contract, and provides for the forfeiture of the interest. Now, why is it not quite sufficient to say that no action may be maintained in any court for the recovery of any debt contracted in violation of the provisions of this act?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator surely realizes that the man or woman who borrows $10, $15, or $25 is not going into court to contest with a loan agent who charges 18 or 24, or even, as shown in the hearings, 300 per cent.

Mr. HEYBURN. They would not be compelled to go into court. The courts themselves would not open their doors. The courts would not grant process.

Mr. CURTIS. But, Mr. President, the parties do not——

Mr. HEYBURN. It requires process before the defendant, the borrower, is put upon notice. There must be some process. If the complaint, or whatever the original writ may be in the District of Columbia, set forth the fact that it was for the recovery of so much principal, with interest at a certain per cent, unless it was within the statute the action would not lie, and the court would not issue its process.

Mr. CURTIS. These loans are not collected in the courts.

Mr. HEYBURN. Where are they collected?

Mr. CURTIS. Why, they are paid without suit.

Mr. HEYBURN. Oh, well, then——

Mr. CURTIS. The debtor voluntarily pays the money. Of course, if they should bring suit to collect the money under existing law, they could not collect over 10 per cent.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then this statute is intended to operate upon the borrower as well as the lender?

Mr. CURTIS. It is intended to protect the men and the women who, because of their condition, are forced to borrow from the men who have the hardihood to charge 300 per cent interest a year.

Mr. HEYBURN. I notice in the report accompanying this bill that—

A woman whose daughter came down with tuberculosis was told by the doctor she must be sent away for this reason at once. She borrowed $100 from a prominent money lender in this city, and besides paying a fee of $1.50, gave 12 monthly notes for $11.70 each, making $140.40.

I suppose the daughter would have been compelled to remain in the District of Columbia and take chances on the result of this attack of tuberculosis. Perhaps the borrower there would not like to have a law enacted which would make it impossible in a case of stress to make some kind of a contract for money. I do not think the bill goes about it in the right way. If you are going to make these contracts illegal, enough people will raise the question as to whether they are compelled to repay this money, I think, to establish a rule.

Mr. CURTIS. I want to disclaim the authorship of this bill. As I informed the Senator, I am simply in charge of it because three amendments offered by me were adopted by the committee, and I was then asked by the committee to report the measure. I did not introduce it and had nothing to do with its introduction or preparation.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is quite important, sometimes, I infer from circumstances cited in this report, that people under stress of circumstances suddenly confronting them may borrow money, and they are beneficiaries if they can find some place to get the money. Perhaps they may not be known at a bank. Perhaps they would not be able to get any money at all if you closed the door absolutely against them. I think you can regulate a thing like this without going to the extreme of closing it up. And then, again, does the Senator from Kansas think we have the power to say that a person shall not loan his own money under any contract he and the borrower may see fit to make, except as to the usury?

Mr. CURTIS. If a person engages in the business, undoubtedly we have the right.

Mr. HEYBURN. I know, but that term "engaging in business" is one of uncertain boundaries and latitude.

Mr. CURTIS. That, then, would be a matter for the court to pass upon, in case the parties were brought into court.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator a question right here?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. Any bank in this city has the authority to loan money and charge a rate of interest not to exceed 10 per cent, has it not?

Mr. CURTIS. Ten per cent, under a special contract.

Mr. McCUMBER. And such contract would be absolutely valid. Now, we will say that some resident of this city has saved $5,000, and he desires to loan that out, not at one time, but to loan it to different persons, and he wishes to get 8 per cent upon that money. Under this bill he must first get out a license that will cost him $500 for the privilege of loaning his own money legitimately and receiving a less rate of interest than is accorded the banks. It does not seem to me that that is just.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think that is a true statement of the case, and I do not believe this law would apply to a person unless he was to "engage in the business" of loaning money.

Mr. McCUMBER. He would be engaged in the business of loaning his own money.

Mr. CURTIS. Loaning his money, and a man who would loan the money in that way would be recognized as a regular loan agent.

Mr. McCUMBER. What different position would that man occupy than one who would loan to Government clerks and loan $100 each to a hundred of those clerks?

Mr. CURTIS. The law provides that if a man——

Mr. McCUMBER. This man might divide his $5,000 in such sums as there would be less than $100 to a person, and yet if the law would apply to a man who loaned to Government clerks it certainly must apply to him as well, and he would be engaged in the business.

Mr. CURTIS. If he intended to organize and go into the regular loaning business, it should apply to him.

Mr. McCUMBER. A man does not organize himself. He is already organized, and he has $5,000 to loan, and why should you penalize——

Mr. CURTIS. If it is his purpose to go into the loaning business in that way, it should apply to him.

Mr. McCUMBER. Why should he be compelled to take out a license and pay a large sum of money for loaning a comparatively small sum of money?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator knows it would not be necessary for him, if he had $5,000, to go into the small-loan business in order to loan it.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator permit me to ask a question?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I want to call attention, with the permission of the Senator from Kansas, to the fact that section 6 of this bill affords a protection to the unfortunate borrower that he would not have under the general law cited by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], and that is this: A man makes a small loan. He is charged usurious interest. The amount is so small that he can not afford to go into court and litigate it. But under section 6 of this bill he can make complaint of it, and if he establishes the fact of the usury the license of the loaner is revoked.

Mr. CURTIS. Upon such complaint being made and the charge sustained the license would be revoked.

Mr. NELSON. He is put out of business, and in that way a great relief is afforded to the public. If there is one of these professional money sharks who makes a business of loaning to department clerks or to other unfortunates small driblets of money at usurious rates, that man would be put out of business in this way, without any particular expense to the unfortunate borrower; and in that way it affords a protection which is not found in the general usury law of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURTON. There is one question that it seems to me may give rise to difficulties in the enforcement of this law, and that is the interpretation of the expression "engaged in the business of loaning money." On the one hand, does that include a case such as that mentioned by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]?

Suppose it is a small capitalist who has twenty or thirty thousand dollars to loan on real estate mortgages at a rate of interest slightly in excess of 6 per cent. Is he engaged in the business of loaning? On the other hand, how can you prove that a person lending to Government clerks and charging an exorbitant rate of interest is engaged in the loan business?

I take it one result of this statute will be to limit these money lenders to a very small number, because a license of $500 is required, and there are comparatively few who are likely to pay that sum for the privilege of doing business. It naturally would be prohibitive. On that account it seems to me the law may prove effective, but there will still be the question, What is meant by "engaged in the business"?

Mr. CURTIS. As I have said——

Mr. BURTON. Suppose a man has $10,000 which he loans to neighbors in 10 loans of $1,000 each. Is he engaged in the business?

Mr. CURTIS. I should say not, unless he regularly had out a sign or gave evidence through agents or friends that he was engaged in that business, and was living off the business or partially off the business.

Mr. BURTON. If a man who has $500 to lend, loans it in sums of $50 each to 10 Government clerks, is he "engaged in the business"?

Mr. CURTIS. I should say not, if that is all he loaned.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think I have the floor.

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator from Arkansas will wait a moment—I yielded to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. DAVIS. Just a moment——

Mr. CURTIS. I will yield to the Senator from Idaho first.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have no objection——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas yields to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. I only have one or two additional suggestions. A man would have to take out a license to loan his own money under the provisions of this bill, because it says so. He would have to take out a license and pay $500 for that. It would take him some time to recoup his personal account for the $500 paid for the license. It might be that a man would have money enough to loan, on such terms as would bring in his livelihood, which might be within the limits of $500. He would have to get some bank to loan it for him.

I see through this proposition without difficulty. A man could not loan his own money without paying $500, and the bank could loan it without paying anything. He would have to pay the interest on $10,000 for the privilege of loaning $10,000. That is the plain result of the provisions of the first section of the bill. I should like to know if the committee considered that question. This is prohibitive in its terms. Nobody would pay 10 per cent, or 5 per cent, on $10,000 for the privilege of loaning it for 5 per cent.

Mr. CURTIS. That is why he would not be in the business; he would not pay a license unless he had sufficient money to justify his going into the business.

Mr. HEYBURN. You are going to grant a monopoly to some class of persons who pay no license.

Mr. CURTIS. It is not the object of the bill to grant a monopoly. It simply says that anyone who is willing to pay the license to carry on the business as provided in the bill shall have a license. If he violates the law, on the complaint of any individual his license may be taken away from him.

Mr. HEYBURN. But how about the person who is not required to pay for a license? By the provisions of the bill a person who loans money at the rate of interest of 6 per cent or less per annum does not have to pay for any license.

Mr. CURTIS. I beg pardon.

Mr. HEYBURN. The person who loans money at interest—that is, ordinary money—would not have to pay for a license. Why discriminate against one class? Why discriminate against a man who is to loan his own money in favor of a man who loans other people's money?

Mr. CURTIS. There is no discrimination against that class of people. The bill is aimed at men who are living off the misfortunes of the poor men and women in the District.

Mr. HEYBURN. It may be aimed at them, but it is scattered in its effect.

Mr. CURTIS. That may be true. I am not responsible for the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Possibly a single shot out of a thousand might hit that kind of a person, but it would also throw into the hands of one class of people all of the business connected with the loaning of money without a license. They would not be compelled to pay for a license. Why should they not pay for a license?

Mr. CURTIS. They are limited in the amount of interest they may charge under the act which was read by the Senator from Ohio. If they carry on a banking business, they pay the regular license charge, I suppose.

Mr. HEYBURN. They are doing business with somebody else's money nine times out of ten, and yet they may conduct the business without paying for a license. A man who wants to loan his own money must pay for a license, and the license is so high that the license fee of $500 would be prohibitive against the loan if he loaned his own money. Should any person desire to loan money which he had, rather than put it in bank and allow somebody else to loan it, he would be prohibited from doing it.

Mr. CURTIS. Does not the Senator consider that a man who wants to loan his own money and charge 300 per cent should be prevented from so doing?

Mr. HEYBURN. Suppose he wanted to charge 7 per cent.

Mr. CURTIS. Under this law, if engaged in loaning his own money, not in the regular business, he may charge 10 per cent.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; he can not loan his own money at 3 per cent under this bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I beg to differ from the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let us see whether he can. The bill right in the first part provides—

> That hereafter it shall be unlawful and illegal to engage in the business of loaning money upon which a rate of interest greater than 6 per cent per annum is charged on any security of any kind, direct or collateral, tangible or intangible, without procuring license.

Mr. CURTIS. To engage in the business.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am correct in the suggestion. He can loan money at 6 per cent or less. He can not loan money at more than 6 per cent without taking out a license.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask under what order of business we are proceeding?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the junior Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CURTIS. With the consent of the senior Senator from Idaho, certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask under what order of business we are proceeding?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is proceeding in the morning hour. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia to the pending bill. The Senate gave unanimous consent to the Senator from Kansas for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not desire to suggest further objections, although the bill is open to many of them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CURTIS. I will yield first to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I feel much interest in this bill, because it seems to be for the regulation of lending money, as I understand the Senator from Kansas. Do I understand the Senator from Kansas to say that under it a man can loan only $100 to any one individual at one time?

Mr. CURTIS. Under this measure the license is limited to men who are engaged in the business of making small loans to the poorer class of people in the District.

Mr. DAVIS. I happen to be on the borrowing side of the ledger. I want to suggest to the Senator from Kansas if it would not be wise and rather facilitate the question of the rate of interest and the amount to be loaned to cut out the question of security and compel a fellow to loan money. That is what I am interested in—to make the fellow loan it and cut out the question of ever collecting it.

Mr. CURTIS. That is a very good suggestion. I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As I understand the evil which the bill seeks to cure, it is that of charging extravagant rates of interest.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator from Kansas will concede that it is just as evil for one man to charge an extravagant rate of interest as it is for another.

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is just as wrong for a bank to charge a usurious rate as it is for a pawnbroker, a real-estate broker, or anybody else, and these are the particular people who seem to be aimed at in the bill. Under the bill, as I understand it, a certain class of people are selected out, and we arrive at that class of people by a process of exclusion. Section 8 provides:

That nothing contained in this act shall be held to apply to the legitimate business of national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, or to the business of pawnbrokers, or real-estate brokers, as defined in the act of Congress of July 1, 1902.

Mr. CURTIS. That is because there is an existing law covering those classes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understand; but those institutions which are enumerated in section 8 are excluded from the operations of the bill, and every other corporation that desires to engage in the business of loaning money must come under the operation of the bill. The institutions enumerated in section 8, under the law, are permitted to charge as much as 10 per cent upon any amount of money which they may loan, are they not?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But those who do not fall within the classes enumerated in section 8, coming under the operation of this bill, are not permitted to charge in excess of 6 per cent when the amount loaned exceeds $100. Is not that correct?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think so. I think the bill is aimed at and would be applied only to those engaged in the business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I understand there is no usury law in the District.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; it allows 10 per cent by contract.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That does not make the 10 per cent usurious.

Mr. CURTIS. Six per cent is the rate of interest fixed in the District by the act of 1902, and by contract as high as 10 per cent may be charged.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is there a provision of law that any charge over that rate shall be usurious?

Mr. CURTIS. There is.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is a provision of that character. Why is not the law sufficient to cover this question?

Mr. CURTIS. Because that law can only be enforced in court, and under this bill the parties act under a license, and if they violate the law their license may be taken away from them on complaint. Furthermore, if they charge a greater rate of interest, they forfeit all the interest and a part of the principal, the act fixing a penalty and giving parties an opportunity to protect themselves without going to court. The man who borrows $10 or $15 or $25 can not and will not go into court, as the Senator well knows.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does not the law of usury provide that if an amount exceeding 10 per cent is charged the interest shall be forfeited?

Mr. CURTIS. There is only the forfeiture of interest.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There is only the forfeiture of interest?

Mr. CURTIS. That is all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is not that sufficient to induce people to refuse to pay such interest?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think so.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator from Kansas another question. Who were really asking for this legislation?

Mr. CURTIS. As I suggested to the Senator a few moments ago, I am unable to give the Senator the information he desires. A similar bill was presented in the last Congress and considered by the Committee on the District of Columbia. Hearings were had. Loan agents, the District Commissioners, and all parties interested were heard, and the committee reported a bill fixing the rate at 2 per cent a month—24 per cent a year. It was reported, and it passed the Senate.

When the bill was introduced at this session of Congress the committee did not think it worth while to have additional hearings, because a majority of the committee were old members and were in attendance at the former hearings. The amendments which were adopted were agreed upon after discussion in the committee, and the bill was authorized to be reported without hearings being had upon it at this session.

So far as the Senator from Kansas is concerned, he is unable to give the information as to who asked for this legislation. In the first place, I understand, it was recommended by the District Commissioners.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In the various hearings that were had before the committee, did it or did it not become apparent as to the people or class of people who were asking favorable action upon the bill?

Mr. CURTIS. I understood it was asked for in the interest of the poor people who had been mulcted by the loan sharks of the District. As I said, several cases were brought to the attention of the committee where over 300 per cent had been charged.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Did those people belong to any class or were they citizens generally?

Mr. CURTIS. Some of the people who asked for it belong to an association in the District who took an interest in it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator just one other question. The language of the first section of the bill is:

That hereafter it shall be unlawful and illegal to engage in the business of loaning money upon which a rate of interest greater than 6 per cent per annum is charged, etc.

Does the Senator understand that the phrase "upon which a rate of interest greater than 6 per cent is charged" qualifies the provision to engage in the business of loaning money in such a way that before the person who will come under the operation of the law would be required to obtain a license it must be his business to loan at that rate of interest?

Mr. CURTIS. That is my understanding.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then, if a person engages in the business ostensibly of loaning at a less rate of interest than 6 per cent, is there anything in the bill which would prevent him from making occasional loans at more than 6 per cent?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think so.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Should there not be?

Mr. CURTIS. Not if he is not regularly engaged in the loaning of small sums and engaged in that class of business.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Suppose he is engaged in the business generally.

Mr. CURTIS. Then he should pay a license to come within the provisions of this act.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Suppose he is engaged in the business generally of loaning money at 6 per cent, and states it as being the principal object of his business to loan money at less than that rate, but he from time to time, taking advantage of the necessities of poor people, charges them a greater rate of interest.

Mr. CURTIS. Then under the existing law he can charge——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is merely a question of degree, at any rate, and is it not an evil in any event to permit him to loan in these occasional cases?

Mr. CURTIS. It is an evil which is covered by the general law that limits him to 10 per cent. It is really a man who is forced to borrow from the loan shark who should be protected.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But the Senator says that the law is ineffectual.

Mr. CURTIS. In those cases where people borrow $5, $10, $15, $20, $30, and $40 they will not resort to the courts.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Why would it not be a better plan, then, for us to provide that the entire amount, the principal of the debt, shall not be recoverable where the amount of interest charged is greater than the 18 per cent mentioned?

Mr. CURTIS. I will say to the Senator it was my proposition that they should forfeit the whole amount; but after due consideration the committee thought best to adopt the amendment which will soon be reported to the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have already said to the Senator that I am in favor of the principle involved in the bill, but it does not seem to me that it is going to be effectual. I think a straight, direct provision that wherever interest is charged in the District exceeding 18 per cent upon $100, $200, $300, or $400, whatever amount may be determined upon, not only shall the interest be forfeited but the principal shall likewise be forfeited, will put an end to this evil a great deal more effectually than the complicated bill which has been presented by the committee.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CURTIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURTON. I do not feel entirely sure of the accuracy of the answer I gave to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. The statute certainly is not very clear. There are three sections, one of which was apparently drawn without knowledge of the others. I stated in answer to the question of the Senator from Minnesota that the penalty was the forfeiture of the entire interest in cases where a usurious rate had been agreed upon. The statute is somewhat indefinite. It is to the effect that—

If any person or corporation shall contract in the District, verbally, to pay a greater rate of interest than 6 per cent per annum, or shall contract, in writing, to pay a greater rate than 6 per cent per annum, the creditor shall forfeit the whole of the interest so contracted to be received.

The statute allowing an express contract in writing for 10 per cent does not seem to have been in the mind of the draftsmen of that section, but I take it the interpretation would be as I stated it, that the penalty in all cases would be the forfeiture of the entire interest.

Mr. CURTIS. I think the Senator is correct.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not like to take issue with my honored friend from Kansas, but while I agree with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] that the principle is correct, I think it would be most unfortunate for the American Congress to affirmatively legalize a rate of interest so high as the rate provided in the bill. I certainly hope that the bill will not pass in the form in which it has been presented.

I would much prefer to see the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] or that of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] prevail and attach a penalty to the present usury law, but to affirmatively write into the public law that anyone may exact 18 per cent interest reflects no credit upon either the intelligence or the fairness of Congress.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee. Does the Senator from Ohio desire to debate it?

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator from Ohio has amendments he intends to offer, and I suggest a vote on the committee amendments first, and then the Senator can offer his amendments.

Mr. POMERENE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 5, page 6, line 23, before the word "hundred," it is proposed to strike out "three" and insert "one," so as to read:

No such loan greater than $100 shall be made to any one person.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 6, line 24, after the word "person," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That any person contracting, directly or indirectly, for, or receiving a greater rate of interest than that fixed in this act, shall forfeit all interest so contracted for or received; and in addition thereto shall forfeit to the borrower a sum of money, to be deducted from the amount due for principal, equal to one-fourth of the principal sum: And provided further, That any person in the employ of the Government violating any of the provisions of this act shall forfeit his office or position, and be removed from the same.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that last provision would be difficult of enforcement. What right have we to declare that an office, held not through our appointment or over which we have any control, should be forfeited because a man does that which it is not unlawful for him to do, for, according to the language of this proposed amendment, this is applicable to both the loaner and the borrower?

Mr. CURTIS. No, Mr. President; it applies only to the loaner of the money.

Mr. HEYBURN. Let us see, now. That is a question in my mind.

Mr. CURTIS. The intent was to make it apply only to the loaner of the money.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not mean to be dogmatic about it, but I think the language would have to be readjusted.

It reads:

Provided that any person—

Any person—

contracting—

A man who contracts to pay interest is as much a party to a contract as is the man who contracts to receive it.

That any person contracting, directly or indirectly, for or receiving a greater rate of interest——

Mr. CURTIS. "Contracting for"——

Mr. HEYBURN. I know that applies to one party. Can an act performed by two persons in conjunction, where two are necessary to the completion of it, be a crime for one of them and not for the other? In the case of two men fighting on the street, in violation of ordinance or law, can one of them be guilty without the other of disturbing the peace?

Mr. CURTIS. That would depend upon the circumstances.

Mr. HEYBURN. Well, but as to two men engaged in this illegal transaction, are you going to allow one of them to escape and the other not?

Mr. CURTIS. There is only one guilty party in this transaction, and that is the man who demands greater interest than the law allows.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Senator from Kansas is figuring on the future as to the manner of administering the law, rather than as to the language of the proposed law. It says:

And in addition thereto shall forfeit to the borrower—

That is, one of the parties to the illegal contract shall be a beneficiary. All he has to do is to make a contract and then go and make it known to the officers of the law, or have it brought up, so that the law may reach the parties, and he may make some money. Would that be a very moral transaction? It is about as immoral on his part, it seems to me, as it would be on the part of the other man who loaned the money. Then the bill says:

That any person in the employ of the Government violating any of the provisions of this act shall forfeit his office or position—

How would that be enforced? What writ of execution could issue from a court that would dissociate an appointee of the President of the United States from an office? How would you enforce that writ? Suppose the executive department of the Government should say: "Well, we do not recognize the right of a court to select employees of this department, because we select them under the law governing that matter," would there not be some difficulty in the execution of that writ. It does not provide that the officer, the head of the department or bureau, shall discharge such a person, but it provides that the person in the employment of the Government violating any of the provisions of this act shall forfeit his office. He has no office; he has a position. He is not an officer of the Government, but he is an employee.

Are you going to deprive him of his employment? Through what process of execution? Are you going to serve a certified copy of the judgment of the court upon him? Of course, no action can be taken until the matter has been brought to a determination. Suppose in a proceeding to recover money loaned in violation of this law the court were to enter a judgment or decree or whatever form its process might take that this was an illegal contract, and that this man is found to be an employee of the Government—it does not refer to him as an employee, but it refers to him as holding an office—then the court would have to reach the party with its process. How would it do it? The word "position" might be held to be equivalent to "employment"—the employment of an employee—but it certainly could not affect an office. A man can not be put out of office by a court except by a proceeding appropriate to the end sought. This would not be a proceeding for the forfeiture of an office; it would be a defense in an action to recover money loaned. How would the court render a judgment for recovery?

To be candid, I think this bill had better go back to the committee and receive further consideration, because it proposes to do many things that we have not the power to do and more things that we ought not to do. I think that the rivalry in the business of buying and selling money is accountable for this class of legislation.

Under the laws of a State with which I am familiar the party in such cases forfeits the principal to the school fund. The borrower is not relieved from paying; he will be compelled to pay the amount found to be due within a legal contract by the court; but instead of paying it to the loaning party he pays it to the school fund. That has had a very excellent effect. A few instances of the enforcement of the law rendered its further consideration merely an academic question in that community.

I would suggest further consideration of this bill. I believe that I will test the sense of the Senate by moving that the bill be referred back to the committee from which it came, and I think the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is probably by this time convinced that it ought to receive further consideration.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I do not agree to that, and I hope that the motion of the Senator from Idaho will be voted down.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I hope the bill will not be recommitted. I come from a little State which believes that any sum above 6 per cent is usurious, and I believe that the committee have in the best possible way, and after a great deal of deliberation, reported a bill which they believe effects their purpose. I want to say that if we are to delay the passage of this bill until the fertile mind of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] can fail to find some objection to it, it never will pass. Let us put the bill upon its passage now.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I ask to interrupt the Senator before he takes his seat. I hope the Senator is not under the impression that I am opposed to legislation that will obviate an evil. It is not that I am opposed to the legislation, but to the manner proposed; that is all.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I think I understand the position of the Senator. He does not take positive action against this bill, but he seems to find reasons why, to his mind, it should not pass. Those reasons do not appeal to me, and unless I see some good reason for recommitting the bill, I prefer to express myself as vigorously as I can in favor of putting it upon its passage and putting it upon its passage now.

I remember the other day the Senator from Idaho gave this bill an unfortunate position by asking to have it put upon the calendar under Rule IX. I thought then that he was opposed to the passage of the bill. I can not now quite see how he is in favor of it as it at present stands.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think the Senator has conceived an entirely erroneous impression of my reason or the motive which actuates a Senator in asking that a bill, which is under Rule VIII on the calendar, shall go to Rule IX. Outside of the Senate that seems to be thought an antagonistic action. It is not. We send bills to the calendar under Rule IX in order that they may only come up upon notice. It is just as easy to take up a bill that is on the calendar under Rule IX upon motion as it is to take it up on motion under Rule VIII, and a bill under Rule VIII can never be taken up if there is a single objection to it, so that there is no difference, except that it relieves Senators from being always on guard. They have more than one thing to attend to.

I saw a statement, utterly without foundation, in one of the Washington papers that I was an enemy of the District of Columbia because I had, in the ordinary procedure of the business of this body, asked that certain bills go over to the calendar under Rule IX. What is Rule IX for? Is it a position of discredit in legislation that a bill should be put under Rule IX? We have always had a great many measures, rather respectable most of them, under Rule IX, because under Rule VIII matters can only be considered under the five-minute rule, while under Rule IX they may be debated under the general rules of the Senate. Is a Member of this body to be held up as antagonistic to the District of Columbia because, in the ordinary course of procedure, he suggests that a bill go to the calendar under Rule IX? That is one of those irresponsible effusions from persons who sit and look on and know nothing of the rules of parliamentary procedure, but only know a little petty spite. That is all.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I want to take this occasion to say that no man here more highly appreciates the value of the services of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] with reference to all the multifarious bills on the calendar under Rule VII than do I. I have sat here day after day and have wondered how many bills would pass but for his keen and watchful eye, and so anything I may say in regard to this bill is said with great respect to the Senator from Idaho. I want him to understand that, and to know that it comes from my heart.

I had always supposed to place a bill on the calendar under Rule IX was in parliamentary understanding to give it a position of disadvantage. If I am wrong about that I will simply say that it is an impression that has come to me after the brief period that I have been here.

But let us get back to this bill. We are trying to accomplish something that seems to me to be in the right direction. At the last session we had quite a little discussion about a bill similar to this, and to my mind the discussion seemed to indicate, upon the part of those who acted with the Senator from Idaho, that they were really against the bill and in opposition to its passage. If I am mistaken, I shall be very glad to have the Senator correct me; but we are coming to the point now where I want to see this bill go forward rather than backward; and so I want to say, with all due regard for the Senator from Idaho, that I should like to see his motion voted down.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have never thought that it was necessary to punish 10 innocent men in order to convict 1 guilty man. I never thought that it was necessary to frame a law in such a way that you would prevent honest men from proceeding in a legitimate business in order to prevent some dishonest men from carrying on an illegitimate business. I had always supposed that the English language was sufficiently clear to enable us to draft a law that would punish persons who are guilty of an offense without punishing those who are not guilty of any offense.

I dare say that you could select more than 100 men in this city who have their life savings invested in small real estate loans and other loans and whose only business is the loaning of that money and living upon the proceeds of their loans. Those men engaged in that single business—namely, investing their own capital and living off of the proceeds of their investments—are penalized by this bill. You will find that some of them have loans upon buildings; you will find that some of them loan money on chattel mortgages; but mostly they are engaged in making small real estate loans; and yet you are to punish those persons and provide that they can not carry on a legitimate business.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. CURTIS. Does the Senator know of any real-estate loan in the city where there is any unlawful interest charged in the contract?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, there might be some in which there is more than 6 per cent interest charged; and if the banks can charge 10 per cent I do not know any reason why an individual, without paying a license of $500, may not charge 7 per cent.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the law provides that a man who makes a loan of that kind may charge from 6 to 10 per cent interest upon it, and he would not come within the provisions of this bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. He certainly would come within the provisions of this bill, because the very first provision is:

> That hereafter it shall be unlawful and illegal to engage in the business of loaning money upon which a rate of interest greater than 6 per cent per annum is charged on any security of any kind, direct or collateral, tangible or intangible, without procuring license.

That covers clearly and definitely everyone who loans money upon real estate or upon a note in any way in excess of a 6 per cent interest, except the banks and the "three-ball" men, who are licensed to charge 18 per cent per annum. I ask the Senator again, and with all candor, what is to prevent legislation providing for a simple punishment for those who charge more than the legitimate rate of interest, which is fixed in our statutes at 10 per cent? Such laws are successful in every State in the Union, and why would not such laws be equally efficient in the District of Columbia? That is the question that I ask the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the Senator certainly knows that in all of the larger cities laws similar to this are in force. They have such laws in New York, in Boston, and in all of the larger cities where they meet with conditions of this kind, because of the large number of people who must borrow small amounts of money. It is in order to cover that class of cases that this bill was drafted and introduced, and that is why the amount was limited, as I said a few moments ago, to $100, and why it specifies a class. I might say now, because it will save me saying it later, that it is not the purpose of this bill to reach any man carrying on a legitimate business. It is not the purpose of the bill to reach the people who are charging a reasonable interest.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is not so much the purpose as the effect of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. It is to reach the men who are charging outrageous rates of interest to the people of the District.

Mr. McCUMBER. Is 9 per cent an outrageous rate?

Mr. CURTIS. The law says that people may charge from 6 to 10 per cent.

Mr. McCUMBER. All right.

Mr. CURTIS. Therefore, 9 per cent is not an unlawful rate. And the Senator must know that if a contract were made upon a real-estate mortgage, providing for 10 per cent, the courts would hold, under existing law, that it was a valid contract.

Mr. McCUMBER. Every court would hold that a man engaged in the business of loaning his own money, if he lived off of the proceeds of those loans, and that was his business, would come clearly within the prohibition contained in this law. Now, the Senator is too good a lawyer himself to say that the very first section of this bill does not prohibit any man from loaning money at a greater rate than 6 per cent interest, if that is his business.

The whole matter turns upon his business, and there are a great many men, not only in this city, but in every city that I know anything about, who are engaged in loaning their own money and living off of the proceeds. Now, if it is lawful for a bank to charge as high as 10 per cent, then it ought to be lawful equally for any individual to loan his own funds at exactly the same rate; and if the bank is not to be charged $500 for a license to make a loan that would net as high as 10 per cent, then I repeat that no individual should be penalized in the sum of $500 for making a loan of his own money, or continuously making that loan, and engaging in that business, where he loans at 7 per cent or any intermediate rate between 6 and 10 per cent. It is that particular thing, more than anything else, that I object to. I simply object to any law preventing a man from carrying on a legitimate business in the District of Columbia where the rate of interest charged in that business is not prohibited by law.

Mr. CURTIS subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Mr. Ham, who is agent for the Russell Sage Foundation in the District.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. HEYBURN. Is permission granted to print this statement in the RECORD with the proceedings on the wool schedule?

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to have it appear in connection with the remarks I made at the end of the running debate on the loan bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Oh, that is all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The order is made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

SAGE FOUNDATION AGENT URGES 2 PER CENT ON LOANS—A. H. HAM SAYS SHARKS SHOULD BE ALLOWED THAT INTEREST PER MONTH.

What rate of interest should the "loan-shark" bill provide?

This question has been causing trouble at the Capitol and has been responsible for the failure of Congress to enact any remedial loan legislation at this session.

To-day the Times is able to present an authoritative statement on the issue. It is from Arthur H. Ham, agent of the Russell Sage Foundation, who spends all his time establishing philanthropic loan agencies and encouraging State legislation.

Mr. Ham says the rate should be 2 per cent a month, and he backs up his statement with evidence obtained through personal observation and experience. This was the rate specified in the original loan bill, prepared by the committee of the Monday Evening Club two years ago, and passed by the House a year ago. This rate was vigorously opposed by the "loan sharks" on the ground that it was ruinously low. Now it is opposed by several Members of Congress on the ground that it is too high.

GIVES REASONS.

Just why this is a proper rate and why the bill should be passed are forcefully explained by Mr. Ham in the following letter, written at the request of the Times:

To the EDITOR OF THE TIMES:

There seem to be two distinct sources of objection to the so-called "loan-shark" bill now before the Senate. This bill is designed to raise the rate on small loans to 2 per cent per month under the supervision and control of the commissioners. Opposition is encountered on the one hand from the "loan sharks," of whom there are more than 100 in Washington, who are satisfied with the present law limiting the rate to 6 per cent per annum, but providing no penalty for its violation, and who do not desire the law limiting the rate of 24 per cent per annum under such supervision and control and so severe penalties for violation that the continued charge of the present rates of 200 to 500 per cent would be dangerous.

The bill is also opposed by a few people more or less influential, who, while desirous of improving loaning conditions in the District, apparently have lost sight of the fact that temporary financial crises among wage earners necessitate the borrowing of money, and having no banking facilities they are dependent for assistance upon friends in better circumstances or upon the small-loan agencies.

When people need money they will find others ready to loan it, with or without the sanction of law, but if the practice is made unlawful, dangerous, and disreputable, the risks and discredit which attend it will surely be made the basis for increasing the charges upon such loans. The experiences of many States show conclusively that it is impossible to suppress the small-loan business by drastic law; that the problem now before the District is not to prohibit the practice, but to regulate it and keep it within proper limits, thus preventing the extortions which have up to this time been practiced on the small borrowers.

SHOULD BE LEGALIZED.

The only way to cut down the exactions in the small-loan field seems to be to legalize the business and make it reputable, safe, and reasonably profitable, but to impose restrictions and to exercise strict supervision and control. By this means honest capital will be attracted to a business largely disreputable at present.

The experiences of the remedial loan societies that have been formed offering an opportunity to borrowers to obtain money in time of need at reasonable rates show that 2 per cent per month is the proper rate.

It is true that several remedial loan societies now operating have reduced their rates below 2 per cent per month. This has been made possible, however, by the accumulation of a surplus obtained before the rates were reduced and by the limitation of dividend to 6 per cent per annum.

It is interesting to note that of 22 States legislating on this subject this year, in only 1 has a determined effort been made to enact a law limiting the rate to 6 per cent. Most of the others have recognized the need for allowing an equitable rate. In New York, New Jersey, Missouri, Michigan, and several other States laws have been enacted allowing loan companies to charge 2 per cent per month under certain conditions. In Massachusetts the legislature has evinced a very intelligent interest in the subject by empowering the joint committee on banks and banking to make an exhaustive investigation into the workings of small-loan laws.

This investigation resulted in the introduction of a bill requiring all loan companies to become licensed and come under the supervision of a State supervisor of loan agencies, to whom is given the power of fixing the rate that may be charged within a maximum of 36 per cent per annum, and by making other regulations for the conduct of the business as he may see fit.

SENATOR BURD'S BILL.

This bill is similar to one introduced in the New York Legislature during the present session by Senator Burd, of Buffalo, and in my opinion is the nearest approach to a model law that has yet been drafted.

The support that has been uniformly accorded the loan bill of the District by the press of Washington and by the large numbers of civic and social agencies and individuals who have openly supported the bill ought to convince doubting Congressmen that the bill's adherents are not directly concerned in the passage of a law enabling money lenders to make a profit, except that they realize that in no other way can borrowers be protected.

If the law does not allow a money lender to do business honestly and at a reasonable profit, it is practically certain that in response to the great need for small loans money lenders will exact illegal interest, and in proportion as the laws of the locality in which they operate are drastic and unfair the rates of interest charged and the business methods adopted will be correspondingly exorbitant and unjust.

In the opinion of most students of this subject it will be a grave misfortune if the District bill in its original form, allowing 2 per cent per month, is not passed by Congress.

I desire to commend the policy of the Times in supporting this bill and hope it will continue to urge the matter.

Very truly, yours, ARTHUR H. HAM, Agent.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it seems to me that this is too important a matter to be disposed of to-day. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has been waiting patiently a good while to go on with his address, and I object to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). The Senate has given unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. That consent was given at a time when I was temporarily absent from the Senate Chamber.

Mr. CURTIS. I think it would be well to vote on the amendment, and then let Senators who have amendments they desire to offer present them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Idaho takes precedence of the amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Crane	Kern	Poindexter
Bourne	Crawford	La Follette	Pomerene
Bradley	Culberson	Lippitt	Root
Brandegee	Cullom	Lodge	Smith, Mich.
Briggs	Cummins	McCumber	Smoot
Bristow	Curtis	McLean	Stephenson
Brown	Davis	Martin, Va.	Sutherland
Bryan	Foster	Martine, N. J.	Swanson
Burnham	Gore	Myers	Taylor
Burton	Gronna	Nelson	Thornton
Chamberlain	Guggenheim	Nixon	Townsend
Chilton	Heyburn	O'Gorman	Warren
Clapp	Hitchcock	Oliver	Wetmore
Clark, Wyo.	Johnson, Me.	Page	Williams
Clarke, Ark.	Jones	Perkins

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is absent in attendance upon business of the Senate.

Mr. CHILTON. My colleague [Mr. WATSON] is necessarily detained from the Senate by a death in his family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators have responded to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

The Senator from Idaho moves to recommit the pending bill to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEYBURN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask for a recount of the number seconding the demand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho asks for a recount. The Secretary will make the count. [After a pause.] The Secretary reports 10 hands raised out of a total of 59, as shown by the call of the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I see 12 hands up myself. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho asks for a division.

Mr. HEYBURN. I withdraw the demand. If Senators do not care anything about the proposed legislation, I do not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to recommit the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope the motion will be voted down. If the rate of interest is too high, it can be reduced by the Senate later on.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the pending committee amendment, which the Secretary will report.

The SECRETARY. On page 6 of the bill, line 24, after the word "impression," it is proposed to insert a proviso as follows:

Provided, That any person contracting, directly or indirectly, for or receiving a greater rate of interest than that fixed in this act shall forfeit all interest so contracted for or received; and in addition thereto shall forfeit to the borrower a sum of money, to be deducted from the amount due for principal, equal to one-fourth of the principal sum: And provided further, That any person in the employ of the Government violating any of the provisions of this act shall forfeit his office or position and be removed from the same.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, this amendment contains all of the vices of the amendments that have been under consideration, and some additional ones. There does not seem to be a very active interest in this legislation. It is taken for granted that it is wise; but I will undertake to say that any lawyer who takes this up for examination will, after a conscientious examination of this bill, pronounce it vicious, in that it violates all of the rights that a man has to control his own property. Yet Senators will sit here and vote it through. Of course I exonerate from any ulterior motive any Member of the body who is responsible for or connected with the proposition embodied in this legislation, because I am satisfied that the difficulty is one of consideration and not one of lack of intelligence.

A bill that provides that a man must take out a license and pay $500 for the right to loan his own money to his neighbor, upon terms that a bank may loan it to him, is so outrageous as to challenge not only the intelligence but the admiration of Senators; and that is what this bill does. A bank may loan up to 10 per cent without taking out a license, but under this bill an individual may not, and yet Senators do not think that they should give if that attention necessary to determine whether it should go back to the committee for correction. That the time of the Senate should be so taken up from 12 o'clock until 2, as it probably will be, when we have under consideration such great, far-reaching problems as the tariff on wool, is a source of some astonishment.

This bill provides that one of the parties to the perpetration of this act, which is made illegal by the terms of the bill, shall receive a reward. It provides it in express terms that he shall be rewarded for being a party to an illegal contract. That is what the bill says. This is the language that justifies my statement. After providing that the party loaning the money shall not make this contract, it says that such party—I am not quoting the words; I am avoiding unnecessary repetition in the RECORD—the man loaning the money shall forfeit all interest so contracted for or received, and in addition thereto shall forfeit to the borrower, who is the other party to the illegal contract, a sum of money to be deducted from the amount due for principal equal to one-fourth of the principal sum. He gets 25 per cent of the sum involved in consideration of the fact that he is a party to the contract which is declared to be illegal and void. If it provided that this fund, instead of being paid to the borrower, should go to the school fund, then the public would get the benefit of it. The man who borrowed it would pay it, as he should be compelled to do under the law, and the money would go where it would never again be subject to this kind of offense. It would go to the school fund or to some other fund for public use. But no; they propose to reward one of the parties who violates the law by giving him 25 per cent of it after first relieving him from the payment of interest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator suspend for a moment? The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 11019.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11019) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that to-morrow, after the routine morning business, I shall submit some remarks on the pending measure.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

That all specific duties authorized by law are hereby changed into ad valorem duties, as of the 1st day of January, 1912, and the President of the United States, with the aid of the Tariff Board and the other statistical forces of the Government, is hereby empowered and directed to ascertain the ad valorem equivalent of the existing specific duties where specific duties alone are levied and the ad valorem equivalent of duties where both specific and ad valorem duties are imposed, as of the 1st day of January, 1912; and as soon thereafter as such ad valorem equivalent duties are ascertained, to announce the same by a public proclamation; and thereafter no specific duties shall be imposed or collected, but in place thereof such ad valorem equivalent duties shall be collected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

THE FREE LIST.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I also offer the following amendment to the farmers' free-list bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is presented; it can not be offered.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I present it, and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read, without objection.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of House bill 4413 the following:

That the Tariff Board is hereby authorized upon the complaint of any importer or upon its own initiative to inquire as to whether the importations of any dutiable articles have been for the year preceding such inquiry less than one-tenth of the total production of similar articles in the United States, and if it shall appear that such importations do not equal one-tenth of the production of similar articles in the United States, such board shall report the fact to the President of the United States, and thereupon the duty on such article shall be reduced at the rate of 10 per cent per annum until the importations thereof shall for one year equal one-tenth of the production of similar articles in the United States, whereupon any further reduction of such duty hereunder shall cease and the subject matter shall be reported to Congress for its action. But if after such reduction has ceased the importations of any dutiable article shall diminish so as to bring such importations below one-tenth of the consumption of similar articles for the period of one year, such annual reduction shall be resumed until the importations thereof shall equal one-tenth of the total annual production of similar articles in the United States, whereupon any further reduction of such duty shall cease, and report thereof shall be made to Congress for its action. The President of the United States shall, from time to time, make proclamation of such reductions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

LOANS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, in view of the very general discussion which was given to the loan-shark bill I desire to offer a few suggestions in connection therewith.

When the bill came before the District Committee we were advised that it had been considered very fully and had passed the Senate at the last session. The only objections that were made and the only questions that were considered were as to the amount of interest which should be charged. The bill as presented to the committee provided for 2 per cent per month.

An amendment was proposed making the rate 8 per cent per annum, and it was voted down. Another amendment was proposed making the rate 1½ per cent per month, and that was carried by a majority vote in the committee. Several of the members reserved the right to object to that rate of interest, and that is the ground of my objection to the bill. I do not believe that the Government of the United States should go on record as favoring a charge of 1½ per cent per month in behalf of the loan sharks of this District against the poor unfortunates who are obliged occasionally to get into their clutches. The very best friend the poor people ever had drove the money changers from the temple, and here in the District of Columbia, in the very shadow of the temple of government, Congress is asked to permit those loan sharks to charge 1½ per cent per month.

In my humble judgment the very best service that could be rendered to the poor people of this District would be to drive the loan sharks out of business. There are two classes of individuals that get within their power. One is the class known as spendthrifts. They are unfortunates, and deserve the considerate attention of Congress; but I believe that the best service which could be rendered to that class is to prevent them from having a place of this character to get money. The other is a class of unfortunates who, by reason of sickness or distress, feel that they must have money on certain occasions; and I recognize that if we make these regulations too stringent occasionally they may suffer. But the situation is this: If we make it 1½ per cent per month, all of that latter class will suffer, and I doubt in the long run whether any man receives a service from his fellow man when he is obliged to pay an excessive rate of interest.

Mr. President, it does seem to me a little strange that the Government of the United States should place its money by millions into favored banks at the nominal rate of interest of 1 per cent per annum and at the same time recognize the right, or confer the right, upon a loan shark to charge 1½ per cent per month.

It is indeed an interesting fact to note the excesses which have prevailed in this connection. It appeared, as I am advised, in the hearings before the committee at the last session of Congress that rates were charged ranging from 3 per cent per month to 327 per cent per month. I have received a number of letters from people who are actuated by the best of motives, no doubt, suggesting that there should be some limitation placed upon the amount of interest which these loan sharks should charge. I agree that in some respects 2 per cent per month would be better than an unlimited charge; but it seems to me that the only difference between an unlimited charge and a limitation of 2 per cent per month is that in the first instance you kill the victim by inches, in the last instance you kill him by half inches. And that is to be legalized by the Government if the bill passes in its present form.

Mr. President, I think it is only fair that I should present to the Senate the position which is taken by some of the loan sharks of the District in order that we may well comprehend their position and their greed. I have a letter in which the writer says that he is writing me at the instance of five several companies. It is a most remarkable letter. He suggests that they can not do business at a profit under 3 per cent per month, and he makes the remarkable suggestion that he thinks it would remedy the evil if it were made by law a felony for the borrower to pay excessive rates of interest, though the writer has some misgivings as to the constitutionality of such a law. I am going to ask the Secretary to read this letter in order that it may be given proper publicity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

MERCANTILE SAVING FUND SOCIETY (INC.),
J. D. LEONARD, TREASURER,
1206 G Street NW., Washington, D. C., June 21, 1911.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: As you seem to be taking an interest in the proposed law regulating loan companies in the District of Columbia, permit me to trespass upon your valuable time long enough to say that this society is in sympathy with the effort to regulate the loan business in this city by legislation. At the same time, we believe that such a drastic law as you suggest, viz, a rate of 8 per cent per annum, would not stop usury, but simply drive all the money lenders into hiding, and the added cost and risks of operating in the face of such a law and in violation of it would have to be paid, as in every other case of bargain and sale, by the purchaser, or, in this case, by the borrower. This is inevitable.

In our judgment, to attempt to stop money lending by oppressive regulation of the money lender will be futile. Making it a felony to borrow at usurious rates, while perhaps unconstitutional, would, until so determined by the courts, be far more effectual.

We believe a measure regulating the loan business in the District of Columbia to the extent of providing a license, a bond, and supervision by the District Commissioners or the police department would work for unlimited good and bring incalculable relief to the borrowing classes, who now pay—at least some of them—as high as 100 per cent a year for loans, and in whose behalf I take it your efforts are directed. A regulating measure in connection with the present usury law, which forfeits all interest and costs charged the borrower, would, it must be admitted, be giving the borrower every reasonable protection.

Our society loans at rates ranging from 6 per cent per annum on commercial risks, satisfactorily secured, to 3 per cent a month for the ordinary class of loans that come to a loan office and are not negotiable at any bank. A former maximum rate of 2½ per cent a month for a certain grade of risks has been increased to 3 per cent because of the heavy losses incurred from that class of paper. We think a straight 3 per cent a month rate as allowed the pawnbrokers would solve the loan problem in Washington satisfactorily and forever.

With such a rate legalized for licensed and bonded loan companies new capital and competition would ultimately work, I am sure, a very satisfactory solution of the "loan-shark" problem. By "loan shark" I mean those operators whose charges range from 60 per cent upward, most of whom are chattel men who fatten on the lack of frugality, the adversity, and the ignorance of the poorer classes. It is this class of money lenders that have brought the business into public contempt and given color to the demands for a law regulating the matter.

It is not believed that there is any complaint or cause for complaint against the operation of companies charging a maximum rate of 3 per cent a month. The patrons of such institutions are usually intelligent clerks and business men, who know exactly what they are paying and pay it willingly, and for Congress to attempt to legislate for the benefit of this class of citizens is simply a case of "love's labor lost."

I inclose a booklet that will tell you about our company and our business. I hope you will find a minute to read "The story of how we came to organize," on page 7.

Because of my faith in the high and unselfish motives that I am sure animate you in this matter, I also inclose you a sworn statement of our business March 31, 1911. Our contention that the proposed law should not be lower than 3 per cent a month to indorsed-note risks is based on this statement. We do not believe that a loan company confining its risks entirely to indorsed notes, as we do, should be required by law to operate under a lower rate. We believe a lower rate—considering the character of the security we take, the hazards of the business, and the inevitable losses—would make the margin of profit so low that liquidation would threaten most of us.

The provision in the bill (S. 25) having reference to money lending by department employees is a most salutary safeguard. The known unconscionable rates charged by the "vest-pocket lenders" in the departments, the Government Printing Office, and the navy yard, make such a provision in the bill much to be desired.

This letter is sent to you in behalf of the League of Remedial Loan Companies of the District of Columbia. This organization is composed of five loan companies, who confine their risks entirely to indorsed notes. The aggregate capital of the league is $230,000, which we loan at rates not exceeding 3 per cent a month. Our books and our offices and our personal services are at your disposal for any examination or investigation you may wish to make in connection with your consideration of the local loan-company problem.

Very respectfully,

J. D. LEONARD,
President of the League of Remedial Loan Companies of the District of Columbia.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, we have this strange situation before us in the District of Columbia: In the District of Columbia the legal rate that can be charged on accounts, and so forth, is 6 per cent, on notes and bonds, 10 per cent; and in the very face of that statute you have this distinguished gentleman confessing that he is charging 3 per cent per month to these poor unfortunates. We are asked by him to pass a law in order that he may so do; and he says he can not do business at a profit at a less rate. If he or those who are engaged in like business can not do it at a profit, let them get out of the business.

Mr. President, I do not know that it is the business of Congress to guarantee a profit to that class of gentlemen. I recognize the fact that a great political party a few years ago—perhaps I should say a party that was once great—in a platform pledged themselves in favor of a tariff that would guarantee profits to the manufacturer. I do not believe that even our friends who are of the opposite political faith would want to add to that plank in their platform the further suggestion that they ought to guarantee profits to loan sharks; and yet we have this statement from the committee that reported upon a similar bill at the last session:

> In the opinion of the committee, the lowest rate of interest at which these companies are doing or can do a profitable business is 1½ per cent per month, without fees.

Mr. President, next to driving these people out of business, the best thing, in my judgment, that can be done is to so stringently regulate them that they will be at all times subject to inspection by the powers of the District.

I have offered an amendment to the present bill limiting the rate to 8 per cent per annum, but permitting a charge of not exceeding $1 when the original loan is first made, in order to cover the expenses incident to that loan, namely, the making of the contract, the investigation as to the status of the borrower, and so forth. But while I offered that amendment, I am not very much enamored of the last clause permitting that charge. My purpose is to guard this legislation in behalf of the borrower, and I would prefer that, instead of the amendment I have suggested, if it fail to pass, another amendment should be adopted limiting the rate of interest to 10 per cent per annum and not permitting any charges. I hope that when this matter is placed upon passage Senators will see their way clear to limit the rate of interest that can be charged legally at not exceeding 10 per cent, and I suggest 10 per cent because the Federal statutes at present authorize that rate in all loans. I do not believe that any rate of interest ought to be permitted in excess of 8 per cent.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to make a suggestion? I entirely agree with most of his remarks, but in order to make a usury law effective it ought to go further than the statute at present. My experience in those matters in the Northwest leads me to believe that any penalty short of a forfeiture of both principal and interest is of no avail. Merely the forfeiture of the interest is not a sufficient deterrent to keep lenders from charging an exorbitant interest. The usury law ought to be so stringent as to deter men from loaning money at usurious rates.

I had occasion some years ago as a member of the Judiciary Committee to look up the case of a so-called building and loan association in this city. A man's name had been sent in for a judge of the supreme court of the District. Another came here and made objection to his confirmation on the ground that he was the manager of a loan and building association in this city that was charging exorbitant and usurious rates of interest. The matter was referred to a subcommittee, of which, I think, I was chairman. The man who made the loan had to become a member of the association. He secured a small loan. He had finally paid it up. He brought all the papers in. I went over them carefully and came to the conclusion that the whole loan from first to last cost that poor fellow upward of 30 per cent per annum, and it was done under the guise of a loan and building association.

I think that the only amendment to the general statute of the District of Columbia we ought to have, to make it effective, would be to amend it so that the penalty for usury should be the forfeiture of both the principal and the interest.

Mr. POMERENE. Perhaps the Senator from Minnesota did not notice that the bill now pending before the Senate does provide for the forfeiture of all the interest and one-fourth of the principal. The Senator from Kansas, as I now recall it, before the committee desired an amendment similar to the one which the Senator from Minnesota has suggested, but it was not favored by a majority of the committee.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that it is now after the hour of 2 o'clock and I did not have the opportunity to bring up the concurrent resolution of which I gave notice yesterday, I desire now to give notice that I will call it up at the conclusion of the routine business to-morrow, and I give notice that I will object to anything else being taken up by unanimous consent until after that shall be disposed of.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11019) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not ask for the consideration of the amendment now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then, suppose the Senator present it for printing, without offering it.

Mr. SMOOT. And let it lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. To be offered at some future time.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be considered as presented and ordered printed, to be offered at some future time.

CLAIMS FOR LOSS OF PROPERTY.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 323) for the payment of certain claims for damages to and loss of private property. The bill was reported this morning by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. It is a short measure, and one that has passed the Senate at a former session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill referred to by the Senator from Wyoming will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I should like to know something about the nature of the claims.

Mr. WARREN. The bill covers about 200 claims for damages that have occurred at maneuver grounds and target ranges due to the heavy gun firing of the Army in the last two or three years. The amount has been regularly estimated for. The matter came up at the last session, and a similar bill then passed the Senate without objection. It also passed the Senate again as a part of the deficiency bill, but was lost in conference. It now comes before us with a favorable report of the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it recommended by the department?

Mr. WARREN. Yes. It provides for the payment of claims growing out of the destruction or partial destruction of buildings, the breakage of windows, the trampling down of growing crops, the killing of chickens and cows, and so forth, all the way from down near Cape Cod across the country to Puget Sound, San Francisco, and other places, where damage has occurred because of heavy practice firing by the Coast Artillery or the mobile Army. All the claims have been submitted to an Army board of survey; all have been trimmed down or allowed in full, as the facts in the case might warrant, and are recommended for payment by the War Department and Treasury Department, but can not be paid until we provide the necessary appropriation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I merely want to ask one question: Would granting unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill displace the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would not.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that I had no intention of displacing the unfinished business in asking for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I know the Senator had no such intention. I merely wanted to understand the effect of agreeing to the Senator's request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 9, after the word "Islands," to insert "Great Britain, Norway, and Japan," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,535.22 for payment of 200 approved claims for damages to and loss of private property belonging to citizens of the United States, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands, Great Britain, Norway, and Japan that have arisen previous to February 21, 1911, estimated for in House Documents Nos. 1242 and 1404, Sixty-first Congress, third session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SMOOT. I am informed that no Senator wishes to proceed with the discussion of the unfinished business. Therefore, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, July 26, 1911, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate July 25, 1911.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

C. Asa Francis to be collector of customs for the district of Perth Amboy, in the State of New Jersey.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

The following-named commanders to be captains in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1911, to fill vacancies:

Joseph L. Jayne, and

William L. Howard.

Commander Robert B. Higgins, an additional number in grade, to be a captain.

Commander Charles W. Dyson, an additional number in grade, to be a captain.

Ensign (Junior Grade) George S. Bryan to be a lieutenant.

Passed Asst. Surg. Joseph P. Traynor to be a surgeon.

POSTMASTERS.

IOWA.

Thomas M. Atherton, Osage.

Benjamin F. Paul, Blairstown.

NORTH DAKOTA.

George E. Childs, Kenmare.

WISCONSIN.

Frank A. Everhard, Ripon.

WYOMING.

Henry D. Ashley, Encampment.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 26, 1911.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 4412. An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12312. An act to amend paragraph 500 of the act approved, August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes."

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a petition of Local Chapter, American Woman's League, of Tacoma, State of Washington, praying for an investigation of the United States Post Office and the E. G. Lewis cases, St. Louis, Mo., which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented the memorial of Joseph D. Holmes, of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against a revision of the woolen schedule of the tariff law at the present session, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KERN presented a petition of the Religious Society of Friends of Indiana, praying for the ratification of treaties of arbitration between the United States, England, France, and Germany, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 3069) to amend section 1 of an act of Congress approved May 20, 1908, the same being chapter 181 of the Acts of Congress for the year 1908, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 109) thereon.

Mr. WARREN. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 130) making appropriations for certain expenses of the House of Representatives incident to the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, to report it with amendments and submit a report (No. 112) thereon. I desire to give notice that I shall endeavor to call up the bill for consideration to-morrow or the next day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CRANE:

A bill (S. 3105) granting an increase of pension to George Choron; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 3106) granting an increase of pension to William Starry; and

A bill (S. 3107) granting an increase of pension to Sue B. Merrill; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 3108) for the relief of George W. Philpott; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3109) granting an increase of pension to David Poffenbarger; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GRONNA:

A bill (S. 3110) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress of June 22, 1910, entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands"; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. KERN:

A bill (S. 3111) granting an increase of pension to William Willis (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 130) making appropriations for certain expenses of the House of Representatives incident to the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA.

Mr. BOURNE. I desire to give notice that on Saturday, August 5, following the routine morning business, I shall address the Senate on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 14) to admit the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona as States into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States.

PENSACOLA NAVY YARD.

Mr. BRYAN. I desire to give notice that to-morrow, immediately after the disposition of the unfinished business, I will ask the Senate to consider Senate resolution 100, directing the Secretary of the Navy to report as to certain matters relative to the Pensacola and other navy yards, which is now on the table.

NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA.

Mr. OWEN. On Monday, as a member of the Committee on Territories, I submitted my views to accompany House joint resolution No. 14 to admit the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona as States into the Union upon an equal footing with the original States. I ask for a reprint of the views with some slight corrections. (S. Rept. 100, pt. 2.)

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the order is entered.

CHUGACH NATIONAL FOREST LANDS IN ALASKA.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying maps and illustrations, ordered to lie on the table and be printed (S. Doc. No. 77):

To the Senate of the United States:

On June 27 last your honorable body adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to transmit to the Senate of the United States copies of all letters, maps, executive or departmental orders or instructions, surveys, also applications to enter land, or for rights of way for railroads or otherwise, and all other official reports, recommendations, documents, or records in the Departments of War, Interior, and Agriculture, or by any of the officials or bureaus of these departments, not included in the report of the Secretary of the Interior of April 26, 1911, printed as Senate Document No. 12, Sixty-second Congress, first session, relating in any way to the elimination from the Chugach National Forest, in Alaska, of land fronting upon Controller Bay, approximating 12,800 acres; especially referring to such papers, documents, etc., as relate to the applications of the Controller Railroad & Navigation Co. for rights of way or confirmation of its maps of rights of way or harbor rights or privileges in or near to the said Controller Bay, or upon the Chugach National Forest, or upon lands eliminated therefrom, or upon the tide lands or shore lands of the said Controller Bay, with such information, if any, as is in the possession of the War Department, relating to the character of Controller Bay as a harbor, its soundings, and a designation of those portions of the harbor which are available for the use of deep-water vessels.

Also, to include in the report hereby requested the names of the soldiers whose claims are to be used as bases for the applications for the land referred to, the mesne and subsequent assignments, and other data relating thereto, with a statement of the present status of all said applications to enter said lands or for rights of way thereon.

I herewith submit copies of all the documents above requested. The records in the Department of Commerce and Labor are not asked for in the resolution, but the Secretary of the Interior has secured from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor certain documents relating to the subject matter on file or of record in the Bureau of Coast and Geodetic Survey, and those are transmitted as part of the documents furnished me by the Secretary of the Interior. I also submit such documents as are on the Executive Office files relating to the Executive order of October 28 last.

I deem it wise and proper to accompany the submission of these documents with a statement in narrative form of the action of the administration with the reasons therefor.

The Executive order of October 28, 1910, referred to in the resolution, was in the terms following:

CHUGACH NATIONAL FOREST, ALASKA.

Under authority of the act of Congress of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat., 11, at 34 and 36), and on the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, it is hereby ordered that the proclamation of February 23, 1909, enlarging the Chugach National Forest, be modified to reduce the area of such national forest by eliminating therefrom the following-described tract, containing approximately 12,800 acres of land, which has been found upon examination, to be not chiefly valuable for national forest purposes:

Beginning at a point where the meridian of longitude 144° 5′ west crosses the coast line of Controller Bay, thence north along said meridian line to the parallel of latitude at 60° 10′ north; thence west along said parallel to a point where the same crosses the coast line at or near the mouth of Bering River, and thence along the coast to the place of beginning.

The tract above described is hereby restored to the public domain.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, October 28, 1910.

Controller Bay is upward of 20 miles in total length and 5 or 6 miles in width and is land-locked by a number of islands. It was supposed for some time to be so shallow as to make its use for navigation impossible, but in 1907 a channel was discovered, which passed from the ocean to the southeast of the island of Kanaka and curving into the bay extended southeasterly some 7 miles. Mr. McCabe, solicitor of the Agricultural Department, states in the memorandum (Exhibit D–28) prepared by him for submission to the Secretary and to me, that investigation had shown that for a distance of 6 miles the frontage of Controller Bay was on deep water, to be reached by trestles of ordinary length.

A more exact description of the channel is as follows: For 4 miles it is about three-quarters of a mile wide and for 3 miles about 2,000 feet wide, gradually approaching nearer to the shore of the mainland. The channel is 11 fathoms where it enters the bay, and continues for more than 5 miles to have a 30-foot depth, and then gradually shallows until it is from 12 to 15 feet at mean low water. The mean high tide would increase its depth 9 feet (Exhibit A–37). The bottom of the channel is glacial silt and very easily dredgible, so that it would be entirely practicable to widen the channel and deepen it the full length of 7 miles. The tract eliminated by the Executive order has a right-angled triangular form, with the shore line or high-water mark as the hypotenuse, between 6 and 7 miles long and roughly about the same length as the channel I have described. The north shore opposite the entrance of the channel to the bay is between 2 and 3 miles from low-water mark, and is separated therefrom by tidal mud flats that are covered at high water. The 30-foot contour line is about a mile farther from the shore line.

All the territory surrounding Controller Bay was included in the Chugach Forest Reservation in 1909 by a proclamation of President Roosevelt. The importance of Controller Bay is that it lies about 25 miles from very valuable coal deposits known as the Bering coal fields. Katalla Bay is to the west of Controller Bay and almost immediately adjoins it. It is an open roadstead upon the shore of which an attempt was made by the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate to establish a railway terminal, and thence to build a road to the Bering coal fields, already mentioned. The attempt failed for the reason that the breakwater protecting the terminals was destroyed by storms and the terminals became impracticable. Some 50 miles or more farther west of Katalla Bay is the mouth of the Copper River, where there is an excellent harbor, on which is the town of Cordova. There the Copper River Railroad, owned by the Morgan-Guggenheim interests, has its terminals, and the line runs to the northeast along the Copper River and has nearly reached certain rich copper mines in the interior. A branch from this main line is projected to the Bering coal fields and is feasible (Exhibit C–4–C).

When the channel in the Controller Bay was discovered, Mr. Tittmann, Superintendent of the Coast Survey, as shown by his letter in the record (Exhibit C–4–A), was of opinion that it was of great value and ought to be maintained as a naval reservation because of its proximity to the coal fields. His letter was submitted by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to the Secretary of the Interior, who invited the comment of the Director of the Geological Survey. That officer replied that the harbor was a poor one, and that it would not be as good for a naval reservation as one already selected, but that he thought that private capital ought to be encouraged to construct a railway from the channel over the mud flats to the shore and thence to the coal fields. Capt. Pillsbury, of the Army Engineers, in a report in the record (Exhibit B–60), made in 1908, mentions three possible objections to Controller Bay: First, that the surrounding islands may prove to be so low as not fully to protect the channel; second, that the flats extend two or three miles from the shore; and, third, that ice formed in the rivers entering the bay and affected by tidal currents may destroy structures put upon the flats, and especially a long trestle built over them.

In December, 1909, Mr. Richard S. Ryan, representing the Controller Railway & Navigation Co., applied to Mr. Pinchot, the then Forester (Exhibit D–1), for an elimination from the Chugach Forest Reservation of a tract of land to enable his company to secure railroad terminals, bunkers, railroad shops, etc., on the northeast shore of Controller Bay. This application was referred by the Associate Forester to the district forester at Portland, Oreg., and by him to the forester in Alaska. The result of these references and the application was that early in 1910 Mr. Graves, who had in the meantime become Forester, reported that there was no objection from the standpoint of forestry interests to the elimination of the tract indicated, or, indeed, of 18,000 acres on the northeast shore of Controller Bay (Exhibit D–14).

The attention of the Navy Department was invited by the Forestry Bureau to the proposal to open the shore of Controller Bay to entry and occupation, and inquiry was made whether the Navy Department desired to use Controller Bay as a reservation and whether it objected to its being opened up (Exhibit D–5). The answer was in the negative (Exhibit D–9).

The matter was considered by the Forestry Bureau, by the Secretary of Agriculture, by the Secretary of the Interior, and by the General Land Office, and the result was a recommendation to me in May, 1910, that an elimination be made of 320 acres, with a frontage of 160 rods on the northeast shore of Controller Bay (Exhibit D–28). I entertained some question about the matter, and stated my objections at a Cabinet meeting. Thereafter, some time in June, I had an interview with Mr. Richard S. Ryan, the promoter of the Controller Railway & Navigation Co., to whom the Secretary of the Interior had stated my objections, which led to Ryan's sending a communication to the Secretary of the Interior under date of July 13, 1910 (Exhibits A–6 and C–2–B). This letter was, in the Secretary's absence, sent by the department to me at once. I considered the whole case in August, 1910, and directed that the 320 acres, recommended by both departments, be eliminated as recommended (Exhibit D–33). Nothing was done, however, in the matter until I returned to Washington in October, 1910, when a formal order, which had been drawn in the Interior Department (Exhibit C–2–K) and was subsequently specifically approved by the Secretary of Agriculture (Exhibit C–2–J) and returned to the Interior Department, was submitted to me by the Acting Secretary of the Interior, with the approval of that department (Exhibit C–2–K). The order was as follows:

[Executive order.]

CHUGACH NATIONAL FOREST, ALASKA.

Under authority of the act of Congress of June 4, 1897 (30 Stat., 11, at 34 and 36), and on the recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture, it is hereby ordered that the proclamation of February 23, 1909, enlarging the Chugach National Forest, be modified to reduce the area of such national forest by eliminating therefrom the following described tract, containing approximately 320 acres of land, which has been found, upon examination, to be not chiefly valuable for national forest purposes and which is necessary for terminal purposes and desired by the Controller Railway & Navigation Co. for such purposes:

Beginning at a point on Controller Bay which bears south 17° 22′ west, 1,196.7 feet from United States location monument No. 842; thence north 5,729.5 feet; thence east 2,202.1 feet; thence south 7,044.2 feet to a point on Controller Bay; thence following the meanders of the bay north 52° 30′ west, 1,460 feet; thence north 79° 26′ west 800 feet; thence north 42° 34′ west 380 feet, to the point of beginning, containing 320 acres, approximately, the same being in approximate longitude 144° 11′ west from Greenwich, latitude 60° 8′ north.

The tract above described is hereby restored to the public domain.

The question finally came before the Cabinet late in October. After a full discussion of the matter, and after a consideration of the law, I expressed dissatisfaction with the order because it purported on its face to make the elimination for the benefit of a railroad company of a tract of land which the company could not secure under the statute, for it was a tract 320 acres in one body when only 160 acres could be thus acquired. In the second place, I preferred to make a much larger elimination of a tract facing the entire channel, and with sufficient room for a terminal railway town. I was willing to do this because I found the restrictions in the law sufficient to prevent the possibility of any monopoly of either the upland or the harbor or channel by the Controller Railway & Navigation Co. or any other persons or company. For lack of time sufficient to draft a memorandum myself, I requested the Secretary of the Interior, who, with the Secretary of Agriculture, after full discussion, had agreed in my conclusion, to prepare a letter setting forth the reasons for making the larger elimination, so that it might become part of the record. The letter is of even date with the order (Exhibit A–18). It does not set forth the reasons for the larger order as fully as I did in discussing it.

It had been originally suggested by the Forestry Bureau that 18,000 acres might safely be eliminated so far as forestry purposes were concerned (Exhibit D–9), but fear had been expressed by one of the district foresters that such a large elimination would offer an opportunity to the company to use land scrip and acquire title to extensive town sites, and the result of the joint consideration of both departments had been the reduction to 320 acres (Exhibit C–2–K).

I wish to be as specific as possible upon this point and to say that I alone am responsible for the enlargement of the proposed elimination from 320 acres to 12,800 acres, and that I proposed the change and stated my reasons therefor, and while both Secretaries cordially concurred in it, the suggestion was mine.

The statement of Mr. Ryan, who had been properly vouched to the Forester by two gentlemen whom I know, Mr. Chester Lyman and Mr. Fred Jennings (Exhibit D–12), and who had produced a letter from a reputable financial firm, Probst, Wetzler & Co. (Exhibit D–26), was that the railway company which he represented had expended more than $75,000 in making preparations for the construction of a railway from Controller Bay to the coal fields, 25 miles away, but that they were obstructed in so doing by the order reserving the Chugach Forest Reservation, which covered all of the Controller Bay shore. He, as well as Probst, Wetzler & Co., gave every assurance that the Copper River Railway Co., owned by Messrs. Morgan and Guggenheim, had no connection with them, and that they were engaged in an independent enterprise in good faith to build an independent railroad (Exhibits C–2–B and D–26). No evidence to the contrary has been brought to my attention since.

Of course it was possible that the owners of the Copper River Railway Co. might attempt to buy this railroad when, and if, it was built. It was possible that Mr. Ryan was acting in the interests of the Copper River Railroad, although I did not believe it; but, whether this was true or not, it was clear that the order of elimination by reason of the restrictions of the act of Congress hereafter explained, would not permit the owners of either railroad to shut out any other capitalists who might desire to construct a railroad from the channel of Controller Bay to the coal fields; and if by this order we could secure the construction of a railroad from Controller Bay to the coal fields, it would be a distinct step in the useful development of Alaska. The rates of freight for coal to be charged, of course, would always be subject to congressional control, and if Government ownership seemed a wise policy under the peculiar circumstances, ample land for right of way, harbor frontage, and terminals must always remain available under the law for Government use, or if it is preferred to take over to the Government a railway built by private enterprise, condemnation is easy.

The thing which Alaska needs is development, and where rights and franchises can be properly granted to encourage investment and construction of railroads without conferring exclusive privileges, I believe it to be in accordance with good policy to grant them.

Full authority is given in the Federal statutes for the location of railroads and the acquisition of a right of way over public lands by such location and construction of the road in Alaska (30 Stat. L., 409), and this is permitted even in the forest reservations (30 Stat. L., 1233). Pains are taken in the statute to prevent one railroad from excluding another by the appropriation of the only possible pass or canyon or defile through which a road can be built between two points. The difficulty presented by a forest reservation in a case like this is that there is no opportunity to secure town sites or proper terminals for a coal road and shipping point in such a reservation. When, on the recommendation of Forester Pinchot, the Chugach National Forest was created by proclamation of President Roosevelt in July, 1907, there were excepted from the forest the several areas contained within boundaries formed by circles described with a radius of a mile each from the centers of 10 small towns or settlements. Among these were Eyak, on Orca Bay, and Valdez, on Valdez Arm. A little later—September 18, 1907—there was eliminated from the reservation approximately 33,000 acres of the water front on Valdez Arm, the tract thus eliminated being a mile wide, abutting on the shore, and following the contour of the arm or bay for a distance of more than 30 miles (Exhibit A–44). At this time, Valdez was deemed important as a future port. Both Orca Bay and Valdez Arm are excellent harbors and have deep water near the shore.

While it does not appear that the creation of railway terminals and harbor facilities was one of the reasons for the exclusion from the national forest of the lands around the town of Eyak, or for the elimination of 33,000 acres at Valdez Arm, it certainly was not regarded as necessary to include or to retain these lands within the national forest for fear they would be entered by a railroad, because on April 24, 1907, Mr. Ballinger, then Commissioner of the General Land Office, had called the attention of Secretary Garfield to the fact that a number of transportation companies were seeking to obtain rights of way through the lands included in the general area proposed to be reserved. Doubtless the rights of the public were thought to be sufficiently safeguarded against monopoly of harbor facilities under the limitations of the statute hereafter mentioned, which were the same then as now. As a matter of fact, the Copper River Railway Co., owned by the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate, having applied for terminal and station grounds at what was then called Eyak shortly before the Chugach Forest Reservation was proclaimed, has established its terminals there and thus has been developed in the immediate neighborhood the well-known terminal town of Cordova. Whenever the Bering coal fields are opened this company can readily reach them by a branch line, the construction of which has already been considered and is entirely practicable. Indeed, its promoters have insisted to the Secretary of the Interior that this is the proper method of developing these coal fields, and that they would not be interested in building a direct line to Controller Bay, where it would be necessary for them to duplicate terminal facilities they already have at Cordova on a better harbor, and where coal is not the only commodity seeking transportation. If this position is correct, and it seems to have sound economic reasons behind it, the only effect of preventing railroad construction at Controller Bay would be to leave the field entirely to the Copper River Railroad.

If a railroad was to be constructed from Controller Bay to the Bering coal fields it was perfectly evident that there must be a terminal town on the shore of Controller Bay, and I was therefore glad and anxious to throw it open to entry and settlement as one important step in encouraging railroad enterprise. I was certain that Congress had provided, in the statutes affecting the entry and settlement of land in Alaska, limitations which would prevent the possibility of the exclusive appropriation of the harbor and channel of Controller Bay or its shores or upland to any one railroad. This I propose now to show.

The only practicable method for securing title from the Government in such a tract as this after its elimination is by the use of what is called "soldiers' additional homestead right" evidenced by scrip. The statutory limitations upon this method of acquiring title are threefold:

First. No more than 160 acres can be entered in any single body by such scrip (30 Stat. L., 409; 32 Stat. L., 1028).

Second. No location of scrip along any navigable waters can be made within the distance of 80 rods of any lands already located along such waters. No entry can be allowed extending more than 160 rods along the shore of any navigable water, and along such shore a space of at least 80 rods must be reserved from entry between all such claims (30 Stat. L., 409; 32 Stat. L., 1028). Moreover, the statute expressly provides that a roadway 60 feet in width, parallel to the shore line as near as may be practicable, shall be reserved for the use of the public as a highway (30 Stat. L., 413).

Third. Nothing in the act contained is to be construed to authorize entries to be made or title to be acquired to the shore of any navigable waters within said district (30 Stat. L., 409; 32 Stat. L., 1029).

Under the first limitation the navigation company and every other person is prevented from locating more than 160 acres in one body. By the construction of the land department, as shown in the record, this requires a separation between any two entries by the same person or in the same interest of a tract of 40 acres (Exhibit A–43). This would prevent the possibility of any one person or any one interest acquiring an entire tract like that of 12,800 acres.

The second limitation is important in that it prevents the entry of claims at any point on the shore having a greater frontage than half a mile and requires that between that and the next claim taken up there shall be a frontage reserved to the public and kept in public control of a quarter of a mile. The consequence is that in the 7 miles of the frontage of this eliminated tract there must be reserved for Government control and use, and such disposition as Congress may see fit to make, and free from private appropriation, a frontage aggregating about 2¾ miles and so distributed along the shore in frontages of 80 rods as to make certain of a public frontage of this width having all the advantage that any private frontage can have (Exhibit A–38). In other words, if a tract with a half-mile frontage is located at a particularly advantageous place with reference to the harbor, then on each side of that frontage must be reserved to the public a frontage of a quarter of a mile, or a half mile in all, for public uses. These public frontages are to be connected by a 60-foot street reserved parallel to the shore.

These two restrictions necessarily prevent a monopoly of land abutting on the shore, and as they necessarily prevent a monopoly by any one locator, or in the interest of any company for whom locators are acting, they take away the motive for the acquisition of land and frontage merely for the purpose of excluding other companies and possible competitors and tend to confine locators to the acquisition of land to be profitable in its use.

Since the Executive order was issued, October 28, 1910, there have been four locations under soldiers' scrip—three of them of 160 rods each along the bay, separated by two divisions of 80 rods, dated November 1, November 10, and November 11, 1910, respectively. I shall assume that all of them are in the interest of the Controller Railway & Navigation Co. None of them has been approved or passed to patent, but I shall assume they can be passed to valid patent. Where the fourth one, dated March 11, 1911, is, does not appear on the map opposite page 2, but it is understood to front 160 rods on the bay shore on the east side of the Campbell River. In addition, upon one of the 80-rod intervals, there is filed what is called a terminal railroad claim of 40 acres, covering the entire frontage of 80 rods. This was filed December 14, 1910, after the location of the two scrip entries which it connects. It is plainly invalid because placed on the interval of 80 rods especially reserved by statute for the public. We thus have four frontages of 160 rods now located.

Of the shore frontage unlocated which may be appropriated by scrip, there remain six frontages of 160 rods each on the shore of the tract opened by the Executive order facing the bay and channel (see memorandum of Mr. Tittmann of the Coast Survey, Exhibit A–38), and in addition about 2¾ miles of frontage distributed in eleven 80-rod strips, subject to public use and the disposition of Congress. There is thus ample room for many other railroads to reach high-water mark on Controller Bay, and there to acquire tracts for terminals. Of the 12,800 acres, the entries in area have covered not more than 800 acres, and all the rest is available for scrip location or is reserved for the public under the limitations of the act.

But it is said that the three or four locations are the best ones on the bay with reference to the channel and harbor, and are opposite the deepest part. If this is true, it is equally true of the 80-rod reservations between and on each side of these locations. More than that, the channel extends 2½ miles beyond these locations, and while it narrows some and shallows some, it still has a depth of from 15 to 30 feet at low water and, if necessary, is easily capable of being dredged to greater depth and greater width because of the character of the bottom.

But there is a third reason why the opening of this tract to settlement and limited private appropriations can not lead to a monopoly in the Controller Railway & Navigation Co. or anyone else. The distance from the dry land, i. e., the shore land—the line of high-water mark—to the line of low-water mark is between 2 and 3 miles, and the distance to deeper water is about a mile farther, making it necessary, if a harbor is to be reached and used, to construct a viaduct or trestle 3 or 4 miles long from the shore to the channel. This tidal flat is owned by the United States, and the acquisition under the public-land laws of tracts on the shore abutting these tidal flats gives no right or title to those flats. This would be the law if the statute was silent on the subject; but not only the statute of 1898 (30 Stat. L., 409) but also the amending statute of 1903 (32 Stat. L., 1028) expressly imposes the restriction that no title or right can be obtained under the act in the shore of a navigable body of water.

The theory upon which it has been contended that the Controller Railway & Navigation Co. has practically acquired an exclusive appropriation of the harbor is that its anticipated ownership of the lands located by it and abutting on the shore will give it the right to build viaducts from these lands to the side of the deep channel 3½ miles away and there establish wharves on the channel equal in frontage to that of the locations made on the shore, and that even if it does not itself build such wharves, it can prevent anyone else from enjoying access to the channel for the whole length of its frontage, say, 2 miles. I have shown that even if this were the law, the public reservations and the unlocated frontage would prevent monopoly of the channel. But it is not the law.

The shore runs from high-water mark down to low-water mark. The owners of the upland, by virtue of the title they have acquired from the Government, do not acquire a vested right of access to the deep water, and have no right or easement to build viaducts or trestles across the flats or wharves along the deep channel which Congress may not regulate or defeat.

The principle of law is settled by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Shively v. Bowlby (152 U. S., 1). In that case it was decided that "grants by Congress of portions of the public lands within a territory to settlers thereon, though bordering on or bounded by navigable waters, convey of their own force no title or right below high-water mark" and do not impair the right either of the United States or of the future State, when created, to deal with the tidal land between high and low water mark at pleasure. It was there held that in the State of Oregon a person who took title to land acquired under an act of Congress while Oregon was a Territory, abutting on the tidal water of the Columbia River, could not object to a subsequent grant to another by the State of Oregon of the tidal lands upon which the land of the grantee under the act of Congress abutted.

It follows that no matter what the ownership of the upland abutting on the tidal flats, Congress has complete power to regulate the trestles and wharves which shall be built from the shore to the channel and along it, and to determine their character and the distance along the channel they may occupy, and in the absence of congressional action the abutting lot owners can possibly acquire at best only a revocable license or permit from the War Department to put in such structures as that department will certify do not interfere with navigation.

Is congressional action wanting or has Congress given abutting lot owners any permission or easement of this kind? In only two instances has Congress conferred any such authority.

There is a provision of the act of May 14, 1898 (30 Stat. L., 409), providing a right of way for located railways in Alaska that reads as follows:

> And when such railway shall connect with any navigable stream or tidewater, such company shall have power to construct and maintain necessary piers and wharves for connection with water transportation, subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury.

But this is not a right incident to, or commensurate with, ownership of abutting land, but it is incident only to the location of a right of way of a railway. It secures to the railway only such trestles or viaducts to the wharves along the deep channel as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary.

In the second place, there is a provision in the same act by which the Secretary of the Interior may permit the extension of piers and the construction of wharves from the 80-rod frontages reserved to the public, to the navigable channel, but such piers and wharves must be open to public use for reasonable tolls to be fixed by the Secretary (30 Stat. L., 413).

There is no provision or intimation in the statute that abutting landowners as such shall have an easement of this kind. The consequence is that even if the Controller Railway & Navigation Co. were to obtain control of the entire frontage on the north shore—which, of course, it can not do because of the 80-rod reservations—it still could not appropriate the channel or exclude anyone from its occupancy.

The whole contention that the Executive order and the opening to settlement of the shore of Controller Bay grants a monopoly to the railway company rests on the claim that it has given an opportunity to persons using scrip to appropriate the control of the only available and practicable parts of the channel by the location of the scrip opposite to those parts. If now the location of the scrip opposite to the harbor gives no right to reach the harbor except as Congress may expressly give it, clearly the Controller Railway & Navigation Co. has not the slightest opportunity for exclusive appropriation of the harbor facilities unless Congress shall by future act deliberately and voluntarily confer it.

I should be lacking in candor if I allowed it to be inferred that this third reason for saying that there is not the slightest danger of this order giving a monopoly of the channel to the Controller Railway & Navigation Co. was present in my mind when I made the order. I was, of course, satisfied because of the other restrictions mentioned that no monopoly of the channel could follow, but I did not examine the law as to this point at that time. But the law is as I have stated it, and the consequences are inevitable.

The owners of the Controller Railway & Navigation Co. realized the difficulty there might be in asserting a right as abutting owners to construct trestles and wharves on the tidal flats to the channel, and without even relying on the express privilege conferred on railway companies to apply to the Secretary of the Treasury for such permission, already quoted, went direct to Congress and secured from Congress an act which gives to the company expressly a right of way 200 feet wide across the tidal flats to the deep water; but this grant of an exclusive easement is carefully drawn and is accompanied and surrounded with every safeguard. Express power to repeal it is reserved to Congress, and the character and extent of the structures on the channels are placed in the control of the War Department upon recommendation of the Chief of Engineers. This easement was granted in an act passed March 4 of this year (36 Stat. at Large, p. 1360), and only after full examination by the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House, after recommendations by the War Department and the Interior Department and a clarifying discussion in the House of Representatives (Exhibits A–40, B–86, B–88, and B–90).

In the records of the War Department will be found one permit to construct a trestle from the Controller Bay shore to the channel, which, by extension, is still in force and will remain so until January 1, 1912 (Exhibit B–78). This was given to the Controller Bay & Bering Coal Railway Co., a different company from the Controller Railway & Navigation Co. It does not appear upon what authority such permit could be given by the War Department. Under the statute, the Secretary of the Treasury is charged with supervision over such a case, and before a lawful license can be granted his consent must be obtained (30 Stat. L., 409).

It follows from what has been said that the question of how the channel of Controller Bay shall be used is wholly in the control of Congress and nothing that has been done by the Executive order or otherwise imperils that control. With the opportunity that any projected railway has to secure access to the harbor by locating its right of way to the line of the shore under supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury, or by application to Congress, the mere private ownership of land abutting on the shore is relatively unimportant. If a railway company thus secures access by trestle and wharf to the deep-water channel, it may conveniently establish its terminal yards, stations, warehouses, and elevators wherever in the eliminated tract it can secure title, and extended frontage on the tidal flats is of no particular advantage. As 12,000 acres in the tract eliminated still remain open to entry, the prospect of a monopoly in one railroad company is most remote. I submit to all fair-minded men who may have been disturbed over the charges made in respect to the Executive order of October 28, 1910, that it has been demonstrated by the foregoing that no public interest has suffered from its issue; that great good may come from it; and that no dishonest or improper motive is needed to explain it. I might, therefore, stop here; but rather for the purpose of the moral to be drawn from them than to vindicate the order, I propose to consider the attacks upon the order that misinformation, hysteria, or rancor has prompted.

The order has been criticized because it was not in form a proclamation instead of an order. This was determined by Mr. Graves, the Forester, who, in letter of March 24, 1910, speaking of the proposed elimination, says to his assistant:

> Action in this instance will be takn by Executive order rather than by proclamation accompanied by diagram.

And he gives the reasons in a note dated July 6, 1911 (Exhibit D–43):

> When a comparatively small area is to be eliminated from a national forest the Executive order is very commonly used instead of the proclamation, especially when other changes in boundaries may be made in a short time. The preparation of the diagrams which accompany a proclamation is necessarily expensive and laborious, and the issuance of repeated proclamations with their diagrams is avoided when an Executive order will serve the purpose. In the present case reports were pending, recommending other changes in boundaries of the Chugach Forest, and since the proposed eliminations would be described without the use of a diagram, the Executive order form of elimination was chosen.

The fact is that in law there is in effect no difference between a proclamation and an Executive order. (Wood v. Beach, 156 U. S., 548–550.) In practice the same publicity is given to each. Both are sent to the State Department for record. (See the letter from the Secretary of State—Exhibit A–35.) The custom of the State Department is to advertise neither a proclamation nor an Executive order. Each is merely handed to the representatives of the press after being executed, and is sent to the large mailing list of the State Department. That course was here pursued in respect to the Executive order of October 28, 1910. In accordance with custom, copies were sent to the Interior Department and the Agricultural Department, because they were especially concerned.

The charge has been made that this was a secret order, and that though it was made in October, 1910, no one knew of it until April, 1911. This is utterly unfounded. The statement of Mr. Vernon (Exhibit A–36), the correspondent of the Post-Intelligencer, of Seattle, a newspaper of wide circulation among a people most interested in Alaska, shows that 10 days before the order was made, news of the details of Ryan's application and the probability of its being granted was given wide publicity. It further appears from the records of the Interior Department that the evening the order was signed, October 28, 1910, a full notice of the issue of the order and its details was furnished by the department to all correspondents in the form of a news bulletin (Exhibits A–36 and C–32–C). Finally, the agent of the Associated Press (Exhibit A–39) certifies that at 7.23 p. m., October 28, 1910, there was sent out by that association to all its newspaper clients a telegram taken from a typewritten statement issued by the Interior Department, as follows:

WASHINGTON, October 28.

Approximately 12,800 acres of land in the Chugach National Forest, Alaska, have been restored by the President for disposition under appropriate land laws, according to information made public to-day by the Interior Department. These lands are situated on the coast line of Controller Bay in southern Alaska near the Cunningham claims, and have been found upon examination to be of little value for forestry purposes.

It would be difficult to prepare an advertisement more informing to the public or more likely to attract the attention of all likely to desire acquisition of land on Controller Bay. On the 20th the Chief Forester sent a telegram making a similar announcement to his district forester at Portland, Oreg. (Exhibit D–42).

The order has been attacked on the ground that it did not contain a provision delaying its taking effect for 30 days after its local publication as orders restoring land to settlement by homesteaders frequently do. An examination of the record furnishes an explanation of this feature of the order as made. When, in October, the two departments had agreed, with my acquiescence, that the order should be an elimination of only 320 acres, an order describing the 320 acres directing its restoration to settlement and containing the usual provision postponing its taking effect 30 days was prepared in the Forestry Bureau and forwarded to the Interior Department. There it was deemed wiser to spread on the face of the order a specific declaration that it was made to afford terminals for the Controller Railway & Navigation Co., and as no one else was expected to intervene and take up any part of the eliminated tract the restoration was made immediate (Exhibit C–2–J).

The form thus amended was submitted to the Secretary of Agriculture, who expressed his preference for the immediate restoration order through his solicitor's memorandum on the face of the order, as follows:

Mr. CLEMENTS,
[Assistant Attorney in the Interior Department:]

We think this O. K. The Secretary says it is the direct way, and appeals to him.

GEO. P. MCCABE.

The idea of the Secretary doubtless was that the short form of order was preferable because on its face it was directly indicative of the purpose to secure an opportunity to the railway company by proper entry to settle on the land eliminated, and as no one else was expected to intervene no postponement was needed. Accordingly when the case came for decision in the Cabinet the order was without any postponement clause. This was the form sent me for my signature by the Acting Secretary of the Interior Department (Exhibit C–2–K).

When I directed the striking out of the reference to the railway company and the enlargement of the area from 320 acres to 12,800 acres the form of the order in its provision for immediate restoration was not changed. I have no doubt that this was the reason why the order issued took the form it did. Had the postponement clause been suggested, I would, doubtless, have directed it to be embodied in the order. But the event has proven that it was really not important in this case, for in now, nearly nine months, only the Controller Railway & Navigation Co. has made any scrip entries on the eliminated tract and this, although 12,000 acres and about 2½ miles of water front still remain open to entry, and there are several different railway companies in addition to the Controller Railway & Navigation Co. that had filed locations for rights of way in the vicinity in the last two years who have had in the last nine months the fullest notice of their opportunity if they wished to enter on this land.

Before closing I desire to allude to a circumstance which the terms of this resolution make apt and relevant. It is a widely published statement attributed to a newspaper correspondent that in an examination of the files of the Interior Department a few weeks ago a postscript was found attached to a letter of July 13, 1910, addressed by Mr. Richard S. Ryan to Secretary Ballinger—and in the present record—urging the elimination of land enough for terminals for the Controller Railway & Navigation Co. The postscript was said to read as follows:

DEAR DICK:

I went to see the President the other day. He asked me who it was I represented. I told him, according to our agreement, that I represented myself. But this didn't seem to satisfy him. So I sent for Charlie Taft and asked him to tell his brother, the President, who it was I really represented. The President made no further objection to my claim.

Yours. DICK.

The postscript is not now on the files of the department. If it were, it would be my duty to transmit it under this resolution. Who is really responsible for its wicked fabrication, if it ever existed, or for the viciously false statement made as to its authenticity, is immaterial for the purposes of this communication. The purport of the alleged postscript is, and the intention of the fabricator was, to make Mr. Richard S. Ryan testify through its words to the public that although I was at first opposed in the public interest to granting the elimination which he requested, nevertheless through the undue influence of my brother, Mr. Charles P. Taft, and the disclosure of the real persons in interest, I was induced improperly and for the promotion of their private gain to make the order.

The statement in so far as my brother is concerned—and that is the chief feature of the postscript—is utterly unfounded. He never wrote to me or spoke to me in reference to Richard S. Ryan or on the subject of Controller Bay or the granting of any privileges or the making of any orders in respect to Alaska. He has no interest in Alaska, never had, and knows nothing of the circumstances connected with this transaction. He does not remember that he ever met Richard S. Ryan. He never heard of the Controller Railway & Navigation Co. until my cablegram of inquiry reached him, which, with his answer, is in the record (Exhibits A–23 and 24).

Mr. Ballinger says in a telegram in answer to my inquiry, both of which are in the record (Exhibits A–25 and 26), that he never received such a postscript and that he was in Seattle on the date of July 13, when it was said to have been written.

Mr. Richard S. Ryan, in a letter which he has sent me without solicitation, and which is in the record (Exhibit A–21), says that he never met my brother, Mr. Charles P. Taft, and that so far as he knows, Mr. Charles P. Taft never had the slightest interest in Controller Bay, in the Controller Railway & Navigation Co., or in any Alaskan company, and he utterly denies writing or signing the alleged postscript. The utter improbability of his writing such a postscript to Mr. Ballinger at Washington, when the latter was away for his vacation for two months, must impress everyone.

The fact is that Mr. Ballinger never saw the letter of July 13, 1910, to which this postscript is said to have been attached. It was sent to me by Mr. Carr, Secretary Ballinger's private secretary, at Beverly, on July 14—the next day (Exhibit C–2–D). I read the letter at Beverly in August with other papers and sent them to the White House. It was placed upon the White House files and remained there until April 22, 1911 (Exhibits A–20 and 29), when it was, by request of Secretary Fisher, for use in connection with his answer to a Senate inquiry, returned to the Interior Department, and it was after this that the correspondent is said to have seen the letter with the postscript attached. Mr. Carr saw no such postscript when he sent the letter to me. I did not see it when I read it. No one saw it in the Executive Office, but it remained to appear as a postscript when it is said that the correspondent saw the letter in April or May on the files of the Interior Department. All others were denied the sight (Exhibits A–29 and 41).

The person upon whose statement the existence of what has been properly characterized as an amazing postscript is based, is a writer for newspapers and magazines, who was given permission by Secretary Fisher, after consultation with me, to examine all the files in respect to the Controller Bay matter—and this under the supervision of Mr. Brown, then private secretary to the Secretary of the Interior (Exhibit A–29). After the examination, at which it is alleged this postscript was received from the hand of Mr. Brown, the correspondent prepared an elaborate article on the subject of this order and Controller Bay, which was submitted to Mr. Fisher, and which was discussed with Mr. Fisher at length, but never in the conversation between them or in the article submitted did the correspondent mention the existence of the postscript. Mr. Brown states that there was no such postscript in the papers when he showed them to the correspondent and that he never saw such a postscript. Similar evidence is given by Mr. Carr and other custodians of the records in the Interior Department (Exhibit A–29).

Stronger evidence of the falsity and maliciously slanderous character of the alleged postscript could not be had. Its only significance is the light it throws on the bitterness and venom of some of those who take active part in every discussion of Alaskan issues. The intensity of their desire to besmirch all who invest in that District and all who are officially connected with its administration operates upon the minds of weak human instruments and prompts the fabrication of such false testimony as this postscript. I dislike to dwell upon this feature of the case, but it is so full of a lesson that ought to be taken to the heart of every patriotic citizen that I can not pass it over in silence.

When I made this order I was aware that the condition of public opinion in reference to investments in Alaska, fanned by charges of fraud—some well founded and others of an hysterical and unjust or false character—would lead to an attack upon it and to the questioning of my motives in signing it. I remarked this when I made the order, and I was not mistaken. But a public officer, when he conceives it his duty to take affirmative action in the public interest, has no more right to allow fear of unjust criticism and attack to hinder him from taking that action than he would to allow personal and dishonest motives to affect him. It is easy in cases like this to take the course which timidity prompts and to do nothing, but such a course does not inure to the public weal.

I am in full sympathy with the concern of reasonable and patriotic men that the valuable resources of Alaska should not be turned over to be exploited for the profit of greedy, absorbing, and monopolistic corporations or syndicates. Whatever the attempts which have been made, no one, as a matter of fact, has secured in Alaska any undue privilege or franchise not completely under the control of Congress. I am in full agreement with the view that every care, both in administration and in legislation, must be observed to prevent the corrupt or unfair acquisition of undue privilege, franchise, or right from the Government in that District. But everyone must know that the resources of Alaska can never become available either to the people of Alaska or to the public of the United States unless reasonable opportunity is granted to those who would invest their money to secure a return proportionate to the risk run in the investment and reasonable under all the circumstances.

On the other hand, the acrimony of spirit and the intense malice that have been engendered in respect of the administration of the government in Alaska and in the consideration of measures proposed for her relief and the wanton recklessness and eagerness with which attempts have been made to besmirch the characters of high officials having to do with the Alaskan government, and even of persons not in public life, present a condition that calls for condemnation and requires that the public be warned of the demoralization that has been produced by the hysterical suspicions of good people and the unscrupulous and corrupt misrepresentations of the wicked. The helpless state to which the credulity of some and the malevolent scandal mongering of others have brought the people of Alaska in their struggle for its development ought to give the public pause, for until a juster and fairer view be taken, investment in Alaska, which is necessary to its development, will be impossible, and honest administrators and legislators will be embarrassed in the advocacy and putting into operation of those policies in regard to the Territory which are necessary to its progress and prosperity.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 26, 1911.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO HOMESTEADERS.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back, with an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, the bill (S. 3052) granting leave of absence to certain homesteaders, and I submit a report (No. 111) thereon. On behalf of my colleague [Mr. WARREN] I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Public Lands report to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That all persons who have heretofore made homestead entries in the Lemmon, Timber Lake, Rapid City, Chamberlain, Gregory, and Pierre land districts, in the State of South Dakota; in the Valentine, O'Neill, and Alliance land districts, in the State of Nebraska; in the Dickinson land district, in the State of North Dakota; and in the Cheyenne, Evanston, Sundance, and Douglas land districts, in the State of Wyoming, are hereby relieved from the necessity of residence upon their lands from the date of the approval of this act to April 15, 1912: Provided, That the time of actual absence during the period named shall not be deducted from the full time of residence required by law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is the Bellefourche land district, South Dakota, included in the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not included.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to amend the bill by inserting "Bellefourche" after "Chamberlain."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert after "Chamberlain," in the State of South Dakota, the word "Bellefourche."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I know of no reason why this amendment should not be made. The reason why it was not inserted in the substitute was that it was not included among those land districts sent to the committee by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, of which he had notice as being in distress. If the Senator himself knows the circumstances, the amendment will be accepted by the committee.

Mr. BORAH. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a written report presented with the bill.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be read.

The Secretary read the report this day submitted by Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3052) granting leave of absence to certain homesteaders, referred the same to the Secretary of the Interior for a report thereon, which report is as follows and is made a part of this report:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 25, 1911.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON,
Chairman Senate Committee on Public Lands.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of a copy of Senate bill 3052, Sixty-second Congress, first session, entitled "A bill granting leave of absence to certain homesteaders," which was introduced by Senator WARREN on July 18, 1911, and to make a report thereon as follows:

That this bill be amended so as to read:

"Be it enacted, etc., That all persons who have heretofore made homestead entries in the Lemmon, Timber Lake, Rapid City, Chamberlain, Gregory, and Pierre land districts, in the State of South Dakota; in the Valentine, O'Neill, and Alliance land districts, in the State of Nebraska; and in the Cheyenne, Evanston, Sundance, and Douglas land districts, in the State of Wyoming, are hereby relieved from the necessity of residence upon their lands from the date of the approval of this act to April 15, 1912: Provided, That the time of actual absence during the period named shall not be deducted from the full time of residence required by law and where any such entryman had abandoned the land embraced in his entry for a period of six months or more immediately preceding the passage of this act, the leave of absence herein granted shall not be available as a defense to any contest brought to enforce the forfeiture of the entry through such abandonment."

The records of this department do not disclose that the other States and Territories mentioned are suffering from a drought to such a degree as to warrant this extension. Correspondence with this office, however, indicates that parts of the Dickinson land district, in North Dakota, are also affected by this drought.

Very respectfully,

SAMUEL ADAMS,
Acting Secretary.

Your committee, having had the bill under consideration, recommends that the same be amended by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following:

"That all persons who have heretofore made homestead entries in the Lemmon, Timber Lake, Rapid City, Chamberlain, Gregory, and Pierre land districts, in the State of South Dakota; in the Valentine, O'Neill, and Alliance land districts, in the State of Nebraska; in the Dickinson land district, in the State of North Dakota; and in the Cheyenne, Evanston, Sundance, and Douglas land districts, in the State of Wyoming, are hereby relieved from the necessity of residence upon their lands from the date of the approval of this act to April 15, 1912: Provided, That the time of actual absence during the period named shall not be deducted from the full time of residence required by law."

Your committee further recommends that the bill when so amended do pass.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement. The bill as originally introduced covered a large number of States and the entire area of the States. It was referred to the Interior Department, and they reported that only in certain land districts in particular States did conditions exist which warranted a call for legislation, and hence the committee reported it substantially with the recommendation of the Interior Department. Among other States, for instance, that were included in the original bill was the State of Minnesota. We have no occasion for such legislation in that State. No drought has existed in that State which has destroyed the crops either last year or this year.

Under the general law a homesteader who has initiated a settlement on his claim can by application to the Land Office secure a leave of absence for six months, but where a settler has not initiated his claim he can not get such leave. The object of this law is to cover those parts of the country where they lost their crops from drought last year altogether, and this year also, and where they have been unable to initiate a settlement on that account. It is for the purpose of allowing those settlers to stay away until next spring, in order that they may earn something for the support of themselves and their families. It is to cover cases where they have not initiated a settlement. Where they have initiated a settlement they can obtain a leave of absence for six months at one time.

The limitation put into the bill limiting it to these particular lands is done at the instance of the Interior Department. Before that report was sent in I had a conversation with the Commissioner of the General Land Office. He said they have on file in their office information from the various land districts so that they could determine in what locality this relief is needed. One district in North Dakota was not included in the amendment he suggested, but he added in his letter that the conditions were such there as in the other localities, and hence we added in the amendment the Dickinson land district, in the State of North Dakota.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota if in passing this bill we are establishing any precedent likely to trouble us in the future?

Mr. NELSON. We are establishing this precedent: If it should happen that they had two years of drought in succession that utterly destroyed the crops, as has been the case in this instance in these localities, it would afford a precedent for relief in those cases.

Mr. PAGE. Is there any precedent in the past for this action?

Mr. NELSON. Not exactly of this kind. We have passed several bills for the relief of settlers, relieving them from occupying the lands during the winter. I recollect that a year or two ago we passed a bill for the benefit of settlers in North Dakota and other Northwestern States on account of the severe winter storms, which prevented them from living on their claims. We excused them from living on them during that stormy period in the winter. Senators will bear in mind that while the bill gives the settlers a leave of absence until the 12th of April next, they have still to live five years on the land before they can get title.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, it seems to me it would hardly be possible that this drought is something so unprecedented that relief should be called for at this time, when nothing of the kind has occurred in the past.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. Let me answer that question. The truth of it is that a large share of these lands, especially in South Dakota, to my knowledge, were entered for the first time at the Land Office last year under a system of drawings and allotments. They were Indian lands opened to homestead settlement for the first time. In most of these cases the homestead settlers did not get the land free. They are required to reside on it, as they did in other cases where they got the land free. But in these cases they have to pay a price for the land, and that goes to the benefit of the Indians. Most of these are not what you would call free homesteads. The homestead requirement of the settler has been incorporated in connection with the price that they have to pay to the Indians for the land.

Mr. PAGE. I see that the department does not recommend the passage of this bill; it simply answers the question very briefly. It occurred to me that this was not the first dry time that has occurred in the past. What I wish to know of the Senator from Minnesota is whether there is some precedent for this legislation or whether it is new?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, we have precedent for this kind of legislation where there has been great drought in the past. But, if the Senator will permit me, this is more especially necessary now because of the new endeavor, comparatively speaking, of dry farming, so called. Lands that were supposed to be arid and semiarid, where water can not be conducted upon them, are now being brought under cultivation. There have been large numbers of people who have settled upon these lands and by deep plowing and summer fallowing are reclaiming the land, making homes, and through their sturdy efforts they are not only making two blades of grass grow where but one grew before, but are making thousands of blades of grass, thousands of acres of growing crops grow, where none grew before, and where in some cases the land was an absolute desert and in others, at best, only produced short, sparse, wild grasses. They had in many localities a very severe drought all last summer and very little snow in the winter and again drought this last spring and present summer.

There is no class of settlers—in fact, no class of citizens—that deserves better treatment or greater indulgence at the hands of the United States Government than do these hardy, industrious, honest, enterprising pioneers who are forcing the reluctant soil to gather and give up moisture enough to insure, at least every other year, a crop worth harvesting.

This proposed bill does not relieve the settler of any responsibility whatever except that it allows him to live longer on the place before he is obliged to make proof on his claim. The Government loses nothing and the settler gains nothing except that he can make sure proof that he has cultivated so much land and gathered crops where he would be debarred from doing it and lose his land if these two dry summers were allowed to count against him and he was not offered relief.

Mr. PAGE. I was not attempting to debate the proposition, except to inquire if this is legislation absolutely new and unprecedented, because in that case I think we ought to debate it still further. If there are precedents for it, as I understand there are, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I want to say, for the information of the Senator from Vermont, that under the general homestead law a settler is required, if he wants the land for nothing except the Land Office fees, to reside upon the land and cultivate it and make it his home for five years. He can, however, under the general homestead law commute his homestead, as we call it; that is, after living on the land 14 months and improving and cultivating it during that time, he can, at the end of 14 months, prove up and get title by paying for the land a dollar and a quarter an acre.

A considerable portion of these lands are Indian lands. In opening them for settlement the homesteaders were required to pay a specific price for the lands, and in order to prevent their going into the hands of speculators the homestead requirement of settlement and cultivation was incorporated. These settlers have still got to live five years on this land, or they can at the end of 14 months commute, but they must pay the stipulated price. All the relief this bill gives them is that between now and next April they need not live on the land. Otherwise in all respects they are obliged to fulfill the requirements of the law.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not propose to interpose any opposition to the passage of this measure, but I want to say, before it does pass, that I think it a very poor kind of land legislation. On May 20, 1862, we passed our homestead law, which requires a homesteader to reside for the term of five years upon his land. That law has become antiquated in its operation and imposes very great hardship on the settler. We are constantly passing laws for the relief of the settler in his distressed condition, because if any unforeseen hardship whatever overtakes him he is already so impoverished by the long years which he must reside upon his homestead before he can have title or utilize it that he must appeal to Congress for relief.

Our sister country, Canada, with which we are so enamored at this time, has provided that a homesteader may acquire title to public land within three years, and that he may have an absence from his home six months out of each year for the purpose of earning that which almost all settlers have to earn in order to enable them to take care of their expenses, which generally can not be earned upon the homestead in the first few years of settlement.

I introduced a bill a year or so ago—some time within which the memory of man runneth not to the contrary—and sent it to the Committee on Public Lands. I have not since heard from it. I think that, in order to relieve the settler, in order to induce immigration in a bona fide way to the public lands, the settlement of the public lands should at this time be placed upon a practical business basis and in accordance with the conditions of the present time; that we should get from under the archaic law of 40 or 50 years ago and give the settler an opportunity to utilize his assets, to utilize his earnings, and to utilize his lands as soon as the bona fide of the settler has been established.

That is as thoroughly established after a period of residence of three years as it is after a period of residence of five years. Instead of administering these temporary reliefs for the distressed condition of the settlers we ought to overhaul the land law and place it in harmony with present conditions and the present time.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I am entirely in harmony with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], but in the meantime, while we are overhauling the general land laws, I think we should pass this bill for temporary relief.

One of two things must happen, Mr. President, either these people must be relieved by the passage of a law of this sort or they must lose their effort for the time mentioned by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and by my colleague from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. It is true, as the Senator from Idaho says, that our land laws are archaic; it is further true that every possible obstruction is put in the way at this day of every man who wants to settle upon the public lands of the United States, there to carve out a home. Not only are obstructions put in his way practically, but hardly an entry is made in local land offices that has not the tinge of suspicion cast upon it. No matter how honest may be the settlement, no matter how earnest may be the endeavor, it is almost impossible, Mr. President, for a man in this day to secure, with any reasonable degree of certainty or in any reasonable time, the title to the land which he has occupied.

The conditions at the present time in these particular land districts are known all over the country. It is known that there have been droughts; it is known that the crops have failed; it is known that unless these settlers get this temporary relief they must forfeit whatever right they may have as attached to this land. I hope that we may not wait for general laws in order to relieve a present necessity.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I did not interpose opposition to the passage of the bill, but I rise to say again that there are hundreds of settlers upon the public lands who are suffering from hardships imposed upon them, almost as much so as those who have been peculiarly subjected to hardships by reason of the drought. I can not understand the persistency with which the American Congress refuses to relieve the man who is in good faith trying to make a home upon the public domain. We are quick to act in certain emergencies and under certain conditions, but the lone settler who goes upon the public domain, impoverished generally when he starts, receives but little consideration, even after 10 years of earnest petitioning to this Congress to enable him to acquire a home under conditions which leave him in a position to take care of his family after he has acquired his home. His family is deprived of schooling; his land is mortgaged the day after he acquires his title in order to take care of the expenses which have been necessarily incurred in the long years which he has been upon the land. We are persistently pursuing a course, year after year, of impoverishing the men who, as home builders, are trying to build up and reclaim these unsettled regions.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I favor the passage of the pending bill as a matter of needed relief; but I am in hearty sympathy with the demand of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] for immediate and comprehensive amendments to our land laws.

Seven years ago I had occasion to call the attention of the Senate to our misfit land laws, and declared that those laws, whilst originally adapted to the settlement of the agricultural portion of the public domain in the humid regions and guarding carefully against land monopoly, were not well suited to the settlement of the public domain in the arid and mineral regions of the country.

I have several times since taken occasion to comment upon the insufficiency of our land laws to meet the economic requirements of western development, and that this very fact had brought about an evasion of the laws with a view to meeting such economic requirements. These conditions brought about a state of public opinion in the West which regarded with complacency the evasion of the law, and under these conditions of public opinion large areas of timber and coal land drifted into monopolistic control, though the purpose of the law was to avoid it.

RISE OF THE CONSERVATION POLICY.

Under Mr. Roosevelt's administration a vigorous propaganda was urged for the reform of the land laws, and as the Representatives of the Western States in Congress were inert in their response to this demand Mr. Roosevelt's administration started upon a vigorous prosecution of all evasions of and frauds under the law.

The beneficiaries of these evasions and frauds were politically strong, and hence arose a struggle with the administration as to the enforcement of the law, when the entire effort of the Representatives of that region should have been addressed to the reform of the law. Meanwhile there was an increasing public demand in that region that the development of its natural resources should not be checked. The answer of the Roosevelt administration was:

We agree with you that such development should not be checked; but if development can only be secured by evasion of existing laws, we must enforce the laws, and if you wish to secure development you must change the laws, and change them in such way as to prevent monopolistic control.

As a member of the Public Lands Committee I have witnessed the struggle that has been going on for years between two contending thoughts—one that the development of the country is best served by the immediate absorption of its natural resources by private interests and the other that the use and development of these natural resources should be controlled by the interest of the entire people in such way as to protect them against injurious monopoly.

The conservation policy, therefore, was developed, which required:

1. That every part of the public lands should be devoted to the use which would best subserve the interests of the whole people.

2. That the classification of all public lands would be necessary for their administration in the interest of the people.

3. That the timber, the minerals, and the surface of the public lands should be disposed of separately.

4. That the public lands more valuable for conserving water supply, timber, and natural beauties or wonders than for agriculture should be held for the use of the people from all except mineral entry.

5. That the title to the surface of the remaining nonmineral public lands should be granted only to actual homeseekers.

6. That pending the transfer of title to the remaining public lands they should be administered by the Government and their use should be allowed in such way as to prevent or control waste and monopoly.

As this policy developed, it took the form of requiring that, whilst the surface of our coal and oil lands could be granted for agricultural purposes, the title to these minerals themselves should be maintained in the Government, and that these resources should be developed under a leasing or royalty system sufficiently liberal to promote enterprise, but at the same time so guarded as to prevent extortionate charges and monopolistic control.

So also with the timberlands the policy took the form of a retention of the title of our timberlands in the Government and the development of this resource through a sale of stumpage to private individuals in such way as to promote private enterprise and yet under such control as to prevent destruction and waste.

And as to the grazing lands the policy developed, whilst encouraging homestead settlement, resulting in the creation of individual homes in areas sufficient to support a family but not large enough to encourage monopolistic holdings, was that the public grazing lands should be put under the control of the Agricultural Department under a leasing system which, looking to no profit for the Government but simply to the covering of administrative expense, would secure equality of opportunity for the small as well as the large grazer, would protect the grass from too greedy competition among the grazers, would prevent physical might from becoming the dominant factor, and do away with the war of the range, which has been so destructive of human life.

A POLICY OF HOME MAKING.

It will be perceived, therefore, that this policy in no way limits the development of the West. On the contrary, it promotes it by seeing that the home maker is preferred everywhere and that, pending the coming of the home maker, the natural resources of the public domain are developed in such way as to promote private enterprise and at the same time protect against waste and injurious monopoly. The enemies of this policy, however, have been most skillful, particularly in the regions affected, in raising the clamor that the purpose of the conservationists is to lock up the resources of the country and to check western development, and that their purpose is also to substitute socialistic control for individual enterprise. That this is not so is shown by extracts from the utterances of Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Taft, the reports of Secretaries Hitchcock, Garfield, and Ballinger, the reports of the Commissioners of the Land Office, the reports of the Land Commission appointed by President Roosevelt, the conference of governors at the White House, and the utterances of the National Conservation Commission.

I shall quote from these reports and utterances as follows:

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT ON THE NECESSITY FOR REVISION OF PUBLIC-LAND LAWS.

President Roosevelt, in his message to the Fifty-eighth Congress, of December 7, 1903, urged the necessity for the revision of public-land laws. Calling attention to the "widespread conviction that certain of the public-land laws and the resulting administrative practice no longer meet the present need," and to the fact that "the rapidly increasing rate of disposal of the public lands is not followed by a corresponding increase in home building," and that "there is a tendency to mass in large holdings public lands, especially timber and grazing lands, and thereby to retard settlement," he urged that, so far as practicable, "the remaining public land should be held rigidly for the home builder"; and he announced the appointment of a Land Commission, consisting of Mr. Richards, the Commissioner of the Land Office; Mr. Pinchot, and Mr. Newell, to report "what changes in organization, laws, regulations, and practice affecting the public lands are needed to effect the largest practicable disposition of the public lands to actual settlers who will build permanent homes upon them, and to secure in permanence the fullest and most effective use of the resources of the public lands."

ROOSEVELT—WITHDRAWAL OF COAL LANDS.

In his message to the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, December 3, 1906, President Roosevelt advised the withdrawal of the coal lands, urging that the ownership should remain in the United States, which should permit them to be worked by private individuals under a royalty system, the Government keeping such control as to prevent the charge of excessive prices to consumers. He said:

The coal, like the forests, should be treated as the property of the public, and its disposal should be under conditions which would inure to the benefit of the public as a whole.

President Roosevelt, on December 16, 1906, sent another message to Congress (S. Doc. No. 141; 59th Cong., 2d sess.) calling attention to the report of the Public Land Commission, and the need to "recast the public-land laws and adapt them to the actual situation."

He called particular attention to the timber and stone act, the desert-land act, and the general unsatisfactoriness of existing laws and the frauds perpetrated under them. He said:

For much of this fraud the present laws are chiefly responsible. * * * The present coal law limiting the individual entry to 160 acres puts a premium on fraud by making it impossible to develop certain types of coal fields and yet comply with the law. It is a scandal to maintain laws which sound well, but which make fraud the key without which great natural resources must remain closed.

Regarding Government control of grazing, he said:

The control of grazing in the national forests is an assured success. * * * The situation on the open Government range is strikingly different. Its carrying capacity has probably been reduced one-half by overgrazing, and is still falling. * * * I recommend that a bill be enacted which will provide for Government control of the public range through the Department of Agriculture, which alone is equipped for that work. * * * The rights of the settler and home maker should be absolutely guaranteed. * * * Reasonable fencing, which promotes the use of the range and yet interferes neither with settlement nor with other range rights, would be thoroughly desirable if it were legal. Yet the law forbids it, and the law must and will be enforced.

Again, during the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress (S. Doc. 310), President Roosevelt, on the 13th day of February, 1907, in a message, urged the "need of legislation affecting the different phases of the public-land situation."

He recommended to Congress legislation providing for title to and development of the surface lands as separate and distinct from the right to the underlying mineral fuels, "and the disposal of these mineral fuels under a leasing system on conditions which would inure to the benefit of the public as a whole."

Calling attention to the fact that the leasing system prevails in Australia and in all the great coal-producing European countries except Great Britain, and that there, as in other countries, the surface culture and the mining operations are conducted independently of each other, and that in the United States, although conveyance of the mineral rights with the surface has been the common practice, the separate development of the two interests is increasing, he declared that mineral fuels, like the forests and navigable streams, should be treated as public utilities.

Referring to the desire of the people of the Western States for a rapid development of that region, he said:

So far from hindering, I want to further that development. But surely * * * the development shall take place in such way as to leave the children better off, and not worse off, than the fathers. Let us use, but not waste, the national resources.

Also urging Government control of the public pasture lands, President Roosevelt said:

The local control of the range should be in the hands of western men familiar with stock raising, and there should be full local participation in the management of the range; for cooperation between the stockmen and the Government officers is absolutely essential. There is no need at present that the Government should get a net revenue from grazing on the public range, but only enough to pay for administration and improvement, and it may be wise to provide that any surplus shall go to the States and Territories in which the fees are collected. If a law for the control of the range should, as I request, be enacted, such control would not be taken hurriedly, but gradually, as grazing districts can be organized.

Again referring to fencing, and referring to the present illegal fencing, he said:

Much of this fencing is needed; much of it also represents a fraud upon the public. What is needed is not to provide for the continuance of all fencing, whether beneficial or harmful, but a proper discrimination between the two classes; a discrimination to be exercised always with a special care for the interests of the homesteader and the small stockman.

He referred to the opposition to the proposed measure as coming from those "who have already obtained control of great areas of the public land largely through the ownership or leasing of water at what might be called the strategic points of the range, and who object to the proposed law for the very reason that it is in the interest of the actual homesteader and the small stockman, and because it will break the control that these few big men now have over the lands which they do not actually own."

In a message to Congress during the first session of the Sixtieth Congress, December 2, 1907, President Roosevelt again took up the matter of the revision of the public-land laws. He said:

The land-law system which was designed to meet the needs of the fertile and well-watered regions of the Middle West has largely broken down when applied to the drier regions of the Great Plains, the mountains, and much of the Pacific slope, where a farm of 160 acres is inadequate for self-support. In these regions the system lent itself to fraud, and much land passed out of the hands of the Government without passing into the hands of the home maker.

Alluding to the appointment of a Public Lands Commission three years before, he urged that their recommendations are sound and that "they are especially in the interest of the actual home maker; and where the small home maker can not at present utilize the land they provide that the Government shall keep control of it so that it may not be monopolized by a few men. The Congress has not yet acted upon these recommendations."

He again referred to the necessity of grazing control, as follows:

The existing fences are all illegal. Some of them represent the improper exclusion of actual settlers, actual home makers, from territory which is usurped by great cattle companies. Some of them represent what is in itself a proper effort to use the range for those upon the land, and to prevent its use by nomadic outsiders. All these fences, those that are hurtful and those that are beneficial, are alike illegal and must come down. But it is an outrage that the law should necessitate such action on the part of the administration. The unlawful fencing of public lands for private grazing must be stopped, but the necessity which occasioned it must be provided for. The Federal Government should have control of the range, whether by permit or lease, as local necessities may determine. Such control could secure the great benefit of legitimate fencing, while at the same time securing and promoting the settlement of the country.

Again, in a message of January 22, 1909, transmitting the report of the National Conservation Commission, President Roosevelt said:

The remaining public lands should be classified and the arable land disposed of to home makers. In their interest the timber and stone act and the commutation clause of the homestead act should be repealed and the desert-land laws should be modified in accordance with the recommendations of the Public Lands Commission.

The use of the public grazing lands should be regulated in such ways as to improve and conserve their value.

Rights to the surface of public lands should be separate from rights to forests upon it and to minerals beneath it, and these should be subject to separate disposal.

The coal, oil, gas, and phosphate rights still remaining with the Government should be withdrawn from entry and leased under conditions favorable for economical development.

PRESIDENT TAFT.

President Taft, in his message of December 6, 1910, made specific recommendations to the effect that the coal deposits should be leased, in measures not exceeding 2,500 acres, for 50 years, with a minimum rental or royalty, to be readjusted every 10 or 12 years, and with conditions preventing combinations tending to monopoly.

He made similar recommendations regarding phosphate and oil lands and water-power sites. As to water-power sites, his view was that they should be either directly leased by the Federal Government or turned over to the States, to be leased by them upon terms that would prevent monopolistic combination and secure reasonable rates. He said:

Either of these methods would, I think, accomplish the proper public purpose in respect to water-power sites; but one or the other should be promptly adopted.

So much importance did the President attach to the conservation policy that he annexed to his message his address to the National Conservation Congress, an address which was absolutely in harmony with the general conservation policy.

ALASKAN RAILROADS.

As to the railroads in Alaska, President Taft in his message said:

I have been asked to recommend that the credit of the Government be extended to aid the construction of railroads in Alaska. I am not ready now to do so. A great many millions of dollars have already been expended in the construction of at least two railroads, and if laws be passed providing for the proper development of the resources of Alaska, especially for the opening up of the coal lands, I believe that the capital already invested will induce the investment of more capital, sufficient to complete the railroads building and to furnish cheap coal not only to Alaska, but to the whole Pacific coast. The passage of a law permitting the leasing of Government coal lands in Alaska after public competition, and the appointment of a commission for the government of the Territory, with enabling powers to meet the local needs, will lead to an improvement in Alaska and the development of her resources that is likely to surprise the country.

It will thus be observed that President Taft is substantially in line with Mr. Roosevelt in urging immediate legislation embodying the conservation policies.

REPORTS OF SECRETARIES OF THE INTERIOR.

HITCHCOCK.

Mr. Hitchcock, in his report for the year ending June 30, 1905, urged the adoption of the recommendations of the Public Lands Commission.

And in his report for the year ending June 30, 1906, after urging the revision of the land laws, and that the opportunities afforded for a fraudulent acquisition of public lands should be removed by the repeal or modification of objectionable legislation, Mr. Hitchcock stated that until then—the Government may expect to expend its money and energy in apprehending and convicting those seeking to defraud it out of its public lands.

GARFIELD.

In his report for the year ending June 30, 1907, Mr. Garfield said:

It is gratifying to notice that there is a growing sentiment in favor of the enforcement of the land laws. Until quite recently evasion of the public-land laws was not uncommon, and in many localities, due both to public sentiment and to the indifference on the part of the Federal officers, many thousands of acres were acquired contrary to law. * * *

The great majority of the citizens of the West now recognize that the resources of land, timber, water, fuel, and forage are not inexhaustible, and that the waste or misuse of those resources must be stopped. * * *

The difficulty the department encounters in the enforcement of laws is that in some instances the laws themselves are not applicable to existing conditions. This difficulty arises especially in connection with the laws affecting coal lands, timber and stone lands, and use of the public range.

After urging the separation of the surface from the coal and the leasing of the latter, and alluding to the beneficial experience of Australia in this particular, Mr. Garfield said:

The use of the Alaska coal is of the utmost importance. The millions of tons there should not be given away simply because they are not now accessible. Within a few years systems of transportation will bring that coal to our furnaces, ships, and locomotives.

It is our duty to so guard those deposits of national wealth as to prevent the consumer from paying an unduly high price when finally they are brought to market. We should not yield to the specious claim that these lands must be given away now in order to develop Alaska. Honest development will come as rapidly as the public need demands. * * *

It is to be hoped that Congress will undertake a careful revision of the land laws. The reports of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and of the Public Lands Commission afford the information necessary upon which to base much-needed legislation.

Mr. Garfield, in his report for the year ending June 30, 1908, said:

Conservation means not only preservation of our resources, but, as well, their wise and immediate use and the prevention of their misuse, whether by way of waste or monopolistic and speculative control.

In this report Mr. Garfield laid down the doctrine of stewardship regarding the public lands as follows:

This stewardship duty of the Executive is most concretely manifest in the care of the specific property known as the public lands and their resources. From the earliest days the Executive has found it necessary in the public interest to take action concerning the public lands by withdrawing areas from entry. There was no specific provision of law for many of those withdrawals, and yet they were made unhesitatingly by the Executive as steward and were approved by Congress in acts granting land for the purpose for which it was withdrawn. These were purely the acts of stewards farsighted enough to foresee and protect the interests of their principal, the people of the United States.

It was this stewardship doctrine which Mr. Ballinger opposed, and his restoration of vast areas to entry would have resulted in the waste of the public domain had it not been that he was checked by President Taft, and that later ample legislation upon the subject was adopted.

BALLINGER.

Whilst it is claimed that the action of Secretary Ballinger was in opposition to the administration of his predecessors, no trace of opposition to the conservation policy can be found in his public reports, for in his report of November 10, 1909, he said:

The liberal and rapid disposition of the public lands under these statutes and the lax methods of administration which for a long time prevailed naturally provoked the feeling that the public domain was legitimate prey for the unscrupulous and that it was no crime to violate or circumvent the land laws. It is to be regretted that we, as a Nation, were so tardy to realize the importance of preventing so large a measure of our natural resources passing into the hands of land pirates and speculators, with no view to development looking to the national welfare. It may be safely said that millions of acres of timber and other lands have been unlawfully obtained, and it is also true that actions to recover such lands have in most instances long since been barred by the statute of limitations. * * *

In this present policy of conserving the natural resources of the public domain, while development is the keynote, the best thought of the day is not that development shall be by national agencies, but that wise utilization shall be secured through private enterprise under national supervision and control. Therefore, if material progress is to be made in securing the best use of our remaining public lands, Congress must be called upon to enact remedial legislation.

Mr. Ballinger then recommended classification and new legislation providing for the separation of the coal, oil, and gas deposits from the surface and for a leasing system under reasonable regulations.

He also urged the classification of all lands useful for water-power development, the reservation of the title in the Federal Government, and the grant only of an easement upon conditions favorable to the public.

In Mr. Ballinger's report, dated December 1, 1910, he said in regard to coal lands and water-power sites:

COAL LANDS.

Respecting the disposition of coal in the public lands, I call attention to what was said on this subject in my last annual report, to the effect that new legislation was desirable and that the most advantageous method of disposal of coal deposits will be found in a measure authorizing the lease or sale thereof, subject to forfeiture for failure to exercise the rights granted, with restrictions on mining operations in order to conserve the deposit as a public utility. * * *

I consider it highly important that Congress take action in giving the department an effective method of disposition of coal lands and deposits, especially in Alaska. The question of whether it should be by a sale of the deposit, or through a leasing method, is one to be determined by Congress. In Alaska it is possible that a leasing system could be adapted to the country with great efficiency and with less complication than in the States. * * *

I am in favor of a general leasing system of oil and gas bearing lands, such a system as will promote legitimate development of this industry, prevent monopoly, and conserve one of the great natural resources of the country. * * *

WATER POWER.

In the various public-land States and Territories containing water-power resources, in so far as there is present market for those powers, the title to areas greater in extent than that remaining in the Government has long since passed into private ownership, and it must be realized that any radical or burdensome restriction imposed by the Federal Government upon this resource will operate as a servitude on the public lands and discourage their development and use. In my last annual report, in order to meet the emergency for a special method of administering this character of the public lands, and in order to retain the ultimate control thereof in the public, it was recommended that supervision be exercised through a leasing system. During the last session of Congress a bill was introduced "authorizing the President to withdraw from all forms of settlement, entry, or other disposition any lands which are or may become chiefly valuable for the development of water power, and providing for the acquisition by any State or Territory, under certain conditions, of any lands so withdrawn, and for other purposes."

The object of this bill is to transfer these sites to the States under limitations which would compel the States to retain title thereto and to secure and supervise their hydroelectrical development in behalf of the public. The bill provides for Federal enforcement of compliance by the States with the terms, conditions, and limitations of the grant by stipulating for a reversion of the lands to the Federal Government upon the failure by the States to comply therewith.

Taking into consideration the fact that the States own the waters in the streams and have police power to supervise and control public utilities, it would seem a direct and effective method of control would be accomplished by conveying the power sites in trust to the States in some such manner as proposed by this bill.

I earnestly advise the adoption of some legislation which will in any event retain the fee title to the lands in the people and effectually vest the power of regulation and control in the State or in the Federal Government, and which will not result in limiting prompt and economical development or permit monopolization or extortion.

THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE LAND OFFICE.

The reports of Mr. Richards for the year 1906, of Mr. Ballinger for the year 1907, and of Mr. Dennett for the years 1908, 1909, and subsequent years all are in harmony with the conservation policy as laid down by Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Hitchcock, and Mr. Garfield; and whilst much criticism has been made of the actions, views, and real purposes of both Mr. Ballinger and Mr. Dennett, no utterance in contradiction of the conservation policy can be found in any of their reports.

THE PUBLIC LANDS COMMISSION.

President Roosevelt on the 22d day of October, 1903, appointed a commission consisting of Mr. Richards, the Land Commissioner; Mr. Pinchot, the Forester; and Mr. Newell, the Director of the Reclamation Service, to report upon the present land laws and to recommend changes. This commission made, first, a partial report on March 7, 1904, and a second partial report in November, 1905, after which time they were legislated out of existence through the action of Congress in ending all the commissions organized by President Roosevelt for the purpose of aiding him in his power of recommendation.

ANTIQUATED LAND LAWS.

Under the head of "Antiquated land laws," the Land Commission found that "the present land laws do not fit the conditions of the remaining public lands."

The reports of this commission constitute the basis of the conservation policy, and cover:

First. The preservation of the public domain for home seekers.

Second. The conservation of the forests and the sale of stumpage instead of the surface.

Third. The organization of a system of grazing control with a view to the protection and development of the grazing, the protection of the weak against the strong grazers, and the fencing of the public domain where necessary, with a proper regard for the rights of settlers.

Fourth. The separation of the coal and oil deposits from the surface, with a view to the utilization of the surface for agricultural purposes and the development of the coal and oil under a leasing system which, whilst securing proper development, would prevent an oppressive monopoly.

CONFERENCE OF GOVERNORS AT THE WHITE HOUSE.

In May, 1908, President Roosevelt called the governors of the States in conference at the White House, with a view to considering measures relating to the conservation of the natural resources of the country. It was largely attended, the proceedings were harmonious, and the action unanimous.

This conference declared, in part, as follows:

We declare our firm conviction that this conservation of our natural resources is a subject of transcendent importance, which should engage unremittingly the attention of the Nation, the States, and the people in earnest cooperation. These natural resources include the land on which we live and which yields our food; the living waters which fertilize the soil, supply power, and form great avenues of commerce; the forests which yield the materials for our homes, prevent erosion of the soil, and conserve the navigation and other uses of the streams; and the minerals which form the basis of our industrial life and supply us with heat, light, and power.

We agree that the land should be so used that erosion and soil wash shall cease, and that there should be reclamation of arid and semiarid regions by means of irrigation and of swamp and overflowed regions by means of drainage; that the waters should be so conserved and used as to promote navigation, to enable the arid regions to be reclaimed by irrigation, and to develop power in the interests of the people; that the forests which regulate our rivers, support our industries, and promote the fertility and productiveness of the soil should be preserved and perpetuated; that the minerals found so abundantly beneath the surface should be so used as to prolong their utility; that the beauty, healthfulness, and habitability of our country should be preserved and increased; that sources of national wealth exist for the benefit of the people, and that monopoly thereof should not be tolerated.

The conference decided also for cooperation of the Nation with the States, as follows:

We agree that further action is advisable to ascertain the present condition of our natural resources and to promote the conservation of the same; and to that end we recommend the appointment by each State of a commission on the conservation of natural resources, to cooperate with each other and with any similar commission of the Federal Government.

THE NATIONAL CONSERVATION COMMISSION.

The National Conservation Commission, appointed by President Roosevelt and composed of many of the most distinguished men from all parts of the country, also held a meeting at Washington and unqualifiedly indorsed the conservation policy in the following words:

Good business sense demands that a definite land policy be formulated. The National Conservation Commission believes that the following will serve as a basis therefor:

1. Every part of the public lands should be devoted to the use which will best subserve the interests of the whole people.
2. The classification of all public lands is necessary for their administration in the interests of the people.
3. The timber, the minerals, and the surface of the public lands should be disposed of separately.
4. Public lands more valuable for conserving water supply, timber, and natural beauties or wonders than for agriculture should be held for the use of the people from all except mineral entry.
5. Title to the surface of the remaining nonmineral public lands should be granted only to actual home makers.
6. Pending the transfer of title to the remaining public lands they should be administered by the Government, and their use should be allowed in a way to prevent or control waste and monopoly.

The present public-land laws as a whole do not subserve the best interests of the Nation. They should be modified so far as may be required to bring them into conformity with the foregoing outline of policy.

We thus find that during the past eight years there has been a continuous expression of two Presidents, of three Secretaries of the Interior, of three Commissioners of the Land Office, of the Land Commission, of the Governors' Conference, and of the National Conservation Commission, all in favor of western development through wise legislation intended to promote the development of the West by private enterprise, and at the same time to protect that development against monopolistic control.

DECLARATIONS OF PARTY PLATFORMS.

Both parties have recognized this public opinion, the Republican Party by the following expression:

We indorse the movement inaugurated by the administration for the conservation of the natural resources. We approve of measures to prevent the waste of timber. We commend the work now going on for the reclamation of arid lands, and reaffirm the Republican policy of the free distribution of the available areas of the public domain to the landless settler. No obligation of the future is more insistent and none will result in greater blessings to posterity.

And the Democratic Party by an utterance even more clear and distinct, as follows:

We repeat the demand for internal development and for the conservation of our natural resources contained in previous platforms, the enforcement of which Mr. Roosevelt has vainly sought from a reluctant party; and to that end we insist upon the preservation, protection, and replacement of needed forests, the preservation of the public domain for home seekers, the protection of the natural resources in timber, coal, iron, and oil against monopolistic control, the development of our waterways for navigation and every other useful purpose, including the irrigation of arid lands, the reclamation of swamp lands, the clarification of streams, the development of water power, and the preservation of electric power generated by this natural force from the control of monopoly; and to such end we urge the exercise of all powers, national, State, and municipal, both separately and in cooperation.

Congress is to-day ready to pass measures upon these subjects, and yet practically nothing has been done beyond the authority to the President to withdraw public lands pending the action of Congress. The fault, therefore, lies with the Public Lands Committee, which thus far has not been able to settle the contest between the two contending lines of thought to which I have referred, namely, one that the public domain should be turned over, practically without conditions, to private interests for development, and the other that the surface of the land should be preserved for the home seekers, and that the natural resources in timber, coal, oil, phosphates, and in water power should be turned over to private enterprise for development under restrictions that will compel reasonable prices and prevent monopolistic control.

The time is now near at hand when if the Public Lands Committee does not make specific reports upon measures affecting these questions it will be necessary for the Senate to take them up by direct action through an instruction to the Public Lands Committee to report, either with or without recommendation, and thus allowing the entire subject to be considered in the open Senate.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF ALASKA.

We all know that Alaska is not being developed as it should be, and the friends of conservation are charged with delaying its development. What do the friends of conservation demand regarding Alaska? Not that its resources should be locked up. On the contrary, they insist that they should be opened up and developed. They simply protest against the archaic land laws which prevent the development of her natural resources and insist upon legislation that will secure such development.

This question must be considered in the large. It involves the question of harbors, the question of railroads from these harbors to the Yukon River with a view to the transportation of coal, copper, and other minerals, as well as of supplies; and it involves also laws which will permit the acquisition, either under grant or lease, of sufficient coal land and land containing other minerals to warrant their development.

It has been impossible in Alaska, under existing law, to get together enough coal land in private ownership or under private control to warrant its development and the construction of the transportation system necessary for it. The result has been that in order to meet the economic requirements of the situation men have been compelled to evade the land laws in order to get possession and control of a sufficient area of land to warrant its development, hence these frauds upon the land laws, which arose out of economic necessity, but which have been the result of unwise and improvident laws.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is the Senator aware that, under the existing law, 16 claims of 160 acres each can be consolidated? And does the Senator, in view of that condition of the law, claim that that is not a sufficient amount of coal land to justify development? Under the law of 1908 something like 2,560 acres may be combined under one ownership. Of course the law prohibits a combination in the entry of the claims in the first instance, but it allows, after title has been secured, the combining of as many as 16 claims.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am aware that the rigidity of the old land laws with reference to coal lands has been somewhat relaxed by recent legislation, but, in my judgment, not sufficiently relaxed. I do not believe that the combination of 16 claims of 160 acres each of coal land in many of the regions of this country will warrant a company in incurring the great expense connected with opening up and developing such lands, and the provision which guards against combination before entry is obstructive of the organization, the capitalization, and the unity of purpose necessary to a great enterprise. It may in some exceptional cases, but I do not believe it would in Alaska, for there it is necessary to construct a railroad under conditions of exceptional difficulty, there being but two passes through which such a railroad can be constructed, accompanied by engineering difficulties which make the cost one of colossal proportions. So satisfied am I that the proper development of Alaska can not be secured without the proper development of a transportation system that, whilst I am as a general proposition opposed to Government ownership and construction of railroad systems, I would think that the exigency of the situation and the development of Alaska warrants the construction of a railroad from the coast to the Yukon River by the National Government, with a view to equality of opportunity to all who seek to develop the mineral resources of that region. I would enter upon that work just as willingly as the Government enters to-day upon the construction of a wagon road in that Territory, or as it has been engaged for years in the construction of telegraph lines in that Territory; for we all know that the United States Government has constructed and is now operating through the Signal Corps of the Army a large mileage of telegraph lines in the Territory of Alaska.

Having thus secured proper transportation, we would then present the proper opportunity for the development of that region by the brain and the energy and the enterprise of Americans; but even then it will be necessary for us to shape laws that will meet the economic requirements of that country, that will enable a sufficient area of land to be secured by one control to permit of full and economical development, accompanied by provisions that will prevent injurious monopolies.

Such measures have been presented in the shape of provisions for leases and provisions for royalty, which would retain in the United States the ultimate control of these natural resources, in order to prevent extortion and monopoly and at the same time encourage private enterprise. These is no difficulty whatever in the situation if the Senate and the House of Representatives will meet the situation in the spirit that animates the American people upon this subject. Public opinion has been made up. You find it expressed in party platforms everywhere; you find it expressed in the meetings of commercial congresses, of irrigation congresses, of water congresses throughout the country, and you hardly hear an expression to the contrary. This is an illustration of the apathy and inertia of Congress, in its legislation always far behind public opinion, so chained by tradition and precedent and courtesy and committee tyranny that the people are unable to obtain the legislation which they desire and in favor of which they have expressed their demand.

PROGRESSIVE LEGISLATION NEEDED.

Mr. President, in the legislative program which I presented at the commencement of the extra session I called for immediate consideration, among other things, of legislation relating to the conservation policy. We have been in session for four months, the Public Lands Committee has been practically unemployed during that entire period, and there is no reason why this subject should not have been taken up and disposed of.

It is true that during the present session the Senate has disposed of six of the questions with reference to which action was called for by the program to which I have referred, namely, the reciprocity treaty, the free list, the reduction of excessive duties in the wool, cotton, and steel schedules, the publicity of campaign expenditures, the popular election of United States Senators, and the admission of Arizona and New Mexico.

I trust that the remaining questions called for by this program, relating to the physical valuation of railroads, the creation of an interstate trade commission, the protection of bank depositors and the prevention of bank panics, the cooperation of the Nation with the States in river regulation, the construction of an auxiliary navy, and the protection of our natural resources in timber, coal, iron, and oil against monopolistic control, will be taken up early in the regular session and placed by a distinct legislative program on the road to final legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] to the amendment of the committee, which the Secretary will again state.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Chamberlain," in line 2, it is proposed to insert "Bellefourche."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move to amend the bill by inserting, after the word "Wyoming," the words "in the former Spokane Indian Reservation in the State of Washington."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Wyoming," it is proposed to insert the words "in the former Spokane Indian Reservation in the State of Washington."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move to insert the word "Minot," so that that district in North Dakota will be included.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Dickinson," it is proposed to insert the word "Minot."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRONNA. I move to insert the word "Williston."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Minot," it is proposed to insert the word "Williston."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC LANDS FOR COLORADO.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 34) providing for additional lands for Colorado under the provisions of the Carey Act, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 110) thereon. As it is a short measure, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I had given notice yesterday that I would object to the consideration of matters of this kind. I do not want to be discourteous at all, but I should like an opportunity to bring up the resolution to which I referred yesterday, if it can be done at this morning's session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio object to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. The joint resolution is a very short one, and I trust the Senator will withhold his objection. It is not new legislation, and I do not think it will lead to any discussion.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask whether it will take much time?

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. But a few minutes, I hope. If it should lead to discussion, I will withdraw it.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It provides that an additional 1,000,000 acres of arid lands within the State of Colorado be made available and subject to the terms of section 4 of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," approved August 18, 1894, and by amendments thereto, and that the State of Colorado be allowed, under the provisions of those acts, the additional area, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purposes and under the provisions of those acts.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EX-SOLDIERS IN EMPLOY OF SENATE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which the Secretary will state.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 111), submitted by Mr. POINDEXTER on the 24th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate resolution 72, of July 14, 1911, be amended by inserting after the word "War," in the fourth line thereof, the words "and the War with Spain."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

THE STANDARD OIL AND THE AMERICAN TOBACCO COS.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to call up Senate concurrent resolution No. 4.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. Table Calendar No. 8, Senate concurrent resolution No. 4, a resolution instructing the Attorney General of the United States to prosecute the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, some days ago I discussed at some length my reasons for presenting this resolution. Briefly, it recites the substance of the decisions of the Supreme Court in the case against the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co., and recites the fact that they were found to have violated sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman antitrust law.

The resolution further recites that, if this be true, they are amenable to the penalties provided under criminal prosecution. The resolution further recites that no criminal prosecutions have been begun, declares it to be the sense of the Senate that criminal prosecutions should be begun, and instructs the Attorney General to begin them where the evidence may justify.

I should not have introduced this resolution if I had not felt that for many years—in fact, ever since the enactment of the Sherman antitrust law—the Standard Oil Co. had been persistently and continuously violating the sections of the statute referred to. The same may be said of the American Tobacco Co. ever since its first organization.

The Standard Oil Co., by a formal decree of the supreme court of the State of Ohio in 1897, was found to have violated the common law of the land, and was then operating under a trust agreement which was in violation of the common law and in violation of the powers which had been conferred upon the Standard Oil Co. by the franchise which had been given it by the State of Ohio.

Mr. President, if it were not for the fact that the highest court of the land had made a finding based on the overwhelming weight of the testimony which was submitted to it in the records in these two cases, I would not have presumed to have offered this resolution.

But what course is open to the authorities when the Supreme Court says that by the overwhelming weight of the testimony these criminal sections of the statute have been violated? What justification can there be on behalf of the Department of Justice for not beginning these prosecutions? I am not here to find fault with what that department has done in so far as the civil prosecutions are concerned. The department is entitled to all credit in that behalf. But the American people do not understand, they can not understand, why there should be no criminal prosecutions against these defendants, while the department is vigilant in the prosecutions of minor cases.

Mr. President, in order that we may have a slight view of the methods which have been resorted to, I am going to ask the indulgence of the Senate while I read extracts from a letter on this very subject that came to me on Monday from a man whose name I am not now at liberty to give, but whom I have known for at least 10 years as an honorable business man. He says:

> Permit me to give you some pointers of the criminal character of the American Tobacco Co. I am personally 40 years in the tobacco business.

Then he speaks of his firm having to dissolve "12 years ago, after establishing itself to a high credit mark of $100,000."

> Twenty-four other firms here went under during the same time. Some were driven to suicide, some to insane asylums; some went finally to their graves broken hearted, and most of them went through bankruptcy. From the 24 firms which were here in the year 1880 there is not one left.

He afterwards reorganized his firm and worked up a very successful business, "and kept 500 hands steadily busy—

> But the trust came here, started temporary factories, imitated our best salable brands, and ruined our business to a standstill. They took our traveling men from us and picked up our trade with all criminal inducements, until we had to go into liquidation. I am now of an advanced age, with a high cultured and educated family on my hands, hardly able to cope with present conditions."

I do not know what excuse can be made for a failure to prosecute criminals who have been conducting their business under these methods.

It has been hinted that there is no precedent for action of this character by the Senate or by the House. I need only refer on this phase of the case to a resolution which was passed by the Senate and House April 30, 1908, known as Senate resolution No. 48, entitled "A joint resolution instructing the Attorney General to institute certain suits, and so forth." I read just the first portion of the resolution:

> Resolved, etc., That the Attorney General of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to institute and prosecute any and all suits in equity, actions at law, and other proceedings which he may deem adequate and appropriate to enforce any and all rights and remedies of the United States of America in any manner arising or growing out of or pertaining to either or any of the following-described acts of Congress.

Mr. President, what objection can there be to this? Daily we are passing statutes requiring certain duties of the executive department and of the judiciary department. It is not contended for one minute that this resolution shall have the force and effect of law. Its force is rather of a moral character. It seems to me that there ought not to be any objection, even technical, on the part of the Department of Justice to the consideration of the resolution. If it is right, it ought to be adopted; if it is wrong, it ought to be defeated.

In one of the most learned discussions of constitutional law which has taken place in this body in many years—I refer to the discussion of the interstate-commerce law of, perhaps, five or six years ago—the question arose whether Congress had the right to restrict the authority of the courts to grant injunctions in matters which had been passed upon by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and after a very learned discussion it was concluded that that power did prevail. It seems to me that it only requires that we pause for a moment and the correctness of that position will be at once recognized. The power to create implies the power to destroy and also the power to put limitations upon the authority which a court may exercise.

The law was passed, providing, in part, the conditions upon which injunctions should be granted in cases involving the acts of the Interstate Commerce Commission. By the statute which was then passed the power to regulate and control the courts in certain matters was recognized. If, then, the power be recognized to control or to regulate the terms and conditions upon which an injunction may be granted by the court, pray tell me why we can not direct action by an official of the executive department who is at the same time an official in the Department of Justice?

Mr. President, it is my desire that this resolution shall either be adopted or that it shall be defeated. I have understood that an effort would be made to have it referred. If there was any question about the facts in this case, that course might be proper. If there was any question as to the law in the case, that course might be proper. But it does seem to me, in the face of the adjudications of these matters in the civil cases, there ought not to be any question in the mind of Senators.

I realize that I have pretty positive convictions upon this subject, but it appears to me that there ought not to be in this Government one rule to control one class of citizens and another rule for another class.

I therefore ask that the resolution be placed before the Senate for passage.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, notwithstanding the argument of the Senator from Ohio, I myself have doubts not only as to the propriety but as to the authority of Congress by resolution to direct specific action by the executive department. The Senator from Ohio cites a case where the Congress of the United States sought to point out the procedure as to injunctions. The Senator, of course, would not follow that up to the conclusion which he reaches in this case; that is, he would not contend for a moment that the Congress of the United States should indicate to the courts whether an injunction should be granted or whether it should not.

Because of my views upon this matter, Mr. President, I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum in view of that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Clark, Wyo.	McCumber	Reed
Bankhead	Crane	Martin, Va.	Root
Borah	Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Shively
Bourne	Cummins	Myers	Smith, Mich.

Mr. BRYAN. My colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is absent on business of the Senate.

Mr. TAYLOR. My colleague [Mr. LEA] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. CHILTON. My colleague [Mr. WATSON] is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM] in attendance upon the Lorimer investigating committee. I make the announcement for the day.

I was also requested to announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON] is in attendance on the Lorimer investigating committee, and will be absent during the day.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to make the same announcement as that just made, in reference to my colleague [Mr. JONES], who is in attendance on the Lorimer investigation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to refer the resolution under consideration to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before voting upon this resolution, I desire to say a word in explanation of my vote and the measure. Being a member of the Judiciary Committee, I would naturally, I presume, be expected to support a motion sending it to the Judiciary Committee.

It was suggested a few days ago, when this matter was up for discussion, that the resolution might be construed as a criticism or reflection upon the Department of Justice. I do not see why the resolution should be so construed. I do not myself vote for it with that idea in mind, but for another reason.

I am aware that it is difficult sometimes and technically objectionable for a legislative body to instruct an executive officer with reference to this class of duties, and that it is difficult to know precisely when such instruction should be given. But I support the resolution, Mr. President, because it suggests a policy, in my judgment, upon the part of the Government and outlines and suggests the position of Congress with reference to that policy. Technically the resolution is objectionable, but I am not willing on account of this technicality to forego an opportunity to declare a policy.

I do not believe that we have ever derived any practical benefit, so far as the masses of the people are concerned, from any of the prosecutions which have been had under the Sherman antitrust law. I say that not from a partisan standpoint, as in my judgment the declaration covers the period covered by the administrations of the two different political parties. We have had lawsuits which as lawsuits have been well conducted and eminently successful, and I presume that, so far as that feature of the matter is concerned, no one would feel like criticizing the action of the department. But outside of the success of the lawsuit as a lawsuit, as a scholastic proposition to determine and settle some particular construction of the statute, it would be very difficult for anyone to determine what real benefit has been derived from these lawsuits to the masses of American people and what has been accomplished in the way of controlling or circumscribing the power of the corporations or combines which we have been prosecuting.

What substantial measure of benefit has been derived thus far by reason of any action upon the part of the Government under the Sherman law? If we go back to the first litigation, which was had some 18 years ago, when the statute was first construed under the Trans-Missouri freight cases and the joint traffic freight cases, we find that, while the Government was successful in its contention before the courts, undoubtedly the precise thing which the parties in interest sought to accomplish was accomplished after the decisions were rendered.

Take the Northern Securities case. I presume it would be admitted from a legal standpoint that those who were desirous of forming the Northern Securities Co. and operating the two or three railroads through that company which they desired thus to operate, accomplished what they desired to accomplish, so far as making charges for freights and the cost of transportation were concerned, in another way.

Mr. President, it has been about 20 years since the enactment of the Sherman law. It was enacted for the purpose of preventing these large combines and trusts and for the purpose of controlling, to some extent, from a national standpoint, contracts and monopolies which would affect interstate trade. The law when it was enacted provided four simple, specific, and complete remedies or methods of procedure. First of all was the injunctive process, by which the Government was given authority to enjoin the formation of such a combine as would be supposed or threatened to be in restraint of trade or a monopoly. The second remedy was that of criminal prosecution for forming or maintaining these combines. The third was the seizure of property in transit; and the fourth was the dissolution of the combine or the monopoly under a decree.

These four simple, specific, direct, and complete remedies were placed in the law 20 years ago. The Government was given unlimited power to check the formation of these monopolies and combines, to punish them after they were found to be in existence, to seize their property when found in the channels of interstate trade, and to dissolve them when it could have the facts with which to proceed.

As I said, it was some 20 years ago when this law with these drastic remedies was placed upon the statute book; and yet, Mr. President, everyone knows that the last 20 years, which have marked the period that this law was upon the statute book have been in the 20 years in which the most remarkable progress has been made by these combinations, in which they have pushed out further than ever before and exercised their jurisdiction in more marvelous ways than ever conceived of before, and not an embarrassment, so far as their ultimate success was concerned, has been placed upon them, although this simple, effective, and drastic law has been upon the statute book during all that time.

We have, in other words, not even restrained the process of formation, and one of the most effective methods found in the law has been practically ignored. Everyone will remember when one of the greatest combinations that we know to exist, exercising a greater jurisdiction in the industrial and financial world than any other corporation or combine in the world, before it was formed advertised in the newspapers for weeks and months ahead that it was going to be formed, and the details to a remarkable extent were given. It was known before the corporation charter was filed and the combines were made that this powerful combination with $700,000,000 of watered stock, supported by the most marvelous banking combine in the world, was going into existence with this law prohibiting it and giving the Government the power to restrain its formation. Notwithstanding the fact that this information was at hand and the remedy known and provided for, notwithstanding the details of the facts to a remarkable extent were laid before the people, the means which were provided for under the law of enjoining its formation were not invoked, and the statute was permitted to remain a dead letter during the time of the formation of this corporation, which has now apparently passed beyond the control of the Government of the United States. A corporation or those promoting it notifies the people in defiance of the law that it would be formed, as to how it would be formed, the extent of its power, has proceeded in the face of the statute, and to-day exercises a most marvelous power in the financial world, in the political world, and in the industrial world, and, if I mistake not, places the stamp of approval or of disapproval upon many an act of legislation in the Congress of the United States. While you are stripping the farm and the farmer the steel schedule remains untouched and sacred.

Either the Sherman law is a failure, wrong in contemplation of law and inexpedient as an economic proposition, or there has been the most remarkable trifling with the execution of the law that has ever been noted since law was placed upon the statute books to be regarded and obeyed by man. What is the result? Some have been of late criticizing the decision of the Supreme Court in the Standard Oil and the Tobacco cases. Mr. President, let us put aside for a moment the question of whether or not the Supreme Court read into the statute a word not placed there by Congress when it said that only "unreasonable restraint" could be inhibited or prohibited or punished; let us put aside the technical proposition as to the construction of the statute and view this statute as it is now construed, with the power under it which the court concedes to be there; and are we ready as a Congress, as a Government, to say that all contracts, monopolies, or combines in unreasonable restraint of trade shall be punished, prohibited, dissolved? In other words, are we prepared to say that the construction of the statute as established—although there might be a controversy as to the proper construction—are we prepared to say, as a Government, that thus, as it is construed, it shall be enforced?

I think it the bounden duty of the Government to do one of two things: To test to the limit its capacity, its power, to enforce this statute or to take it off the staute books and begin to devise some other method to control these corporations. It is certain that for the 20 years it has been on the statute book they have prospered and thrived as they never before did. It has been either due to a deficiency of the law or to its inefficiency of enforcement.

I shall vote for this resolution, therefore, in order to suggest that the Government exhaust all remedies and all powers under this statute to see whether or not it can control or restrain or dissolve, not contracts or combinations in reasonable restraint of trade, but, as we have it now, contracts or combinations in unreasonable restraint of trade, about which there is no controversy among lawyers or laymen.

One of the difficulties which we encounter to-day in controlling these corporations arises from the long delay which we have experienced in enforcing the law. It is a most difficult thing to dissolve a powerful organization after it has extended its power and its influence, especially in a business way, to almost every channel of trade, without bringing on wreck and disaster, which we hesitate to bring on under any conditions or under any circumstances. When the Government, with full notice, watched the formation of the Steel Trust it was practically an approval of its acts.

For instance, what are we going to do, Mr. President, with the carrying into effect of the decree in the tobacco case? It presents a solution which would interest any legal mind, in my judgment, if it would undertake to delve down into that decree and ascertain how, as a practical proposition, we are going to execute that decree and execute it in a way to be of any benefit to the American people. The chief law officer of the Government—and in this I am not criticizing—says that that company will nevertheless be resolved into three or four or five corporations. Well, Mr. President, suppose the parent tobacco company were resolved into three or four corporations, what would be the difference, so far as the people are concerned, between the existence of one monopoly and four monopolies?

Mr. REED. All directed by one mind.

Mr. BORAH. I thank the Senator from Missouri. What would be the difference if one corporation had control of the cigarette business, another of the smoking-tobacco business, another of the chewing-tobacco business, and another of licorice, and they were all in existence? Who would make them compete or give to the American people any particle of benefit from the dissolution of one corporation into four? It would result, Mr. President, in precisely what happened after the Northern Securities case was decided. They would proceed to do in another way that which they were not permitted to do as a matter of convenience to them in the way which they first chose.

I do not know, I am not myself convinced, that the Sherman law will ever furnish a sufficient or an efficient remedy for this condition of affairs. In my humble judgment, we shall have to add to it to a remarkable extent in order to enable us to receive any benefit from the Sherman law. But one thing must be certain, Mr. President, and that is, if we proceed year after year to have these lawsuits and then just as soon as a decree of the court is entered we run up a white flag and say that the Government is not going to run amuck, which is an invitation for them to proceed, but to proceed with caution, to keep their head under the water, just so long as we pursue that course the Sherman law becomes an artificial piece of legalized hypocrisy behind which they are waging their depredations upon the American public.

We must either proceed to enjoin when we have notice of their formation and punish when we have notice of their existence, to confiscate their property when we find it in transit in violation of the law, to dissolve the corporations, to put them in the hands of receivers, and to wipe them out of existence, and not break them up like a joint snake, that they make come back after the enemy has left the scene, or else we are going to find that the Sherman antitrust law is a delusion and a snare.

I shall vote for this resolution, Mr. President, in order that the American Congress may declare its policy for a full and complete and efficient enforcement of every clause and provision of the Sherman antitrust law, and that, if we find it is necessary, we may set ourselves about in a reasonable length of time to provide an efficient and economical means by which to control these great combinations. Legitimate business is entitled not only to protection, but it is entitled to be relieved from the vague presumption now existing that all "large business" is criminal. On the other hand, if the law is not enforced universally against those who violate it, and enforced effectually, it is far better that we repeal the law and adopt some certain method of regulation which will enable legitimate business to proceed in confidence and certainty. If we have indeed passed from the age of competition to the age of regulation and control, which I am very much inclined to believe, let us prepare for it. Perhaps one of the methods of preparation is to test out all the remedies of the Sherman law to see what relief, if any, lies in that direction.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to add a word to what has been said by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. In nothing that I say do I wish to deal unjustly with any officer of the Government.

The Senator from Idaho has clearly expressed the absolute failure of any decision or of all the decisions of all of the courts to give any real relief from the exactions of the trusts. Their march has not been arrested, or even seriously interfered with. The Sherman antitrust act denounces as criminal certain acts. It provides pains and penalties, which, so far as fines are concerned, are largely within the discretion of the court. I know that any criticism of courts is naturally resented in this body and by the American people. I do not wish to place myself in the category with men who assail our judicial tribunals. I know that in the last analysis the court of justice is the temple of American liberty. I know the respect and the almost reverence in which the decisions of our courts should be held; and yet, Mr. President, we can not, as practical and sensible men, escape the knowledge and acknowledgment of the fact that courts, particularly in the application of punishment, are controlled in a large measure by the public conviction or opinion as to the enormity of the acts committed.

The judges of courts are but human beings. They are lawyers who have been selected from the bar. We like to believe that they are of the best class of lawyers, and frequently they are; but they are nevertheless simply men placed in high judicial position. I believe that it is our duty, representing the American people in this body, to express our views with reference to the enforcement of the Sherman law.

Mr. President, it is a singular thing that a man may steal a horse worth not more than $10, and in every State in this Union every court having jurisdiction is willing to send, and does send, the man proven guilty to the penitentiary for a term of years. You can go into the Federal courts of this land and see men who have bought $5 worth of copper pipe in order to set up in their own homes a miserable little still, out of which they produce "white mule" whisky that is not even a commercial article, lined up before the judge, and sentenced to imprisonment and the payment of heavy fines. You can see men who have used the mails for the purpose of perpetrating some fraud, out of which a few hundred or a few thousand dollars has been made, not only fined thousands of dollars, but also locked behind the walls of penitentiaries. You can observe men who have been bankers, and who have, in the stress and struggle and battle of great financial disaster, overreached the mark, believing that they would be able to weather the storm, likewise incarcerated behind prison walls. All this you can see.

The arm of the law is potential, and the hand of power is reached out to grasp the offender. But if a set of men organize a combination, if they do so in the face and teeth of the statute, if they deliberately employ lawyers and instruct them to construct a scheme so cunning as to baffle justice and escape detection, if they do all this with the letter of the law laid before them and with full knowledge of its import, if pursuant to their criminal purposes they gather into their coffers millions of dollars of profits, you can then in any Federal court behold the spectacle of that class of criminals being treated with a consideration which at once indicates they are regarded as composing a special and select variety of criminals. They are placed upon a basis of respectability which distinguishes them from ordinary breakers of the law.

Sir, I put this proposition before you and before Senators who are here: It has been solemnly adjudged that a corporation organized in restraint of trade has prosecuted its nefarious business for 20 long years; it has been condemned not only by one court but by many courts as an organized crime. Finally the day of judgment comes, and this record is solemnly written by the Supreme Court of the United States, first, that it is criminal; second, that it has been criminal for 20 years; third, that it was conceived in crime and brought forth in iniquity. Then the decree solemnly recites that You will have six months more in which to quit violating the law. A penalty is laid which is not a pittance of its profits for one month of time—that does not represent its unlawfully gained wealth for one day of its existence. How long will it take to stop combinations if you say to those who combine: Well and good, make your combination, and after you have made millions by violating the law, if you are so unfortunate as to be caught, we will fine you about one-tenth of 1 per cent of your profits and give you six months' time in which to evolve a new scheme of loot?

You do not deal with the ordinary criminal in that way; you do not deal with the ordinary violator of the law so generously. The trouble is, save one notable exception, the man has not yet held judicial office in the United States who has been able to look a thousand million dollars in the face and not flinch.

Let me read to you from this morning's paper. A lot of wealthy men got together and evolved a scheme of corporate loot. They did it with the statutes of the United States Government lying before them. They did it with eyes open and with ears well attuned to the truth. They made many thousands of dollars of profit—how much I can not say, although if it is possible to ascertain it, I intend to do so. They were finally, after a long period of profit-making, brought to the bar of justice.

Now, behold, this is heralded as a victory for the law. This is painted as a picture of splendid achievement. This is the result which we are told is at once a vindication of the law and the majesty and might of our courts. I read from the Washington Herald of this morning:

> Wire men fined for violations of Sherman Act; 37 indicted officials appear in court; 47 remain; other members of combine may fight their cases.

The headlines read well, Mr. President. They sound like a proclamation of victory, a declaration of the law's invicible force. But let us read on down:

> Thirty-seven of the 84 wire manufacturers and their employees who were indicted by the grand jury here on June 29 on the charge of combining in nine pools to the restraint of trade in the wire business entered pleas of nolo contender before Judge Archbold, in the criminal branch of the United States circuit court to-day, and were fined $1,000 each on the initial count and $100 on every additional count in the indictments.

The total amount of the fines imposed is $42,700, and of this sum $21,000 was paid to Commissioner Shields before he closed his office for the night.

Mr. President, I am not advised by this article what the aggregate capital of those concerns was, but I apprehend that it ran high into the millions. I am not advised as to the amount of profits that they had made, but it is a safe statement that their illegal profits had mounted to an enormous sum. Now, when they are detected, they are fined the miserable pittance of $1,000 each.

A man who deliberately conspired against the law, upon whom a fine of $1,000 would rest as lightly as a fine of 5 cents would rest upon the ordinary man, is let off with a fine of $1,000. A fine of $500 would be levied on the poor, ragged, half-educated fellow who made whisky illicitly; a penitentiary sentence would be visited upon the man who stole from a Government reservation a broncho worth $30; a term in the penitentiary would be imposed upon the banker who had hoped to float his concern, but who had failed, and had accepted a deposit of $10 when the institution was in a failing condition. But when nine great concerns combine to rob the American public, when with their eyes open to all the facts and with full knowledge of the law they make this combination to place in their pockets hundreds of thousands or even millions of dollars, the great penalty is laid of a fine of a thousand dollars apiece. I say, sirs, that as long as we enforce the law in that way we might as well have no law. If you will, say to the men who are willing to conspire to rob the public, "Well and good! Organize your conspiracy, pursue your unholy calling, levy your tribute in every home, thrust your dishonest hands into every pocket, take out millions, and in the end we will fine you a thousand dollars and soundly lecture you into the bargain." So long as you do that a fine amounts to no more than a license, a little tribute collected by the law, a little sop to popular discontent, a legal farce enacted to amuse the wise and satisfy the foolish.

Mr. President, I am for this resolution; and I am for putting some vitality and life into this law, and in that the Senate of the United Staes has its part to play.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am quite in sympathy with what was so forcibly said by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I believe thoroughly in the vigorous prosecution of cases of this kind, not only against the corporations, but against the individuals. Notwithstanding that fact, I am opposed to this resolution for two reasons.

In the first place, I am a firm believer in maintaining the independence of the several departments of the Government. Whether justly or unjustly, great complaint has been made of late of the encroachments of another department of this Government upon the affairs and business of this body. We ought to be consistent about matters of this kind. If we are complaining about the fact that some other department is interfering with the affairs of his body, we should be careful not to do the same thing ourselves with respect to other independent departments of the Government.

The power to prosecute these cases rests with the Department of Justice. The responsibility for their prosecution or non-prosecution rests with that branch of the Government. If the Senate of the United States proposes to interfere with these prosecutions, it ought at least to take upon itself the responsibility that it apparently assumes, but in fact does not assume, by this resolution. That is another objection I have to it, that the resolution itself is entirely ineffectual, as it is presented for consideration. The resolution provides—

First. That it is the sense of the Senate and of the House of Representatives that criminal prosecutions should be begun against any or all of said parties or persons who shall have, in the opinion of the Attorney General, violated the criminal provisions of said statute.

Now, one of two things must be true, Mr. President. We are either saying that the Department of Justice has violated its duty by failing to prosecute when the opinion on its part does exist that the law has been violated, or we are simply leaving the responsibility and the power just exactly where it is now, namely, in the opinion and judgment of the Attorney General. We are either attempting to interfere not only with the power but with the discretion and judgment of that department of the Government, or we are taking the responsibility of saying that the Department of Justice has violated its duty, and has failed to prosecute these cases when, in its opinion, the law has been violated.

For my part I should desire to do one of two things, either leave this power and responsibility where it is, or have the courage of our convictions and say that we believe these prosecutions should be instituted and carried on, and therefore give positive instructions that that thing should be done. We are not doing either the one or the other. We simply leave it, as I have said, to the opinion of the Attorney General as to whether these prosecutions shall be instituted or not.

The second part of the resolution is just as bad, if not worse. It is as follows:

Second. That the Attorney General of the United States be, and he is hereby, instructed to institute criminal prosecutions against said parties or persons for said violations—

If the resolution had stopped there, and if the Senate was willing to take the responsibility of ordering these prosecutions to be instituted, the resolution would be unobjectionable. But it goes on—if any, where the evidence, in the opinion of the Attorney General, shall justify such proceedings.

Just exactly the same criticism may be passed upon this resolution. It still leaves it to the judgment and discretion of the Attorney General, and simply says to him "if in your judgment these prosecutions should be commenced, then commence them."

It seems to me that if we are going to do anything about this matter, we should, at least, do something that would be effectual. If we are going to say that these prosecutions shall be instituted and carried on, let us say so and have the courage of our convictions. But it is idle to pass a resolution of this kind, which, in my judgment, means absolutely nothing.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I quite agree with everything which the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS] has so well said. When this Government of ours was divided into three distinct departments it was in order that the exercise of their respective functions might be independent of one another; and, to my mind, it is quite as unseemly for the Senate of the United States, or for the Congress of the United States, to undertake to direct the executive department of the Government to institute a particular prosecution as it would be for the Attorney General to send us a communication directing us to pass some particular law.

The executive department has no business, except in the way in which the Constitution itself provides, to instruct Congress as to its duty of legislation; and Congress has no business to instruct one of the other departments of the Government as to what it shall do, except in the manner pointed out by the Constitution.

When the Congress of the United States has passed a law denouncing certain acts as crimes, that itself constitutes a direction to the Attorney General and to the law officers of the Government to prosecute anybody and everybody who is guilty of violating the statute. That is the only way in which we can in a seemly and decent manner, as it seems to me, instruct the executive officers—by the statutes which we make. We have passed a statute declaring that when individuals or corporations have done certain acts they are guilty of criminal offenses, and that of itself is a direction to the Attorney General, whenever in his opinion anybody, any corporation, or any individual has violated the statute, to institute a prosecution.

Mr. President, either this resolution ought not to have been introduced and ought not to be passed or it should have been a far stronger resolution, and presented in another body. If the Attorney General has evidence and believes that individuals are violating the statutes of the United States, it is his sworn and solemn duty to bring prosecutions; and if he culpably fails to do it, the remedy is the institution of impeachment proceedings by the other House and a trial by this body.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator from Utah any doubt that these corporations have violated the law?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They have violated the law, certainly; and the Supreme Court has passed upon that question.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator any doubt from the decisions in the tobacco case that they violated the criminal provision of the statute?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Probably they have, but that, to my mind, is wholly aside from the question. I may have no doubt that some other individual has committed a crime. I may be quite certain that some individual has committed a murder, in violation of some statute of the United States, and still I would consider it an unseemly thing to introduce a resolution in Congress directing the Attorney General to institute a prosecution against that person for that crime.

Mr. BORAH. What I was trying to get at, by ascertaining the opinion of the Senator from Utah as to the violation of the law, was that we might indirectly arrive at the opinion of any reasonable man who might read that record, and that would apply to the Department of Justice as well as to everyone else.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That, to my mind, is not the question here. The question is not whether I may be certain, or whether the Senator from Idaho may be certain about it. I am speaking about what seems to me—and I use the expression with all due respect to the Senator who introduced the resolution—to be the improper character of a resolution directing the executive department to institute a prosecution under the statute in a particular case.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho, if this resolution is to be dependent upon the opinion of Senators here, why is the resolution so worded as to leave it to the opinion and judgment of the Attorney General?

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator ask me the question?

Mr. WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose it is out of courtesy to the Attorney General.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It seems to me there would have been a great deal more courtesy in leaving the whole matter to the Attorney General. It is to be supposed, and I am myself quite sure, that if in the opinion of the Attorney General either the people who are mentioned, or anybody else, have been guilty of violating the statute a prosecution will be instituted.

Mr. President, it is but a step from this sort of a resolution to another, which seemed to be foreshadowed in the suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. He reads from an article in the public press that certain persons charged with violating the statute have pleaded guilty or have entered a plea of nolo contendere, and he complains that they have been subjected to a fine which he considers unreasonably low. If the Senator thinks that, and if this resolution is to be passed, then we may expect a resolution directing the court that may try these people to fine them a certain amount or to imprison them for a certain term if they are convicted. Would the Senator from Missouri think that was a seemly thing for the Senate or for Congress to do?

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. REED. I am absolutely in favor of that kind of a resolution, but I want it passed in the form of a law, so that the courts will be compelled to assess and enforce adequate penalties.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Ah, the Senator——

Mr. REED. But I do not think——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator would be quite within his right.

Mr. REED. Certainly; I know that.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. And it would be quite within the rights of Congress to do that. But would the Senator be in favor of passing a resolution directing the court that tries these men mentioned in this resolution, if they are found guilty, to impose the maximum penalty upon them?

Mr. REED. Oh, no. I arose for the very purpose of saying that the Senator from Utah was not justified in putting that construction on anything I had said. But what I did say was that I favored this resolution, and I take it that the Attorney General of the United States does not occupy the same position as the courts, or the same relation to this branch of the Government, that the courts occupy to this branch of the Government.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; not quite the same position, but the difference is one of degree. The Attorney General belongs to one department of the Government and the Senate of the United States belongs to another department of the Government. The Senate of the United States may pass a law declaring a general rule and that in effect directs the Attorney General when anybody has violated that general rule to institute proceedings. I undertake to say that in my judgment, at least, it is entirely aside from any right of Congress to direct the Attorney General to institute a prosecution against any particular individual or any particular corporation or any particular number of individuals or corporations. That is no part of its function; that is not the exercise of the legislative power at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Utah suspend for a moment? The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 11019.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have finished what I had to say.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution of the Senator from Ohio will go to the calendar with the pending question on the motion to refer.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11019) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, apropos of the pending bill, I simply desire to say a word and to have read from the desk a letter from the Tariff Board upon the question of their investigation of the present wool industry. I desire to say by way of preface that the incessant agitation during the last year for a revision of this schedule of the Payne tariff law has already cost the people $100,000,000. Seventy-five per cent of this loss has fallen upon labor.

To again destroy through tariff revision the American sheep industry and place the people under the disadvantage of buying our supply of this article from foreigners in the face of the enormous reduction in the wool product of the world is certain to force our people to the payment of higher prices for clothing and dearer prices for mutton in the not distant future, when the sheep of our farmers have been sacrificed in the open market of the world as they were under the free-trade laws of the last Democratic administration of President Cleveland, when our flocks became so unprofitable to their owners that in many instances they were sold for 50 cents a head and butchered by the thousands.

What there is about the American sheep to excite the hostility of our friends upon the other side of the Chamber baffles my comprehension. Our Democratic friends have a consistent and historic hatred of the American sheep which annually manifests itself toward the most inoffensive and lovable of the farmers' herds, and this undue haste to get at them now is little less than criminal, and I protest against it as unwise and unfair to the sheep owners of our country.

Senators were loud in their demands for a Tariff Board at the last session of Congress. The board has been created and are busy with their task. I have asked them how they are progressing and have received a reply which I ask the Secretary to read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 24, 1911.

The TARIFF BOARD,
Treasury Department Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIRS: Will you kindly inform me what work has been done by your board to ascertain from practical investigation the present status of the American wool and woolen trade, and whether you are now prepared to make any specific recommendation for a change in the customs laws and regulations touching this branch of American industry?

You know the Senate is about to vote upon this matter, and a prompt reply to this inquiry will be greatly appreciated.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH.

THE TARIFF BOARD,
Treasury Building, Washington, July 25, 1911.

Hon. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge your letter of July 24, asking what work has been done by the Tariff Board to ascertain, from practical investigation, the present status of the American wool and woolen trade, and whether we are now prepared to make any specific recommendations.

I beg to say that the board is now in the midst of an investigation into the subject of woolgrowing and wool manufacture in this country and the leading competing countries of the world and is collecting on a large scale original data regarding relative prices, wages, labor efficiency, and cost of production. This investigation was planned last year, with a view of reporting to the President at the opening of the first regular session of Congress in December of this year.

In view of the fact that new information is received daily from our agents, both in this country and abroad, and is being tabulated as rapidly as possible, we are unable to report results until all of this material has been considered. It will inevitably take several months more to complete this work. We shall, however, report to the President on Schedule K not later than the first Monday in December, 1911.

Very truly, yours,

HENRY C. EMERY, Chairman.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I gave notice that at this time I would make some remarks on the pending measure. I have cheerfully agreed to yield to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], who wishes to make a few remarks on the same measure, if I can have the privilege of following him.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] for the courtesy he has extended in yielding me a little time now. I assure the Senator and the Senate that I will not abuse that courtesy with a lengthy speech.

I desire at this time to state briefly my attitude on the propositions now pending before the Senate having as their object a revision of the tariff, and at the outset I will say that I am a firm believer in the cardinal doctrine of my party, viz, a duty on imports coming into the United States and which compete with articles which can and ought to be produced here, equal in amount to the reasonable difference in the cost of production abroad and in this country; and therefore I desire to know the fact of what that difference is. I voted for the Payne tariff bill after exhausting every right and power I had to amend it as to me seemed necessary in order to make it conform to the aforesaid principle; and I so voted for two reasons: First, it was an improvement on the Dingley law, which the evolution of business had made inharmonious with present-day needs. It was, in my judgment, as good a law as could be reasonably expected, having been framed under the old method of revising the tariff. There were many protests against some provisions of all the schedules, but a majority had to be obtained to pass any bill, and the time-honored, but I hope now dishonored, custom of logrolling obtained. If the protestants to that measure had obtained their desires there would have been another class of objectors. Under the old method neglected local and special interests have produced insurgents against tariff revision, and any one of these groups is about as good as another. It was wise, in my judgment, to enact some measure and thus settle the business disturbance which tariff revision always causes, especially when it is made according to past methods. And, secondly, I voted for the Payne bill because it contained a provision, faulty in some particulars, but distinctly progressive in principle, viz, it provided for a Tariff Board, which should be composed of high-grade, well-qualified experts, whose business it should be to investigate the cost of production abroad and at home, and when the facts were disclosed and they showed any schedule of the tariff to be founded on any principle other than the difference in such cost of production, the Congress could by the aid of such facts proceed to revise such schedule, and that without undue and unnecessary disturbance to the business of the country.

I supposed such was to be the policy, at least, of Republicans. I went before the people of Michigan and declared that doctrine. I believe that the people approved it. I now feel that it would be a serious mistake, both politically and industrially, to return to the old methods of revision and in a special session of Congress, in a few days, without hearings and with practically no discussion, and with the Tariff Commission assiduously and intelligently at work securing facts for a report which can not be presented before December; I feel, I say, that it would be a mistake under these conditions to proceed to revise the most complex and far-reaching schedules of the tariff. Does anyone doubt that the logrolling process is to be employed if revision occurs now? What other interpretation can be placed upon the well-founded rumors of secret meetings and attempts at combinations? Are the men who are most strenuous for present revision actuated by the pure and sole motive of benefiting the people? Is it not clear that politics is the mainspring which moves to action now? Will anyone doubt that some Senators are more interested in embarrassing the President than they are in righting tariff wrongs——

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. That some of our Democratic friends are absolutely sincere when their words and actions show that they are looking for political capital?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. TOWNSEND. With pleasure.

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to have the Senator from Michigan name the Senators he refers to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, I do not believe I ought to do that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator should not do it, under the rule.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota will state it.

Mr. CLAPP. Should the Senator have made a reference which, under the rules, he is precluded from specializing?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; not a reference that reflects on any Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I made no reference to any Senator. Senators are unduly sensitive, it seems to me. I simply asked the question if anybody doubted that such are the facts. If the Senator has doubts, he can incorporate them in the RECORD with such expressions as he chooses to use.

Mr. CLAPP. I want to assure the Senator that for one I am not at all sensitive. On the other hand, I wish to say, so far as parliamentary usage and law will permit, that I think the Senator's statement is absolutely unwarranted. I do not myself believe that any Senator upon either side of this Chamber wants to frame a tariff bill for the purpose of embarrassing the President of the United States. I am sorry that the Senator has that view of the purpose and motive of his associates.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am endeavoring, Mr. President, to present to the Senate and to the country some of the views and impressions which have come to me and which, I submit, have occurred to many other Senators and have been given somewhat free expression in many of the papers of the country.

Is this the time and occasion to project hasty and ill-considered tariff legislation upon the country?

I submit, Mr. President, that the people's interests should be of greater importance to statesmen than personal ambitions, or than party success even. I am as ready as any Member of this Senate to proceed to an intelligent revision of any schedule of the tariff when the facts, scientifically and impartially obtained, disclose the need of revision; and so far as the wool schedule is concerned, those facts will be in our hands next December. They can not be obtained before.

I have never heard a Senator on this floor claim that the Tariff Board is incompetent or in any manner unfit. It is doing great work, and we should have the benefit of it before we proceed. The Congress has appropriated $475,000 for this work, and much of it has been expended. I do not believe that all the egotism of the fathers of pending bills and proposed amendments will allow them to claim that they have all the facts necessary for a complete and satisfactory revision of the tariff. If revision occurs now, it unquestionably will be most imperfect when viewed in the light which will be cast by the Tariff Board. Will we revise again in December, or will we leave it imperfect and thus furnish the material for further business disturbance? Either thing would be a calamity. I know that some tariff provisions are inequitable, or at least I think I do, although I would hesitate long before I changed a schedule on my present information. I want the fullest and most reliable information possible. Ignorance and logrolling have been most powerful influences affecting tariff making in the past. Shall we still permit these things to prevail, or shall we do as the country expects us to do, namely, act upon the apportionment and statehood bills and then go home and await the report of the Tariff Board before revising the tariff?

In December Senators will have become cooler; passion and prejudice will have subsided, at least in a measure, and reason and good judgment will have resumed their sway. The defeat of tariff bills at this session will not mean the postponement of desirable tariff revision. On the contrary, it will mean a revision a few months later which will be sane and satisfactory. No man will have occasion to say that I have hesitated to vote against any duty which is clearly shown to be higher than is sufficient to measure the difference in cost of production here and abroad, when such duty is considered by the Senate in the light of facts produced by honest, disinterested, and scientific men.

Why is this undue haste to revise the tariff? It would have waited until December if this extra session had not been called, and no one would have suggested the reconvening of Congress to act upon it. Are Senators afraid to have the facts upon which to base revision disclosed? The country is not. It is praying for relief from the politicians. It asks that tariff laws be scientifically made and that its business be no longer the ball with which men play the game of politics.

Personally, I shall try to keep the faith pledged to the people last fall and shall vote against all hasty, ill-considered tariff legislation by whomsoever proposed at this short session, but I will join hands at the very earliest date with those believers in a revision of all schedules which the facts shall disclose as inharmonious with a tariff which approximately measures the difference in cost of production here and abroad.

What I propose is the wise and logical course for Senators who believe in the principles of a protective tariff to pursue. It will mean an honest, proper adjustment of such a tariff to the needs of the country. It will receive the indorsement of all thoughtful men and will win for the Senate the respect and confidence of American industry.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire to submit some remarks before a vote may be had upon the pending measure, the House wool bill. As a general rule, I am a believer in the custom, supposed to be more or less prevalent, of new Members of this body, for a time after having taken their seats herein and until they shall have learned something of the methods of procedure and of the matters under consideration, refraining from active participation in the debates and proceedings of this body. As a rule, subject to some exceptions, I believe there is good reason for such a custom. As a rule, to which there are exceptions—of which I am not one—I believe that new and younger Members of this body, especially those who have not served in the other branch of Congress and who have had no experience in national politics, upon coming here generally have much to learn about national legislation. I know I had upon my advent into this body and still have much to learn; and I will have much to learn and hope to continue to learn during the entirety of my six-year term of service in this body. Hitherto I have been quite content to remain quiet in this body and to undertake to learn from more experienced and wiser Members something of matters at issue and methods of procedure, and I would prefer to continue for a much longer time so to do. I would not ask at this time to be heard were it not that I feel that conditions of a personal nature demand it and make it appropriate.

My object in now speaking is to explain my motives in casting what might appear to some to be contradictory votes. I desire to give my reason for the vote that on the 21st day of last month I cast upon the motion made by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] to require the Senate Finance Committee to report the House wool bill back to the Senate not later than July 10, 1911; and to give my reasons for the vote that I shall cast on the House wool bill when put upon its final passage, if it may reach that stage, in this body. I believe in the fullest and freest interchange amongst the Members of this body of statements of their motives in voting upon public questions. I want my fellow Senators to fully understand my motives in the casting of every vote that I may cast in this body. I want my constituents to fully understand my motives in the casting of every vote that I may cast in this body. I have nothing of motive to conceal from my fellow Senators. I want them to understand my motives. They may disapprove of my judgment, but I would have their respect for and confidence in my motives. I have nothing of motive to conceal from my constituents. I not only want my constituents to understand my motives, but it is due them that I make known to them the motives of my every act here. They are entitled to know. I am the servant of my constituents and they are entitled to the fullest amount of light upon my conduct here.

As my remarks will involve more or less statement of motive, they will necessarily be, I regret to say, largely of a personal nature; in fact will be, in part, somewhat in the nature of speaking to a question of personal privilege. I am averse to injecting self into remarks made here. Generally speaking, I believe that remarks delivered on the floor of this Chamber should be in the nature of impersonal discussion of issues and principles. However, I recognize that there are times when the exigencies of the occasion require some remarks more or less of a personal nature, and this I deem to be one of those occasions. I trust that this may be the last occasion that I may ever have to inject self into remarks made upon the floor of this Chamber.

As is well known, on the 21st day of last month, when the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] to require the Senate Finance Committee to report the House wool bill back to the Senate not later than July 10, 1911, was put to a vote, I voted against the motion, and I was the only Democrat in this body who did so. I will give my reason therefor.

Upon my election, without my solicitation, to this body, I announced that I would at all times during my term of service here endeavor to give fair consideration and justice to every legitimate industry of the State of Montana or of the nation. I also announced that I would stand for the rule of the people and against the rule of special interests. I did not, and I do not now, consider those two declarations inconsistent. Woolgrowing is one of the principal industries of Montana. Montana is the leading woolgrowing State of the Union. In the production of wool it leads all of the States and Territories. Montana has within its borders more sheep than has any other State or any Territory in the Union. According to the last report of the Census Bureau, in 1910 there were in Montana 4,978,963 sheep. I am told that the woolgrowing industry of Montana represents investments of $45,000,000. I simply state facts. No deduction should therefrom be drawn that I favor giving that industry any more than justice or any undue advantage, or giving it anything at the expense of the people.

On the 29th day of March, 1911, a committee of well-known gentlemen and business men of Montana, each engaged in the woolgrowing business, gentlemen whom I esteem to be upright and honorable men, men of probity and standing, comprising both Democrats and Republicans, boarded in Montana the train on which I was traveling en route to this city, and thereon had an interview of several hours' duration with me. They being my constituents and the representatives of a legitimate industry, I was entirely willing to be consulted by them, and I have no apology for the interview. They did not ask me to vote to retain the present duty, or any particular duty, or any duty at all, on wool. In fact, they did not seek to elicit my views on that proposition. They made no argument to me for a protective tariff on wool. They did not seek to influence my views on that subject. They admitted that a revision of the woolen tariff schedule would probably be sooner or later undertaken by the Sixty-second Congress and that it might result in some reduction of the duty on raw wool.

One of their number indicated that, at a proper time and upon a proper showing, there might well be, in some particulars, a readjustment of the woolen tariff schedule. He stated that in Schedule K, the present woolen tariff schedule, there were certain phases of inequality that operated to the detriment of the woolgrower and that should be corrected. However, they stated that they wanted to avoid continual tampering, tinkering, and agitation, as such depressed the price of wool and had a depressing effect upon the business and kept wool buyers in a state of suncertainty. They stated that if there should be a revision by the Sixty-second Congress of the woolen tariff schedule, they wanted it to be a final and permanent revision, or at least to be the last for many years, in order to avoid continual tampering, tinkering, agitation, unrest, and uncertainty. They further stated that, should a revision of the woolen tariff schedule be undertaken by the Sixty-second Congress, they not only wanted it to be a final and permanent revision, but they desired that it be not undertaken until after a full, fair, complete, and thorough hearing could be had and until they could have time in which to make a complete showing of their contentions. They claimed that before a revision of the woolen tariff schedule should be undertaken they were entitled to a fair and complete hearing, to time and opportunity in which to make a showing before the final judgment of Congress should be passed upon them. They claimed that this could best be done through the nonpartisan Tariff Board, by authority of Congress appointed by the President, then and now engaged in that work. They stated that the report of that board would be made in November of this year, and would be before Congress when it should convene in regular session in December of this year. They claimed that through the Tariff Board report they could shed additional light upon the subject of the woolen tariff and upon the woolgrowing industry in all of its phases, its cost and profits in this and all foreign countries, and the relative positions and rights of the woolgrower and the woolen manufacturer. They claimed that the report of the Tariff Board would show certain phases of inequality of Schedule K and the necessity for the correction thereof.

In other words, they claimed the right, as representatives of a legitimate industry, to a complete showing and a fair hearing before ultimate judgment should be by Congress pronounced upon them, and that this could best be done through the medium of the Tariff Board report. They claimed that the whole matter of the woolen tariff schedule had been relegated by the last Congress to a Tariff Board, with the understanding that the Tariff Board should fully and completely investigate the woolgrowing industry in all of its phases, and any inequalities or unjust features of the woolen tariff schedule, and make its report thereon to this, the Sixty-second, Congress next November, before the convening of the regular session thereof in December; and they claimed that, in good faith, they should be allowed to make their showing and present their evidence to the Tariff Board, which, they said, occupied the position of a referee in the case. They claimed that they had been led in good faith to believe that such would be done, and that, in good faith, it should be done.

In conclusion, they made but one request of me: That I oppose the taking up and consideration, for revision, of the duty on raw wool—raw wool only—(no request about manufactured woolen products) at this special session of Congress, and that I favor putting over any revision of the duty on raw wool—raw wool only—until the next regular session of this Congress, to convene next December, in order that they might, meantime, have an opportunity to make a full and complete showing and have a fair hearing at the hands of the Tariff Board, the referee, which is even now at work in my State, taking evidence and inspecting books and records, before Congress should pass final judgment upon them.

I would make clear two distinctions: First, they made no request as to manufactured woolen goods, their request being only in relation to the duty on raw wool, their own product; secondly, they did not seek to elicit from me any pledge or promise as to what my vote would ultimately be upon the merits of the question of a revision of the duty on wool or woolen goods. They did not seek from me any pledge or promise as to how I would vote when a bill for the revision of the duty on wool should be put upon its final passage in the Senate. They did not seek to influence my vote or views upon the merits of the matter. They asked for a slight concession of time only—a short time, a few months—before final judgment of Congress upon a great question. They did not state it as a dilatory plea, for time only. They gave as a reason for their request their statement that they could within those few months of time make a complete showing and have a fair hearing, and without it that they could not do so. Their request was only for a short extension of time in which to prepare for trial; not as to how I should pass judgment at the trial. I believe in reasonable time for preparation for a hearing; reasonable time in which to have a fair hearing, whether it be to labor or to capital. I have always believed in the right of every litigant, whether the poorest individual or the richest corporation, to adequate time in which to prepare for hearing and to have a fair hearing before the pronouncing of judgment. Inherently, I do not believe in railroading justice, whether it be to labor or to capital.

The request of the gentlemen for a slight concession of time only—a few months—at the time and under the circumstances, appeared to me to be fair and reasonable. They could not have asked less and have asked anything. Whether prudently or imprudently, I promised to grant their request. I promised to oppose the taking up for revision of the duty on raw wool—raw wool only—at this special session of Congress and to favor postponing the consideration thereof until next December, just as it now appears likely that the revision of the duties on cotton, sugar, steel, iron, and other leading schedules will go over to next December, with the aid and consent, possibly, of Democratic votes.

I did not consider, and I do not now consider, that my disposition to grant to the woolgrowers of Montana and, in fact, to every legitimate industry of Montana or of the nation, a fair hearing was inconsistent with my stand for the rule of the people. If my inclination to grant to the woolgrowers of Montana reasonable time in which to make a showing and to have a fair hearing before judgment should be pronounced upon them led me to be too liberal and to promise too much time, it was at most an error of judgment on my part and not an intentional departure from my principle that the people must rule. On that proposition I bow to the superior wisdom of this body. However, if in the opinion of this body I erred in my judgment, I assume that I am not the only man who ever erred in judgment. Doubtless there are living abler men than I, who have erred in judgment. Doubtless Abraham Lincoln, George B. McClellan, Gen. Grant, Gen. Lee, Stonewall Jackson, Napoleon Bonaparte at times erred in judgment. Even newspapers may sometimes err. At least one eminent Democratic authority claims that every Democratic Representative who voted in the House caucus for the House wool bill made a mistake.

We now find plenty of whittlers on dry goods boxes who can tell all about the grave mistakes of Lee and Jackson, the inefficiency of McClellan, the lamentable blunders of Lincoln and Grant, all about how the Confederacy could have succeeded, all about how the Union could have been saved in one-fourth of the time and with one-tenth of the bloodshed that it cost to save it. I sometimes wonder if some of those possessors of superior wisdom had then been alive and in charge of the Confederate Armies and if others of them had then been alive and in charge of the Union Armies what the result of the Civil War would have been. The Confederate Armies would certainly have been invincible and the Union Armies would as certainly have been irresistible, and I am curious to know what would happen if an invincible force should come in contact with an irresistible force. My belief is that there was only one perfect man who ever lived—unless it be my critics—and he was the Great Teacher, who had the greatest charity for the shortcomings of others.

Having, prudently or imprudently, made this promise to the woolgrowers of my State to favor a slight concession of time before the passing of final judgment, when the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], whose ability, wisdom, and patriotism I highly esteem, on the 21st day of last month made his motion to require the Senate Finance Committee to almost immediately report to this body for its consideration the House wool bill, I was confronted with the dilemma of voting against my party associates in this body or of breaking my word, and I did not for an instant hesitate as to what course to pursue. I kept my word. I consider my word as good in politics as in business. I put it above every other consideration, regardless of the consequences, political or otherwise, to me. I make it an invariable rule to keep my word, whether doing so be popular or unpopular.

Having kept my word in opposing the almost immediate consideration of revision of the duty on raw wool, and the Senate having decreed that revision of the duty on raw wool would be considered at this special session, I was inclined to think that I had by my vote against consideration thereof at this special session fully discharged my promise, and that I was then free to vote in accordance with my convictions upon the question of the final passage of the House wool bill; and I had intended to communicate, before the bill should come before the Senate for final passage, with the gentlemen to whom I made my promise, and to ascertain if they did not view my promise in the same light. Before I could do so, and the next day after the vote on the Gore motion, without my solicitation, I received from the Montana Woolgrowers' Association a voluntary telegram entirely releasing and absolving me from any further obligation under my promise. Thus any doubt that might have existed about further obligation under my promise was removed by the voluntary action of the Montana Woolgrowers' Association. It has been charged in Montana that this release came in response to an expressed desire therefor on my part. That is not correct. I had not before receiving it expressed any desire to be released. I had intended to communicate, as to the extent of my promise, with the gentlemen to whom it was made, but the release was wholly voluntary and came without any communication or expression of desire from me. In thus acting the gentlemen to whom I made that promise have shown that they are upright and honorable gentlemen, who would scorn to "trap" anybody, and that they only want what they believe to be right and just.

As I have indicated, I have been criticized for my conduct by a few newspapers that assume to speak for the Democratic Party of Montana, and, strange to say, I have been criticized more upon the keeping of my promise than upon the making thereof. Immediately after my arrival last April in Washington City, without any desire for concealment, my promise to the woolgrowers of Montana to favor postponement for a few months of revision of the duty on raw wool was, with my assent, by newspaper correspondents, made public in Montana; yet the making of that promise elicited but scant comment, while the keeping thereof brought forth much criticism, carrying therewith much misstatement of fact.

In comment upon the vote had in the Senate on the Gore motion, reference being made to "the votes of the Montana Senators on the Underwood wool bill, a measure to reduce the tariff on raw wool 50 per cent," it has been published in Montana that I was "the only Democrat to vote with the Republican regulars against reduction." I beg leave to say that upon that occasion I did not vote against the reduction of the tariff on wool. Upon that occasion the question before the Senate and which was voted upon was not, "Shall the tariff on wool be reduced?" The Underwood wool bill was not before the Senate for passage. The question then before the Senate was a preliminary one, not connected with the merits of the bill. It was: "Shall the Underwood wool bill be reported to the Senate for consideration within a few days?" I voted against the almost immediate reporting and consideration of the bill. I voted that the Senate Finance Committee be allowed longer time in which to consider it and that it be reported and acted upon at a later day.

Reference is made to an alleged promise of mine to the woolgrowers at the Miles City conference last winter "to oppose a reduction in the woolen schedule." I was never in my life in Miles City. I was not at any conference of woolgrowers last winter. I never promised any woolgrowers to oppose a reduction in the woolen schedule. I only promised to favor putting the consideration thereof over to December, in order that, as claimed, whether correctly or not, further light might be had upon the proposition. I never promised any woolgrowers how I would vote whenever the question of the revision of the duty on wool should be before the Senate. It was always my intention, with such light as I had upon the subject, whenever the question of a revision of the woolen tariff schedule should come before the Senate, to vote either for free raw wool or for some reduction in the duty on raw wool. The only matter about which I was ever in doubt was as to whether we should at once have free raw wool, as advocated by at least one eminent Democratic authority, or only a reduction, for the present, of the duty on raw wool, as advocated by the Democratic House leaders; and, if the latter, then as to how much of a reduction. It was upon those questions that I thought perhaps further light might be justly had before the passing of final judgment. When such distinguished doctors disagree, is it any wonder that a less learned person may feel that a little further time might possibly shed further light upon contentions so stoutly waged?

Other criticism upon the occasion of the keeping of my word was most scornful and contemptuous, and from a source that I little suspected of harboring such feelings against me. Yet this same source of criticism ought to know full well as anybody in Montana that I always keep my word in politics, no matter how disagreeable to me the results thereof may be; no matter if it bare my breast to the most scorching criticism and bring down upon my head the most bitter condemnation; no matter if it be utterly destructive of my political future and cast me into the political scrap heap. I once retired from Montana politics, and my retirement was not wholly from choice. I will again retire whenever remaining in politics shall involve the breaking of my word.

It now appears quite likely that revision of the cotton, sugar, steel, iron, and other important schedules will go over until December. Have there been any scorching editorials in Montana against the proposition of permitting revision of cotton, sugar, steel, and iron to go over to December? Not any. Will there be any? I think not. To let revision of cotton, sugar, steel, iron (not produced largely or not produced at all in Montana), and other necessary articles used by the people go over to December would appear, according to my critics, to be orthodox and holy; but a suggestion to let the revision of wool, one of Montana's leading products, now being investigated by the Tariff Board, go over until December is treason—that is, when I suggest it.

Mr. President, so much by way of explanation as to why I voted against the Gore motion. I will now make some remarks in regard to my vote to be cast upon the pending measure, the House wool bill, now and for the first time upon its merits before the Senate for final passage.

Feeling that I have discharged my promise, as well as having been released therefrom, I am now at liberty to vote according to my convictions upon the House wool bill. I intend to vote for the House wool bill. So far as I now have light, it is in accordance with my convictions, my principles, my politics, and my party. I do not believe in always putting party above every other consideration. I do not believe in putting party above right. I do not believe the sole test of a faithful legislator to be that he always vote in accord with his party. I do not believe that test to be the sole test of efficient public service, but I do believe in political parties. I am a Democrat and I am in accord with the political principles of my party. I believe the Democratic Party to be right upon the issues of the day, or I would not belong to it. I am a Democrat from conviction, and I believe in voting with my party when it is right and when vital political principles are at issue. I am a tariff revisionist. I believe in a tariff for revenue only, for the purposes of a government economically administered.

In my opinion tariff protection per se is radically wrong in principle and is legalized robbery.

It is said that the word "tariff" comes from one Tarif, a Moor, who held forth in the eighth century at Tariffa, a place in Spain, and who is said to have been a robber and to have forcibly exacted of merchants and tradesmen, passing his way, a toll, as the price of passing on in peace. Thus the word "tariff" is said to have originated in robbery and bears the name of a robber, who levied the first tariff. Hence, the expression: "The robber tariff." Of course, revenue must be raised, and, in the language of the illustrious John G. Carlisle:

> A tariff for necessary revenue is a legitimate tax; but a tariff for protection is robbery.

In my opinion, protection breeds trusts. I believe protection to be the chief cause of trusts; and trusts produce millionaires and paupers. Trusts stifle competition and cause hundreds of thousands to work in sweatshops at starvation wages. Protection causes an unjust distribution of wealth; unjust distribution of the products of labor.

I favor a more just distribution of wealth, a more just distribution of the products of labor, than exist under our trust-protecting System. I am for a downward revision of the entire tariff system. So far as I now have light, I intend to vote, when afforded an opportunity, at a proper time and in a proper manner, for a reduction of the duties on cotton, sugar, steel, iron, manufactured products, and all other articles of necessity used by the masses of the people. I could not consistently vote for a reduction of all of those duties and yet vote to retain the present protective duty on raw wool and woolen manufactured articles. I do not believe in protecting home products just because they are home products. I do not believe in giving home products an undue advantage over other products. In so doing there would be no principle. I do not believe in levying tribute, exacting bounty, even for home products. With a reduction of the tariff duties upon all other articles in use by the masses of the people, I believe that the reduction of the duty on raw wool, provided for in this bill, will not be unjust or harmful to woolgrowers. So far as I have light, I believe, under those circumstances, it will leave them as well off as now.

Whether we should have free wool or not is not now the question. The Democrats of this Congress have decreed that that issue shall not come before this Congress at this special session. The only question now is: Shall raw wool and woolen manufactured articles stand their proportionate share of tariff reduction along with the other reductions that the Democrats of this Congress purpose making? I believe, with the light at hand, the House wool bill to be a fair and just measure to the woolgrowers as well as, at present, the consumers. I am confirmed in this belief by the fact that an esteemed Republican Member of this body, a protectionist and a woolen manufacturer, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], has himself offered in this body a substitute for the pending House wool bill, which, while it does not provide for so much reduction of duty upon woolen manufactures as does the House wool bill, does provide for material reductions; in some instances, I am informed, as much as 50 per cent of present duties. I understand it will be generally supported by the Republican Senators. It seems to me that this is a significant acknowledgment from a protection source that some reduction may be justly made.

I am further confirmed in this belief by the fact that the Democratic House Members from woolgrowing States and districts who generally, as I understand, opposed revision of the woolen tariff schedule at this time, as I did, voted, with one exception, for the House wool bill when put upon its final passage in the House. The three Democratic Representatives from Colorado, a woolgrowing State and a neighbor State of Montana, in the beginning, as I am informed, opposed, as I did, starting in at this time upon wool as the beginning of tariff revision. Yet, when the House wool bill was put upon its final passage in the House, they all voted for it, believing it to be, if followed by other and general reductions, a fair adjustment. I understand they have been supported in their attitude by the entire Democratic press of their State.

Not only do I intend to vote for the House wool bill, but I intend to vote against adjournment of this special session until we shall have voted upon revision of the cotton, sugar, steel, iron, and all other tariffs upon articles of necessity used by the masses of the people. I favor not only the House wool bill but I favor a general tariff revision at this special session of Congress. I favor remaining here until we shall have voted upon reductions of the tariff duties upon all of the leading articles of consumption, and until we shall have had a vote upon revision of all of the leading tariff schedules, and until that time I shall vote an emphatic "no" upon the question of sine die adjournment of this special session.

It has been decreed that we shall take up for consideration and vote upon at this special session the revision of the woolen tariff schedule, and in that decree I acquiesce. But, since we are to consider revision of the woolen schedule, why end there? Why let revision of the cotton, sugar, steel, iron, and other schedules go over to December? Can anybody give a valid reason therefor? The only reason that I have heard given therefor is that of the personal comfort of the Members of this body. Is that a good reason? Why is it that the weather has not been too hot to decide to vote on woolen revision, and then will suddenly become too hot to remain here and vote on revision of cotton, sugar, steel, and iron? What mysterious thermometrical changes are we to have immediately after the vote upon the House wool bill?

Not only will I vote to remain here at our post of duty to revise all of the leading tariff schedules, but I will vote to remain here until we shall have voted upon measures for physical valuation of railroads, efficient amendment of the antitrust laws, regulation of interstate corporations (the latter now advocated by the honorable Attorney General of these United States), and upon all other matters of remedial legislation needed by the people. If there be remedial legislation needed now by the people, why put off granting it until December? When remedial legislation is needed by the people, I have adopted as my political motto: "Do it now." Why put it off? Will any Democratic or progressive Republican Member of this body say that, after the House wool bill shall have been voted upon, the great masses of the toiling people of this country will need no further remedial legislation? Will there then be on our statutes no class legislation, no legislation in favor of predatory interests, no legislation in favor of special interests which will need amending, repealing, or new legislation? We are here to serve the people. The people are our masters, and so long as the people need remedial legislation we should be ever ready to consider and enact it. The plea of personal comfort is not a valid plea. We were not elected to legislate only when the weather may be comfortable. We are not paid our salaries to remain here, in session, only when the weather may be comfortable. Our duty to the people exists just as much in hot weather as in cold weather. Even so, we are more comfortable here and we have here more of the luxuries of life, with electric fans, iced mineral waters, easy chairs and couches, comfortable offices and cloakrooms, pages and messengers, than the millions of toiling masses in sweat shops, factories, and fields. They toil on in the hottest of weather, under the burdens and unjust conditions imposed upon them. Why should we, because the weather is warm, refuse to remain here and render to them the services due them and expected of us?

I shall vote to remain here so long as the people need legislation, so long as there are wrongs that need righting, so long as there are subjects that may with profit be legislated upon. Why put it off until next winter? Do not the Democrats and progressive Republicans of this body admit that the people are suffering evils which need legislative correction? They may control the actions of this body, if they but will. Then, why not stand to our post of duty and show that we are faithful servants? I have even heard staunch Republicans, termed regulars, admit on the floor of this Senate, at this special session, that there are phases of the present tariff law that need readjustment, regulation, overhauling, and revision, and that the same will likely be done next winter.

If needed now, I ask why wait until next winter? The House of Representatives, I hear, is willing to remain here at its post of duty much longer. Why should the Senators desert their post of duty when there is work to be done? Should the Senators not be as close to the people as are the Members of the House? Should the Senators not be as solicitous of the welfare of the people as are the House Members? Is it possible that the fact that House Members are elected for shorter terms and serve for only two years at a term makes them more solicitous about the welfare of the people? There is no doubt that there is abroad amongst the people popular distrust of the United States Senate. May the Senate not, in large measure, remove that distrust by remaining here at its post of duty so long as the people are in need of remedial legislation? I know full well there are more experienced, abler, and wiser Members of this body than I—doubtless all of the others are—but it seems to me that these propositions are so patent that they are not susceptible of refutation, and that they should appeal to the reason of everyone. I would not object to a short recess next month, as proposed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], but I would much prefer to keep steadily at our duty without intermission.

It may be that there are certain Interests that want adjournment of this special session. But are there any interests superior to those of the people? Are we here to serve The Interests or the people? It may be that the trusts want adjournment. It may be that the trusts recently dissolved by decrees of the United States Supreme Court want adjournment. But were we elected to serve the trusts or to serve the people? Are we the servants of the trusts or of the people? Are we to march under the banner of predatory wealth or the banner of the people? Has anybody heard a demand from the masses of the people that we adjourn immediately after the taking of the vote upon the revision of the woolen schedule? I have not. There is no demand from the masses of the people for adjournment until our work shall have been accomplished. Why end with wool? Why not remain here and next take up the cotton schedule, and then, one after another, in succession, the remaining tariff schedules that need revising? Why now revise wool and not cotton? The woolgrowers were given no time for a hearing. Why make flesh of one and fish of the other? In undertaking the tariff revision of wool, the revision of the duty on one of the principal products of the North is undertaken. Let us be fair, and then undertake the revision of the duty on one of the leading products of the South.

No; after voting upon revision of the woolen schedule much will yet remain to be done in the interest of the people. Not only will remain revision of other tariff schedules, but there are pending in this body bills to amend the antitrust laws, in the interest of the people, in the interest of trade and competition, so as to make those laws efficient in both civil cases and criminal prosecutions; so as to make it possible to put violators of antitrust laws behind the bars, where they belong. Why let those bills lie dormant until next winter? I say, if the antitrust laws need amending, so as to prevent "reasonable" oppression of the people, let us amend them now, so that trusts may not reorganize and proceed with "reasonable" robbery of the people. If a man were sick and in need of medicine, would you give it to him now or wait until next winter? At the last election the people said they were sick, of Republicanitis, and needed medicine. Congress is the doctor. Will you give it now or wait until next winter?

I say, let us do those things now, and do them promptly, without unnecessary prolongation or delay. Is it any wonder that the people exhibit impatience with the United States Senate? Is it any wonder that there is talk of abolishing the United States Senate? We have been here nearly four months, and it appears to me that we have accomplished about as much as a good board of county commissioners would do in a week's time; and much that we do is done under cover of a viva voce vote. One day last week, when the House campaign-publicity bill was before the Senate, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] offered thereto an amendment designed to limit the expenditure of money in congressional elections by national political committees and congressional campaign committees, and he could not get the required number of Senators—one-fifth of those present—to join him in a demand for a yea-and-nay roll-call vote on the amendment; and the amendment was defeated under cover of a viva voce vote, of which no individual record is made. On the same day the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] offered to the same measure an amendment that suffered a like fate. The people complain of these things. I say, that by remaining here at our post of duty and expediting needed legislation we may do much to remove the cause of complaint. Let us put duty above comfort. Let us put patriotism above pleasure. Let us remain at our post of duty until the masses of the people say we have accomplished that which is expected of us; until the toiling masses shall have been given the remedial legislation so often promised them and so often denied them. These are the observations of a new Member of this body, one who claims no superior wisdom and who is not above human imperfection. With these remarks I announce that I will vote for the pending measure—the House wool bill—when put upon its passage.

Mr. DIXON obtained the floor.

CORPORATIONS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a report out of order from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. DIXON. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas for that purpose.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution No. 98, directing the Committee on Interstate Commerce to investigate and report desirable changes in the law regulating and controlling corporations and persons or firms engaged in interstate commerce, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HEYBURN in the chair). It will be necessary for the Senator from Montana to yield the floor under the rule.

Mr. DIXON. I yield the floor for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution reported by him. The resolution will be read for information.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 98, submitted by Mr. CLAPP on the 7th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce is hereby authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to inquire into and report to the Senate at the earliest date practicable what changes are necessary or desirable in the laws of the United States relating to the creation and control of corporations engaged in interstate commerce, and what changes are necessary or desirable in the laws of the United States relating to persons or firms engaged in interstate commerce; and for this purpose they are authorized to sit during the sessions or recesses of Congress at such times and places as they may deem desirable or practicable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to summon and compel the attendance of witnesses, to conduct hearings and have reports of same printed for use, and to employ such clerks, stenographers, and other assistants as shall be necessary; and any expense in connection with such inquiry shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas whether it is a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I understand not. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS] announced that he was not in favor of its passage. He simply did not indicate that he had further opposition to it. He did not vote for it. I do not know that I disclose anything which may not be made known in making the statement.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know whether the Senator from New Jersey would like to be heard upon it?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I think not. He did not indicate any preference of that kind. I would not want to have it pass from under the control of the Senate if there was any doubt on that point. I can only state what he informed us in the course of the running discussion which took place while the resolution was under consideration in the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not any objection to the resolution personally——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. But——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not object. I simply rose to give some information to the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection——

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I should like to have the resolution read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will say to the Senator from Utah that this morning I had a conversation with the chairman of the committee, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS], in relation to this resolution, and he informed me that while, personally, he would vote against it in committee it would be reported out, and I gathered distinctly from him that he intended to make no opposition to it on the floor. Personally, I hope the resolution will be agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent only can the resolution be proceeded with.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object to the consideration of the resolution after the explanation of the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ELECTION AND RECALL OF FEDERAL JUDGES.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. DIXON. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to give notice that on Monday next, after the morning hour, I shall address the Senate on the election and recall of Federal judges, and for that purpose I introduce a bill, without objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill can not be received while the Senator from Montana is occupying the floor in the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. DIXON. I will yield the floor to accommodate the urgent necessity of my friend from Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received.

The bill (S. 3112) providing for the election and recall of Federal judges was read twice by its title.

Mr. OWEN. I desire that the bill may lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. DIXON. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think the Senator from Oklahoma gave notice that he would after the morning hour address the Senate on the bill he introduced. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Would that make the bill the unfinished business?

Mr. OWEN. I think not. I merely propose to speak at the convenience of the Senate, and I do not wish to make it the unfinished business.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course, if the Senator speaks at the conclusion of the morning business he can avoid that, at any rate.

Mr. OWEN. I suggested after the routine morning business.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I understood the Senator to say "after the morning hour."

Mr. OWEN. I meant to say "after the routine morning business."

AMENDMENTS OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. OWEN introduced a joint resolution (S. J. Res. 42) proposing a method of amending the Constitution of the United States by establishing constitutional majority rule; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that the joint resolution may lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will lie on the table.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11019) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, in view of the many formidable exhibits here to my right, which may dishearten some of my friends who might want to listen to me, I will say that I shall take up but a very few minutes this afternoon. However, in view of the approaching vote on the House wool bill to-morrow, I want this afternoon to tell at least some truths about Schedule K that I believe, without egotism, are misunderstood by 99 per cent of the people of this country. If Senators who are really interested in some of the involved language of Schedule K, that has been severely criticized in the press of this country, would take the pains to listen for a few minutes, I really believe I might throw some light on a much-mooted question, and I might say some things that would be of real intellectual benefit to some of my fellow Senators.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I suggest the want of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Cullom	Myers	Reed
Bourne	Cummins	Nelson	Root
Bradley	Davis	Newlands	Shively
Brandegee	Dixon	Nixon	Smoot
Bristow	Gore	O'Gorman	Stone
Burnham	Gronna	Oliver	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Heyburn	Owen	Swanson
Chilton	La Follette	Page	Warren
Clapp	Lodge	Penrose	Wetmore
Clark, Wyo.	McCumber	Perkins	Williams
Clarke, Ark.	Martin, Va.	Pomerene
Crawford	Martine, N. J.	Rayner

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. JOHNSTON] requested me to state for him that he is absent from the Senate attending the Lorimer investigation.

Mr. CHILTON. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WATSON] is unavoidably absent from the Senate.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is detained on the Lorimer investigating committee, and probably will not be with us to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Montana will proceed.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I think it is a duty that I owe to the woolgrowers to try to explain what I believe has always been the great stumbling block in the way of a proper understanding of the wool tariff. It is the one thing on which wool tariffs have been built and the one thing that is not understood by one-tenth of 1 per cent of the people of this country.

The wool-tariff schedule—Schedule K—of the Payne Tariff Act of two years ago is admittedly not basking in the sunlight of popular favor. By common consent Schedule K seems to be doomed to revision.

The Democratic majority in the House have presented their views of Schedule K, and their diagnosis of both the disease and the remedy is contained in the so-called Underwood bill, upon which a vote will be taken to-morrow.

A distinguished Republican Senator [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has presented his views of the revision of the wool tariff as embodied in the La Follette amendment, while another eminent Republican Senator [Mr. SMOOT] has presented his ideas of the correct solution of the wool tariff in the so-called Smoot amendment.

Briefly, the Underwood bill proposes a 20 per cent duty on all raw wool, with an average duty of 40 per cent on manufactured woolen goods.

The La Follette amendment proposes a 40 per cent duty on raw wools such as are generally produced in this country; a 10 per cent duty on coarse carpet wools, very little of which are produced in this country; and an average duty of about 50 per cent on manufactured woolens.

The Smoot amendment proposes a duty of 9 cents per pound on wools of the first and second class and 3 cents per pound on wool of the third class, with an average duty of about 60 per cent on manufactured woolens.

Each of these three bills professes a lowering of present duties on raw wool and manufactured woolens.

Representing a State that has more sheep and raises more wool than any other State in the Union, and in which industry my people have invested about $40,000,000, I am naturally much interested in the pending measures.

More misinformation is afloat, more prejudice exists, and more injustice is liable to result in trying to remedy the alleged wrongs of Schedule K than any other of the tariff schedules.

Before any action is taken in this matter I want to be heard. I know that rank injustice and inequalities do exist in the present provisions of Schedule K. I know that I have knowledge of these wrongs, and I therefore ask of Senators a patient and careful hearing of what I shall have to say.

Two years ago, during the debate on the Payne-Aldrich tariff schedules I was aware of the gross inequalities of Schedule K. I then conceived it to be my duty, as one of the Senators from the greatest wool-producing State, to go to some of the other Senators from the western woolgrowing States and propose to them that we get together and try and adjust what I at that time conceived to be the inequalities of that schedule as it affected the woolgrowers of the West.

But Senators from that section, older and more experienced in tariff legislation than myself, and with equal responsibilities in the matter, while admitting that my contentions were correct, urged that "it was better to bear the ills we have than to fly to those we know not of," and I reluctantly acquiesced in their more mature judgment.

Subsequent events have demonstrated to my mind, at least, that my judgment was then correct. That if, at the time, we had frankly acknowledged a situation that is patent to all who will take the time to investigate, and had reconstructed and rewritten Schedule K in plain English, leaving out the miserable subterfuge that was first written into it at the instigation of certain wool manufacturers in the McKinley Act of 1890, carried over into the Dingley Act of 1897, and again into the Payne-Aldrich Act of 1909, the woolgrowers, the woolen manufacturers, and the people generally would have been better off and business conditions would not now be upset with another renewal of tariff revision.

The time is now here when we should know the truth about this matter, and to the best of my ability I intend this afternoon to set forth the cold record of actual conditions as they have affected the sheep grower.

I shall demonstrate why, that with a tariff duty that most people have honestly supposed gave the sheep raiser a protection of 11 cents per pound, the industry of growing wool and mutton has not thrived, but in the past 10-year period has not quite held its own. And we might as well acknowledge that fact. I shall show conclusively that the struggling sheep grower has been led to believe, and most of them have believed and the people at large have certainly believed, that he was protected by a duty of 11 cents per pound. He has in reality not had a tariff protection of to exceed 5 cents, certainly not over 6 cents, per pound on the average. I will show why instead of to-day having 100,000,000 sheep in the United States that would produce 600,000,000 pounds of wool, more than enough to supply our own needs, we have to-day only 39,470,312 wool-shearing sheep, with approximately 60,000,000 all told, including lambs of this year's crop.

I think the census returns, with the lamb crop included, only show 50,000,000; but the June and July returns would make the number of sheep and lambs about 58,000,000 to 60,000,000. We have to confess that in the past 10 years we have lost about 1 per cent of the sheep of this country. We have not increased the number of our sheep under the present tariff duties.

People generally have believed that the woolgrower has been protected by a duty of 11 cents per pound. Some of the sheepmen have believed this was true. Many of them have known that the nominal paper duty of 11 cents per pound was in fact a delusion and a snare; that the actual tariff duties has not given the woolgrower to exceed 5 or 6 cents per pound. I doubt even that much.

The truth is the woolgrower has been sacrificed for the benefit of the manufacturer. I will demonstrate that that is the reason the woolgrower has not prospered and the one reason why sheep have not increased in numbers as they should have done.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but——

Mr. DIXON. I court interruptions. I want to demonstrate this matter, if I can.

Mr. NELSON. I want to ask the Senator this question: Does he not think that this decrease arose from the fact that a good deal of the range lands have been taken up by homesteaders?

Mr. DIXON. That is the popular theory, and I confess that I labored under the same belief as the Senator from Minnesota; but the returns of the census demonstrate that in the West throughout the old "Territorial" country, the Rocky Mountain region, the public-land region, sheep have increased in the last 10-year period. The decrease has come in the Eastern and Central States.

Mr. WARREN. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment? The facts are that there are more sheep in the Rocky Mountain country than before because, through irrigation and cultivation, material is raised for feeding sheep in the winter and the spring and fall and caring for them, so that the same number of acres now provide for many more sheep than they did when the sheepmen depended entirely upon the grasses of the open range.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator from Wyoming states the situation correctly. The irrigation of the valleys and the growing of alfalfa have made winter feed and winter pasture for the sheep where formerly they depended entirely upon the range.

I will show why this great Nation is to-day dependent on other countries for $100,000,000 of wool and woolen goods yearly imported from foreign countries that should be produced by our own people.

I will show how this Nation can produce its own wool in abundant sufficiency to clothe all its own 90,000,000 people independent of all the nations of the earth.

HISTORY OF THE WOOL TARIFF.

Taught by the stern necessities of the Civil War, when our supply of foreign wools was seriously threatened, that a great Nation to be truly self-supporting must raise the wool for the manufacture of its own clothing, the wise provision of the wool tariffs of 1867 was enacted into law, when a straight duty of 10 cents per pound plus 11 per cent ad valorem was laid on raw wool.

Under the operation of that tariff, with no "skirting-clause" joker in it, the prices for wool were fairly remunerative to the farmer and woolgrower. Sheep increased from 28,477,951 in 1870, producing 100,102,000 pounds of wool, to 50,626,626 sheep in 1884, producing 308,000,000 pounds of wool. In 14 years, under a straight tariff duty of 10 cents per pound, the sheep of this country doubled in numbers, and the wool clip increased from 100,000,000 pounds in 1870 to 308,000,000 pounds in 1884. That was the effect on the sheep-growing industry of this country under a straight-duty tariff, with no joker in it.

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that during a part of that time we had a compound duty, 10 per cent ad valorem being added.

Mr. DIXON. I say that we had 10 cents specific duty and 10 per cent ad valorem, which made about 11 cents per pound.

Mr. WARREN. I will say that sometimes it reached as high as 13½ cents, of course when wool was highest; but the Senator is right, generally speaking, about the tariff rate during that period.

Mr. DIXON. Then, unfortunately, came the tariff act of 1883 reducing wool duties by leaving off the ad valorem duty on class 1 and class 2 and reducing the duty on class 3 to 2½ cents per pound. Class 3 covers what is known as the coarse carpet wool, and under the provisions of that law a great abundance of foreign wool under the 2½ cents specific duty on what was known as carpet wool came into this country, displacing the American-grown wool.

Now, listen, Senators. Under the 1883 tariff sheep decreased in number from 50,626,626 in 1884 to only 43,431,136 in 1891, producing 285,000,000 pounds of raw wool; in other words, after the cutting down of the duty on wool of the third class to 2½ cents per pound flooded the country with foreign wool the result was that during that seven-year period the sheep decreased from 50,000,000 to 43,000,000, but the duties then existing were far greater, in fact, than those under either the Dingley law or the present law.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HEYBURN in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. DIXON. Gladly.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like also to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the law of 1883 placed the duty on waste at 10 cents a pound; and millions and millions of pounds of waste were brought into this country. Increased importations of cloth followed and broken wool tops were imported as waste, all of these taking the place of American wool.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator from Utah states the exact truth. Unfortunately the adjustment of the figures on "broken tops," which is the essence of refined wool, at 10 cents per pound, brought in a tremendous importation at that end of the line to supplant the American wool.

THE M'KINLEY LAW OF 1890.

In October, 1890, the McKinley law was passed. It restored the duty to 11 cents per pound on unwashed wool of the first class, 12 cents on the second class, with class 3, the coarse carpet wools, carrying an ad valorem duty of 32 per cent.

Now listen to the result under the McKinley tariff: During the three years it was in force the number of sheep slowly grew, increasing from 43,431,136 to 47,273,553, and producing 348,538,000 pounds of wool, in place of 285,000,000 pounds three years previous.

But the McKinley law was not a success. For the first time, at the instigation of the eastern wool manufacturers, there was inserted an innocent-looking provision that was fatal, and which since that time has proved to be the famous "joker" of all wool tariffs since enacted.

THE SKIRTING-CLAUSE "JOKER."

Herein lies the secret of the whole trouble of wool tariffs, and in it lies the secret of the wrong and injustice that has been done to the woolgrowers of this country.

When the wool manufacturers by the legerdemain of knowing how to make it appear to congressional Finance Committees, as one eminent authority at that time said, when the full import of the infamous "skirting clause" was made known:

Low duties on wools are made to sound high. It is framed to yield the least return to sheep raisers, without being understood by those who read it.

The New York Weekly Tribune of February 17, 1897, said:

The skirting clause of the act of 1890 was made the means of defeating the plain object of the law to a large extent.

The Tribune was then the great champion of the farmer. Horace Greeley's great influence had not yet entirely waned in its editorial sanctum.

That was before the days of "free trade for farm products" under the guise of reciprocity, sugar coated with "free print paper." But more for the famous skirting-clause joker later on.

WILSON BILL AND FREE WOOL.

I now want to advert to the Wilson bill. Under it raw wool was placed on the free list. Then came the dark days of 1893 to 1897. The theory of the free trader, "free wool and cheap clothes," was heard in the land.

The Wilson bill passed August 28, 1894. We were already in the preliminary stages of the world-wide financial depression of those terrible years. There was no protest then against "high wages," "high prices," and the "high cost of living."

The blow was a staggering one to the sheep raiser. Sheep in Montana sold as low as 75 cents per head and wool as low as 7 cents per pound.

The statement of a distinguished Democratic Senator on this floor the other day that "some Democrats that he knew wanted to kick a sheep every time he saw one" bore bitter fruit. That "free-wool" and "cheap-clothes" demand became a reality. We certainly got "cheap wool," but cheap clothes did not bother us at all, for we were busily engaged just then in trying to find something to put into our empty stomachs, and while thus engaged in that strenuous occupation we were content to wear our old clothes, patched and ragged though they were.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. DIXON. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator whether, in his observation, wool clothing was any cheaper to the consumer during that time than it was before or has been since?

Mr. DIXON. I know in the part of the West where I live everybody was bankrupt and broke, and we were not inquiring very much into price tags in the clothing-store windows during that period.

Mr. WARREN. If I may state what my observation was, I will say that on all wool clothing we got no discount whatever, but paid the same prices. We could buy shoddy clothing, because that tariff law removed the duty on shoddy, and the importations of the free shoddy increased some 20 times. We used 20 times as much of it as before.

Mr. DIXON. The whole country was flooded with shoddy importations from Europe, displacing American pure wool.

Under the beneficent influence of "free wool" the number of sheep diminished from 47,273,553 in 1893 to 36,464,405 in 1896, a decrease of over 9,000,000 in three years. Wool production fell off from 348,538,000 pounds to 270,474,000 pounds.

The value of sheep fell from $125,909,000 in 1893 to $61,989,000 in 1896.

Practically every woolen mill in this country was closed during that period, and the whole wool business, from the sheep raising to the manufacturing, was bankrupt, hopeless, and ruined, and the importations of foreign wool doubled and trebled; the importations of shoddy multiplied, as the Senator from Wyoming has said, 20 times over, and whatever clothes that we were fortunate enough to get hold of were largely made from shoddy imported from Europe.

DINGLEY LAW OF 1897.

In 1897 the Dingley law practically restored the old rates of the McKinley law, but the poor woolgrowers, after their terrible experience with "free wool," knowing full well the cheat and delusion of a nominal duty of 11 cents per pound, with the "skirting clause" again inserted, which in its actual results only gave 4 or 5 cents protection, were willing to accept anything that promised some relief.

McKinley had himself stood for a duty of 8 cents per pound in 1890, with no "skirting clause," but the manufacturers insisted on 11 cents, with the "skirting-clause" joker put in.

THE JOKER.

Now, let us examine into the matter and see how the "skirting clause" really reads and see what it means in actual results.

The language of the McKinley law, copied into the Dingley law and again rewritten into the present Payne-Aldrich tariff law, after providing for a duty of 11 cents per pound for wool in the grease and 12 cents per pound for the wool washed on the sheep's back, not scoured, and after further providing that any wool imported—here is the crux of the whole matter; this is the provision of the present law, of the Dingley law, and of the McKinley law—which has been sorted or increased in value by the rejection of any part of the original fleece, shall be subject to twice the duty to which it would be otherwise subject.

Here is the proviso that was slipped in in 1890:

Provided that skirted wools as now imported are hereby excepted.

"Now you see it, and now you don't." It is the same as if we enacted a stringent statute against murder in the first degree, providing as a punishment that the one found guilty should be drawn, quartered, and burned, and then at the end should add a proviso that "the maximum penalty shall only be six months in the county jail." That was the joker that was slipped into the law of 1890. Columbus Delano, of Ohio, the great wool expert, got up in the committee room of the House and left it in disgust.

The tariff on raw wool was written on paper for the poor sheep raiser a thousand miles away from the scene of action in language that appeared to him a plain protective duty of 11 cents per pound, but with a string tied to it by the representative of the organized manufacturers that, when gently pulled by him in the actual business of importing foreign wools, only gave the sheepman about 4 or 5 cents per pound actual protection.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator be kind enough to explain what the term "skirted wool" means?

Mr. DIXON. I am just approaching it now. In other words, by a bold circumlocution of phrases, the tariff of 11 cents per pound, supposedly for the protection of the sheepman, largely disappeared in the shrewd juggling of the innocent-looking proviso attached to the end of the paragraph.

HOW IT WORKS.

Here is how it works: Theoretically merino wool, known to the trade as "Territory wools," such as constitutes the bulk of the wools grown in Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, Utah, and the other States that were formerly Territories, shrink on an average about 65 per cent from the "wool in the grease" to the "scoured wool" status—from this status [indicating by exhibiting a sample of greasy wool] to that [indicating by exhibiting a sample of scoured wool].

I think I have given the percentage of shrinkage a little high; probably 60 per cent would be better.

Mr. SMOOT. No; 65 per cent.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator from Utah informs me that it is 65 per cent. For this reason the duty on this scoured wool [indicating] was fixed at 33 cents per pound, being, theoretically, the equivalent of the 11 cents per pound duty on 3 pounds of wool in the grease.

I will now say, so that these samples which are here on my desk may be more intelligently understood, that a gentleman from Idaho, Frank Hagenbarth, who, I think, is as well informed about the wool tariff as any man living, at my request went to Boston, visited the wool warehouses, and bought 60 samples of wool from the different wools stored there—some from the West, some from Ohio, some from the Argentine, some from Australia, and some from England. He took those 60 samples and distributed them among four different professional scourers in the city of Boston. The scourers did not know where the wool came from or anything about it. They only knew it by number. He was endeavoring to ascertain by actual test how much imported wools brought into this country under the skirting clause actually shrink. I will get to that later on.

Here on the desk is a letter sent me by Jeremiah Williams & Co., of Boston, at the request of Mr. Hagenbarth, giving the actual figures for wool in all stages of preparation—from the dirty wool in the grease to the skirted, the scoured wool, the tops, and the spun yarn. Here [indicating] are the noils, which are the waste and the burrs, amounting to 2 grams, I think, in those 2 pounds of wool. This [indicating] is skirted wool from Australia. Two pounds of it make one pound of scoured wool; in other words, the shrinkage on this wool is 50 per cent instead of 66⅔ per cent, on which the tariff is based.

Mr. ROOT. What is the process of skirting?

Mr. DIXON. Skirting is simply this: The wool fleece does not shrink in the same proportion. The belly, the legs, and the posterior portion of the animal, where the dirt and filth accumulates, shrink probably 90 per cent. The skirting clause merely permits the importer to take a fleece from Argentina or Australia or New Zealand and clip off the heavy shrinking, dirty, filthy, posterior parts, the belly and the legs, and import only the light-shrinking back and top. Here is the letter to me from Jeremiah Williams & Co., dated Boston, June 29, 1911, written at the request of Mr. Hagenbarth. They give the actual result of the tests with these samples. It shows that 2 pounds of grease wool made 1 pound of scoured wool; 14½ ounces of card sliver—card sliver is the wool as it first comes out of the carding machine—make 12 ounces of tops, which is the finest grade of refined wool before it is carded into roving and then spun into yarn.

Mr. SMOOT. Or a reduction of 25 per cent between the scoured wool and the tops.

Mr. DIXON. Or a reduction of 25 per cent between the scoured wool and the tops. Two pounds of dirty grease wool produced these results, finally yielding 10½ ounces of yarn.

Mr. WARREN. How much of noils?

Mr. DIXON. Two and a quarter ounces of noils. This is noil [indicating]. It is merely waste, the short, stubby, coarse fibers that are taken out in carding and combing. The 2 pounds of grease wool also produced 2¼ drams of card fly and burrs, which is merely refuse.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, we have many inquiries as to what noils are. As I understand, noils come from scoured wool, and they are the short parts of the wool and also whatever impurities are left when the tops have been extracted from the scoured wool.

Mr. DIXON. That is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. The short staple fibers from fine grade of wool.

Mr. WARREN. The short staple, and anything that will not make tops.

Mr. DIXON. All wools do not shrink alike.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator expect to follow tops further? There is a little waste in putting tops into yarn and the yarn into the cloth.

Mr. DIXON. The cloth samples are there on the other desk [indicating]. I will take them up a little later, as it will follow in better sequence. All wools do not shrink two-thirds in scouring. Now, remember that tariff duties are all built on the supposed fact that wool shrinks 66⅔ per cent.

Theoretically the importing manufacturer, to get 100 pounds of scoured wool, would import 300 pounds of wool in the grease, paying thereon a duty of $11 per hundred pounds, or $33, the equivalent of 33 cents per pound on the scoured product.

But with the "skirting clause" in active operation, he does no such thing. From all fleeces imported at the place from where they are shipped he first trims off the heavy shrinking legs, belly, and rump portion of the fleece, and only imports the light shrinking back and side portion of the fleece, so that in importing 300 pounds of "skirted wool" from Australia or New Zealand or Argentina, which then shrinks only less than 50 per cent instead of the theoretical 66⅔, the importing manufacturer actually gets from his 300 pounds in the grease, if it only shrinks 50 per cent, 150 pounds of scoured wool, which has cost him just 22 cents per pound in tariff duty on the scoured wool, instead of 33 cents, as contemplated by the tariff section before the "skirting clause" was deftly attached thereto.

In other words, the "protection to the woolgrowers" has then and there shrunk from 11 cents per pound to one-third of 22 cents, which makes 7⅓ cents actual protection instead of the 11 cents as written in the law.

Judge William Lawrence, who was for some years a Republican Member of Congress from Ohio, afterwards Comptroller of the United States Treasury, and who for years was president of the Ohio Wool Growers' Association, and probably the greatest authority in his time on wool tariff—I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] knew him——

Mr. SMOOT. I used to know him very well.

Mr. DIXON. I think he is also known to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. LODGE. Yes; and he is a great authority.

Mr. DIXON. Judge Lawrence gave it as his deliberate opinion, in his annual address before the Ohio Woolgrowers' Association in 1898, after the notorious skirting clause had again been inserted in the Dingley law of 1897, that "the skirting clause was a fatal defect in both the McKinley and the Dingley tariff laws." He gave it as his judgment that under the loophole of the skirting clause and the inadequate duty placed on wools of class 3, the nominal paper duty of 11 cents per pound only "added an average of about 4 cents per pound to the price of unwashed wool to the average American merino wool over the normal world's price and no more."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. DIXON. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. In justice to the present situation, I would like to say that at that time they were making a great many coarse goods in this country; and if they were doing it to-day and could use third-class wools, the result would be the same as the judge stated. But it is not to that extent now, because they are not making the coarse goods.

Mr. DIXON. Yes; the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] states the thing correctly as it was at that time. At that time worsteds had not come into universal use. Cheviot and tweed weaves were largely used. They were importing this coarse class 3 wool, which still further reduced the actual protection to the sheep grower.

Mr. WARREN. For a long time there was no tariff at all, or scarcely any on third class, called carpet wools. To-day about 81 per cent of the carpet wools come in under a tariff of 4 cents. About 19 per cent come in at 7 cents. It is safe to say that pretty much all of the best, and I should think perhaps a quarter or a third of the balance, is used for other purposes than carpets, and it is so stated in various publications.

For instance, the Boston Transcript, in quoting the market every week, speaks of it in nearly every quotation as third class or carpet wool imported for better purposes than carpet manufacture.

Mr. DIXON. Now listen, Senators. Edward A. Greene, of Philadelphia, whom many of the older Senators remember, the eminent wool manufacturer, wool dealer, and wool expert, who was chairman of the commission that arranged the wool samples under the act of 1890 for use in the United States customs, which same classification is still in use, in discussing the actual operation of the law and with reference to the "skirting clause," said:

> The Dingley law is better for the manufacturers than any law they ever had, but worse for the woolgrower than any, except the Wilson law, since 1867.

That was Mr. Greene's testimony on the effect of the skirting clause.

To put the matter of shrinkages of imported wools that had been skirted to the actual test, at considerable trouble, Mr. Frank Hagenbarth some weeks ago went personally to Boston and procured the 60 actual samples from different shipments of wool in the warehouses at Boston and had the wool in the grease scoured by professional scourers.

Here are the results:

	Shrinkage—
	Lowest.	Highest.
	Per cent.	Per cent.
Fine Australian, 64's	44	48
New Zealand, 58's	38	42

Idaho, half blood	60	62
Montana, three-eighths blood	54	57
Idaho, one-quarter blood	50	53
English Kent Wethers, washed	16	18

These are the results from 60 samples actually scoured under the circumstances I have mentioned.

Mr. LODGE. Those foreign wools are all skirted wools.

Mr. DIXON. All skirted wools. The domestic wools are not skirted, because there is no incentive to skirt them. The foreign wools are all skirted before importation. I have the original samples in my office, 60 of them, and if any Senator out of curiosity should care to drop in and see them, I will be glad to exhibit the whole list. I only brought in these that are here on my desk.

Taking these 60 different samples of imported Australian, New Zealand, and Argentine wools, picked indiscriminately from imported wool stocks in Boston awaiting manufacture, we find the average shrinkage to be 36⅔ per cent.

That is, instead of shrinking 66⅔ per cent, as contemplated in the tariff law, the average imported Australian, New Zealand, and Argentine wools shrunk only 36⅔ per cent by this actual test.

In other words, the importer in Boston, in actual experience in importing these skirted foreign wools, paid in tariff duties on 300 pounds the sum of $33. He received therefrom 190 pounds of scoured wool.

Instead of paying the theoretical $33 tariff duty on 100 pounds of scoured wool, he actually paid $33 tariff duty on the resultant 190 pounds of scoured wool, or at the rate of 17.36 cents per pound, for his scoured wool, instead of 33 cents.

In other words, the 190 pounds of scoured wool, from actual results, represented, on the 3-to-1 basis, 570 pounds of unskirted wool in the grease, making the actual duty to the importer at the rate of 5.8 cents per pound on wool in the grease, instead of 11 cents, as provided in the law.

These are the cold facts from the test of actual results.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That was the actual protection.

Mr. DIXON. Yes; that is the actual protection to the American sheep grower—5.8 cents per pound, instead of 11, as popularly supposed.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. DIXON. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. The previous reference to Judge Lawrence reminds me that my association with him commenced in the sixties, and usually at least once a year I saw him from that time on. Now, the woolgrowers, aside from the skirting, even if that were eliminated, would not get the 11 cents, of course, because shippers abroad will always ship the lightest fleeces. If you take out the skirted wool, then you will get the light fleeces, which will go a shrinkage of perhaps 48, while ours will go 66⅔, which was originally accorded as the regular rate of shrinkage. Now, those of us who have long known the duty, know that 11 cents and 12 cents has not been the real protection, but that it has been from 5 to 7½ cents per pound.

Mr. DIXON. The truth was they took the old 11 cents duty in the 1867 tariff and added the skirting clause to it, which nullified half of the 11 cents duty written in the body of the law.

Mr. WARREN. I might say further to the Senator that formerly we did not get the light wools that we now get from abroad. Our South American crossbreds are now very largely light wools, which were not in existence then. At that time the wools from Oceanica were all of them of heavier shrinkage than to-day. They were nearer to our shrinkage. So that that change has worked against us year by year in the change in breeding abroad.

Mr. SMOOT. So that Senators will understand also the result just stated——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Utah give attention to the Chair for a moment? Senators are indulging in a quiet conversation without addressing the Chair, with the result that other Senators do not hear them. Senators will conform to the rule.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Montana, and also other Senators, to the result that is just announced, and to state that it is not altogether in the skirting clause, from the fact that on class 2 wools under the present law, if they are washed they come in at only 12 cents, and not double the amount of duty for wool in the grease. Therefore the shrinkage upon those washed wools of the second class, coming in at 12 cents—and that was one of the classes that the Senator has alluded to—brings the shrinkage down quite low. In my amendment I have eliminated the skirting clause. I have also provided that wools of the second class coming into this country washed shall bear the rate of twice the amount of wools of the second class in the grease.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Utah failed to say what, perhaps, we all know, that he has changed the rate also on the second class, the mutton sheep.

Mr. DIXON. It is all 9 cents per pound.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. DIXON. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. During this discussion it has occurred to me that instead of this complicated schedule between raw and unwashed wool, scoured wool, noils, and all that, would it not be fairer to have an ad valorem rate on the actual value of wools?

Mr. DIXON. I will reach that later on.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. DIXON. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to know from the Senator from Wyoming—and I ask the Senator from Utah the same question—why it was that this disclosure was not made to the Senate when the Payne-Aldrich bill was under discussion? The distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is a large woolgrower, and he must have known it. I do not think the attention of any of the Senators was called to the matter either by the Senator from Utah, who was on the Finance Committee, or by the Senator from Wyoming, who was a Member of the Senate then, and who is a woolgrower.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me to answer: There has not been a time, in conversation or public speaking, when the matter has come up to me, when I have not made the statement that on first-class wool the real protection to the sheep grower has not exceeded 7½ cents a pound, and that it is sometimes less since the introduction of light shrinkage crossbred wools.

Now, in the matter of second-class wool, we have for many years understood there was a fault. But I have heard it said often here, and never better than by a former Senator from Missouri, Senator Vest, who one day in a speech stated how long he had served, and stated that there never had been a tariff bill passed that any living man was satisfied with.

I make that assertion on my own account, that there never has been a general tariff bill passed that exactly suited any one person. This wool tariff has never entirely suited the woolgrower, but it has been the best that we have been able to attain so far.

And referring to the matter of second-class wool, I remember that the Senator from Minnesota brought it up two years ago. The second-class wool originally was all the wool that could be combed. At that time the other wools were used for felting, carding, and so forth, but they could not be combed, and there was such an intense feeling on the part of manufacturers that they must have a certain small amount of long luster wool to use with a Lister comb, and besides that, on account of the great friendship for Canada, they left the second class at 12 cents, washed.

The percentage of such wool has never been over 12 per cent of the entire production, and usually only 6 or 7 per cent, so that it has not been so important; but at the present day the French combs, and also the Heilman and Noble and one or two other classes of combs that have been invented in America, comb nearly all of the wool produced. They comb the wools formerly considered too short for combing. Now, I believe, and I want to say to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who has just arisen in his place, that second-class wools have just as much right to have a dirt, a washed, and a scoured rate on them as any other classes. It is my intention, if I ever get a chance, to help make it that way.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator from Wyoming speaks of the friendship for Canada in connection with wool.

Mr. WARREN. A great many years ago.

Mr. NELSON. But the friendship for Canada was not as great as it has been at this session of Congress.

Mr. WARREN. That is true. But I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the wool associations of this country, the woolgrowers, and the Senators in this body who represent woolgrowers have not been so insistent on indorsing Canadian reciprocity as have some others.

Mr. NELSON. Another thing, if the Senator from Montana will yield to me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. DIXON. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. This occurs to me. We who were very anxious in 1909 to have this woolen schedule revised, were told that it could not be done, that it was the key of protection, that you must not touch it; and now the Senator from Utah and others come in and admit that the tariff was unjust and unfair, and too high, and are ready to reduce it. Why did not you meet us in that spirit at that time, instead of coming now to do it?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. DIXON. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that if I had time to explain——

Mr. NELSON. Did you not have time two years ago?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will only wait a minute, I will tell him what I was going to. If I had time to explain to the Senator the bill that I have offered, I believe I could convince him that, as far as the woolgrower is concerned, he has just as much protection to-day as he had under the present law. And I think the Senator from Montana will admit it.

Mr. DIXON. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] will admit it. I do not want to take the time of the Senator from Montana at this time, but if I have a chance I will explain to the Senate later on.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will allow me a moment there. I wish the attention also of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. The reason which might have existed for these luster wools has passed away largely by invention of the combs; and, on the other hand, there has arisen a greater demand for mutton and mutton sheep, and the supply is short and growing shorter; so that there is every reason to change that tariff now, that did not exist, perhaps, at the time when the tariff was made.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, just a moment. I am peculiarly interested in this subject, because I come from a sheep-growing State myself, and the sheep growers in Oregon generally—I mean those who have not the sources of information at hand, as has the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]—all write to me about the 11 cents protection, and insist that a reduction of that will seriously injure the sheep-growing industry of my State.

Now, according to the admission made by the distinguished Senator from Montana, as well as by the Senator from Wyoming, the sheep men in the West have not been getting that at all. As a matter of fact, they have been getting only a little over 5 cents instead of 11.

Mr. WARREN. They have been getting 7 and a fraction at times. Of course it has varied, but I think the Senator from Oregon will ascertain, upon inquiry, that the real wool-growers of his State, as well as others, understand the situation—that under present laws it takes the 11-cent maximum to really produce 5 to 7½ cents in the clear.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The rate which the Senator from Montana fixes is a little over 5 cents; so that I wanted it to get in the RECORD that these people who have been believing all the time that under the Payne-Aldrich bill, as well as under the McKinley bill and under the Dingley bill, they have been getting 11 cents protection, are really getting only a little over 5 cents.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator if the sheep growers who are writing to him are asking to have the tariff reduced?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They have been buncoed into the belief that Schedule K ought not to be changed at all. Now, the Senators here who are in that industry seem to believe it ought to be changed, and I am inclined to believe they are right.

Mr. DIXON. I want it changed, and put it in plain, ordinary English, so that it can be understood. That is what I urged the western Senators to do two years ago, and I think a fatal mistake was made in not doing it then.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Wyoming in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. DIXON. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am in some doubt and darkness as to just the position the Senator desires to be understood as occupying. He has demonstrated that the present duty, while nominally 11 cents, is really only 7 cents or thereabouts. Is he in favor of making it really 11 cents? Does the proposition suggested by the Senator make the duty 11 cents and obviate or do away with the fiction?

Mr. DIXON. I want to eliminate this skirting-clause joker in the present law, that has cheated the woolgrower out of at least half of his supposed protection.

Mr. HEYBURN. It seems to me that is the most important question.

Mr. DIXON. But until you fix a straight wool duty, and give the wool man a little better protection than he has now, the flocks of this country will never increase to the point where we will produce a sufficient supply of our own wool for our own clothing. It could be done very easily. If we had the full 11 cents of protection written in law we would have 125,000,000 sheep in the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. My object in interrupting the Senator and asking the question was to suggest that I would like very much to participate in such action as would bring about that result. It is the defect, we will admit, that has been discovered. I am not inclined to take issue with the Senator from Montana in that regard. But having discovered it, would it not be better to proceed to find a remedy, to restore a duty which will meet the real necessity of the business?

Mr. DIXON. I would be very happy to cooperate with the Senator from Idaho in accomplishing that result.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. DIXON. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator has made a statement, in which I thoroughly agree with him, that if we could get what those not interested in the business suppose the sheepman is getting, there would be sheep enough in this country to raise all the wool that we could use and all the mutton that is required in our country for food.

Now, I want to ask the Senator whether he believes that sheep would perish off the face of the earth if this present tariff, faulty as it may be, should be cut down to only a fraction, as is proposed by a certain bill, which is now before us?

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Montana allow me to ask the Senator from Wyoming a question?

Mr. DIXON. Just let me answer the question, and then I will yield. I will say now to the Senators present, without regard to politics and as man to man, that if the tariff on raw wool that the sheepman is getting to-day is reduced in any appreciable degree, you will drive the last remnant of the American sheep from the face of the earth, except a few little isolated bands of the coarse-wool, mutton sheep, raised for mutton for the local market. There is no question about that, Senators, and I say that to my Democratic friends who are going to vote to-morrow for the Underwood House bill, carrying duties that, in the light of past experience, will shut up, in my opinion, practically every woolen mill in the United States and will, I believe, put the finishing touches to the languishing sheep industry of this country. I will be frank enough to say that the Underwood bill, with its 20 per cent duties on raw wool, does not hit the sheep herder as hard as it does the manufacturer.

Now, let me go on a little further with my argument, and then I will be glad to answer any and all kinds of questions.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. DIXON. I do.

Mr. GORE. I should like to ask the Senator what he thinks of this situation: The duty on wool in the United States is 11 or 12 cents a pound on first and second class, and in Canada the duty is 2, 2½, and 3 cents—2 cents as against England, 2½ cents the intermediate rate, and 3 cents is their general rate—and those duties are only on that character of wool which the Canadian produces. All other kinds of wool are on the free list.

Mr. DIXON. Yes.

Mr. GORE. And sheep are worth more in Canada than in the United States.

Mr. DIXON. Oh, no; I think the Senator is certainly mistaken; that is, if he refers to ordinary wool-producing sheep. There may be flocks of high-grade sheep which are raised for breeding purposes that may be worth more, but not the ordinary sheep.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I examined the figures last night, and they range from $4.50 to $7; and the average, I think, is $6.50.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator permit me? I think the Senator, if he will go further, will see that they have only something over a million sheep, and they are very largely——

Mr. GORE. Over 2,000,000, I think.

Mr. WARREN. I looked at the figures not two hours ago, and they were very largely thoroughbred sheep.

Mr. SMOOT. Thoroughbred sheep.

Mr. WARREN. They are raising thoroughbred and high-grade rams to sell to the United States and other countries. Furthermore, I want to say to the Senator that the woolen manufacturers of Canada are about where the woolen manufacturers of this country were after the passage of the Wilson bill. They are "nit."

Mr. DIXON. Of course the sheep industry in Canada will undoubtedly flourish to a greater extent under the action of the reciprocity law that we have just passed than it has in the past. It has not been a flourishing industry heretofore, because they have no market for their wool. There was no home consumption for Canadian wool, but under Canadian reciprocity the Canadian sheepman will have free entrance for his sheep, with the wool unshorn, to the American market. It will naturally encourage sheep raising in western Canada.

Mr. SMOOT. The largest woolgrower in Australia——

Mr. DIXON. I read in the Senate the other day an article from a Chicago paper which stated that the king of the Australian sheepmen, the forerunner of an army of Australian sheep growers, had landed in Winnipeg, and had already purchased a ranch of 40,000 acres. Seeing opportunities for an increase in the wool and sheep production of Canada under reciprocity with the United States they are going to engage largely in the sheep business in the western Canadian Provinces.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. DIXON. I do.

Mr. REED. I am going to ask a question, but I want to preface it.

Mr. DIXON. Let me say to the Senator that if it is a theoretical tariff question, I wish he would reserve it until I finish my statement on this subject.

Mr. REED. It is on this matter.

Mr. DIXON. If it is on this particular question, I will gladly yield.

Mr. REED. Canada in its soil, in its climate, and in its geographical situation is exactly where the United States is, except that Canada has more cold weather and the Canadian sheep raisers have to feed longer. The soil is newer and their transportation is not as good as that of the United States. In Canada they have a tariff, as the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] says, of 2 or 2½ cents a pound.

Mr. DIXON. I think 3 cents is their general wool tariff.

Mr. REED. We are now told by the Senator that some Australian sheep king is going to immigrate to Canada and bring his flocks and his herds, leaving his favored land, the land with which we can not compete, to come to Canada, and is there going to engage in this business, because he can ship from there into the United States. When he gets into the United States he will not be any better off with his wool than the American producer. Will the Senator kindly enlighten us as to how it is possible for the Canadian or for the Australian to come to Canada and get rich by shipping wool into the United States, when the American sheep raiser, who is already located here, can not hold his own market and can not make a living?

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, the Australian sheep raiser has been penalized heretofore in getting his wool product into the American market to the extent of 5 or 6 cents per pound under the manipulation of the skirting clause. It can not be figured definitely. Under reciprocity he can engage in the sheep business in western Canada and ship his mutton, with the wool on the sheep's back, over into the American market free of all duty, where he has heretofore been penalized. He will not get rich any more quickly than the rest of the sheepmen in the West. He will be practically on a par with them.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. DIXON. I hope the Senator will let me finish my statement.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to complete this brief statement, by the courtesy of the Senator.

Mr. DIXON. Certainly.

Mr. REED. The Senator must admit that this Australian sheep grower prefers the American market, and prefers to raise his sheep upon Canadian soil, which is no better than ours, and is not as good as ours, and he prefers our market under these conditions to the present great advantages that the Senator says our local sheep raisers can not withstand. Does that not demonstrate to an exact nicety that all this cry for protection is a fraud and a sham raised by the interested men who come to the United States Senate to vote the people's money into their own pockets?

Mr. DIXON. Oh, I think the Senator himself, under any theory of a tariff, must vote for a tariff that will raise $400,000,000 of revenue in order to run this Government, whether he calls it a tariff for protection or a tariff for revenue. The incidental protection under your bill is the same as the direct protection under our bill, so far as that incidental protection goes.

Now, Mr. President, I must finish this statement. I have really broken right into the middle of my speech to allow Senators to make these interruptions. I want to be courteous, but I must conclude what I have to say.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, just one minute as to the number of Canadian sheep.

Mr. DIXON. I think the Senator from Oklahoma is right. As I remember it, the number is about 2,000,000.

Mr. GORE. Let me quote the figures, please.

Mr. DIXON. I will be glad to have the Senator from Oklahoma give the correct number.

Mr. GORE. I hold in my hand the Canadian Yearbook for 1909. The number of sheep reported is 2,705,390.

Mr. WARREN. Are those shearing sheep, or sheep and lambs?

Mr. GORE. Sheep.

Mr. WARREN. Of course, that figure includes the lambs with the shearing sheep?

Mr. GORE. I presume so.

Mr. WARREN. And the figures quoted here give the number of sheep old enough to shear.

Mr. DIXON. Now, in connection with what I was first trying to say, taking the lowest shrinking New Zealand cargo, that shrinking only 24 per cent, and the actual tariff duty on the unskirted would have been 4.8 cents per pound instead of the nominal duty of 11 cents.

That the nominal tariff duty of 11 cents per pound has at no time added anywhere near that price per pound to the price of American-grown wools, I submit the following table, which I take from the Report to the House of Commons, 1903, as to London prices; the Boston price for "territory" wool at the Boston market during those same years from the Woolen Manufacturers' Bulletin. Here is the result. I was surprised when I went into this:

Under the Wilson bill our wool actually sold for less in the Boston market than the same class of wool in the London market. The market for wool was destroyed. It was brought not only to the level of the London market, but included the difference in transportation from the western ranges across the continent and the ocean and commission charges to London.

The western woolgrower received the London price, less freight and commission charges from the western ranges to the London market.

Here is a comparative table of prices, showing the prices of wool in London and Boston during the seven-year period from 1896 to 1902.

The Australian crossbred is a little superior in quality to our western "Territory" wool, while the Buenos Aires, or Platte, wools are a little inferior in quality to "Territory" wools.

Years.	London price.		Boston price—"Territory."
	Australian cross bred.	Buenos Aires.
	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
1896	18	9	11.33
1897	17.2	9	19
1898	15.2	9.8	16
1899	17	13.8	14.66
1900	16.8	10.6	20
1901	11.8	9.2	16
1902	12.6	10.4	14

Mr. SMOOT. I would like to ask the Senator a question. The prices named at Boston, I suppose, are the quotation of Territorial wool?

Mr. DIXON. Territorial wool.

Mr. SMOOT. I judge the prices named are at the point of shipment; not at Boston.

Mr. DIXON. I took it from the American Wool Manufacturers' Bulletin, and it professes to give the average Boston price.

Mr. SMOOT. I think, if the Senator will look it up, he will find that they are prices at the point of shipment.

Mr. DIXON. It is the Boston price. I think I am correct in that.

I could not get the specific quotations for Australian crossbred and Buenos Aires from 1902 down to the present year, but in Statistics, Worsted and Woolen Trades, issued by the Bradford (London) Chamber of Commerce, I quote:

Years.	London price—average for all wools (grease).	Boston—"Territory" (grease).
	Cents.	Cents.
1903	16.52	16
1904	17.40	16
1905	18.58	20
1906	20.36	23.50
1907	20.06	22.65
1908	18.68	22.65
1909	19.06	20

From these tables it is perfectly apparent to any sane man that the tariff on raw wool during the past 15 years has added to the cost price of a suit of men's clothing not to exceed 25 cents. The cry of "free wool and cheap clothes" is ridiculous and absurd.

The much-abused sheep herder, in all due humility, enters a plea of "not guilty" to the indictment of "high-priced clothing."

The patent, automatic "skirting clause" has absolved him from that charge.

Mr. President, just a little divergence here, I think, will prove interesting. These wool samples were sent me by Jeremiah Williams, of Boston, and I have the actual samples here. This is 13-ounce serge cloth made from this class of wool. This first sample is made from fine Australian imported wool, corresponding to the territorial wool. It is pure wool, 56 inches wide, and sells on the market, so Mr. Jeremiah Williams wrote me, at $1.44 per yard net. This is a piece of serge of the same class made from American territorial wool. Here are the two pieces. You can not distinguish them apart.

Here is a coarser grade of serge. It is made from quarter bloods and half bloods American wool, selling wholesale at $1.20 and 95 cents per yard, serges that are worn and out of which tailors make handsome suits of clothes.

Mr. President, it takes 1⅛ pounds of scoured wool to make 1 yard of that fine serge weighing 13 ounces. It takes 2⅝ pounds of greasy wool to make that 1 yard of 13 ounces, $1.44 a yard serge, the highest on the market. Three and one-half yards of that will make a suit of clothes. Nine and a fourth pounds of this wool in the grease, at 20 cents a pound, which is a high market price, would make the total cost of the raw wool in that suit of the highest grade of serge $1.85. Three and one-half yards of that serge, at $1.44 per yard, wholesale price, make the total cost of the wool cloth that goes into the suit $5.04, for which suit the tailor charges you from $45 to $55.

On the cheaper grades of 15-ounce serge made from one-quarter blood, costing at wholesale $1.06 per yard, the total cost of the woolen goods that make up the suit is $3.72. This tailor-made suit is made out of the very finest grade of serge, and is almost exactly the suit of clothes I have on, for which I paid George T. Keen, a local tailor, $55. The wholesale price of that woolen cloth was $5.04. During the past five-year period there has been an average of about 4 cents a pound difference between the London and Boston wool market on the same grade of wool, unless I am totally misled by these figures that I have delved into with patience and perseverance, from every source in the Congressional Library. There is a difference of about 4 cents a pound between Boston and London on account of our tariff. The 9¼ pounds of this wool in the grease make just 37 cents difference in tariff duties on account of the American-grown wool in that suit of clothes, made of that highest priced cloth on the desk.

THE MANUFACTURER.

But after the "skirting clause" has largely dispossessed the woolgrower of his protection let us see what is the result so far as the manufacturer is concerned.

I again call your attention to the statement of Edward A. Greene, the Philadelphia manufacturer, who was chairman of the commission that arranged the wool samples for the custom-house officials under the act of 1890:

> The Dingley law is better for the manufacturers than any law they ever had, but worse for the woolgrowers than any—except the Wilson law—since 1867. (See Woolgrowers Bulletin, Nov., 1897, p. 23.)

The Boston Commercial Bulletin, when the woolen schedule of the Dingley tariff bill was pending, boasted of New England's ascendency in the Senate. Its issue of May 22, 1897, said:

> The Finance Committee of the Senate is Senator Aldrich. The other members are either too infirm for work or absolutely under the domination of the strong-willed man from Rhode Island.

The old Dingley wool schedule was taken over into the present Payne Tariff Act without change, so far as the duty on raw wool is concerned.

Under its provisions the manufacturer has a "compensatory duty" given to him for having theoretically paid 11 cents per pound tariff duty on his raw wool in the grease and is allowed the full theoretical 33 cents that he is supposed to have paid in tariff duty on every pound of weight in yarns and blankets on the cheaper grades, and 44 cents per pound on the better grades, and in addition to this "compensatory duty" on the "raw material" he is also given his ad valorem "protective" duty of from 50 to 60 per cent.

Let us take the case of the actual shrinkages on the 60 samples of "skirted" wools that Mr. Hagenbarth had scoured in Boston from a 300-pound lot of "skirted wool" actually imported, on which the manufacturing importer paid $33 tariff duties. From this 300 pounds of skirted wool he secured 190 pounds of scoured wool in place of the 100 pounds of scoured wool contemplated in the schedule. This 190 pounds of scoured wool represented for a "compensatory duty" 570 pounds of wool in the grease. When the manufacturer spins this into yarn, that same yarn immediately takes a "compensatory duty" of $62.70 on the cheaper grades and $83.60 on the higher grades of manufactured cloth—the importer having only actually paid $33—and the 50 per cent protective duty in addition.

In other words, under the working of this joker of the skirting clause the manufacturer would get the compensatory duty of $62.70 on the lower and cheaper grades of cloth and $82.60 on the finer grades. The ad valorem comes after that.

THE WOOLGROWER.

When you talk about the "inequalities of Schedule K," let no man be so unkind or unjust as to charge up anything to the poor sheepman, living his lonely life, with wife and children, away out in the sagebrush and bad lands, with his faithful dog patiently guarding his band of sheep from the ravages of coyotes, the poisonous loco weed, and rattlesnakes in summer and the freezing storms and blizzards that sweep across his range in winter—half his life isolated from the society of his fellow man and the comforts of civilization, that through his humble toil the American people may be warmly clothed.

The skirting clause in Schedule K has for the past 15 years taken from his lean pockets most of the benefits of his "protection" and by a legerdemain unknown and foreign to his honest nature has transferred the long end of his "protection" to the eastern manufacturer.

The western woolgrower is somewhat discouraged. Between the bounties showered upon him by the operation of the skirting clause and the activities of his friends, the "wool buyers," representing the commission houses of the East, who expend a good portion of their energy in sending out professedly friendly tips in the way of "wool circulars"—instructing him in all the various and mysterious rumors that tend to make a low market around shearing time—he hardly knows the truth about the wool tariff.

I hold in my hand a wool circular sent out on July 15, 1911, by Justice, Bateman & Co., wool commission merchants, Philadelphia. It was sent broadcast to the woolmen of Montana.

The whole trend of the so-called information in this circular is to cause the woolman out West to believe that "there is danger of the Underwood bill passing the Senate." It also contains an open letter addressed "To the President." I quote:

> I must therefore appeal to you, Mr. President, to apply your veto to this destructive bill, if it reaches you.

A prominent wool man in my State, who has not yet sold his wool clip, was greatly alarmed over the impending danger so graphically set forth in Mr. Justice's letter to the President. He sends it to me with the added postscript:

> If the Underwood bill is passed the sheepmen of Montana are broke.

Of course they would be in the event of the happening of such an impossible contingency.

Justice, Bateman & Co. on July 15 knew just as well as every other man in this Chamber knows that there was no possible danger of the Underwood bill passing this body and becoming a law.

I further quote from this circular that naturally tended to cause a stampede among the woolgrowers of the West to sell their wool clip at a ruinous price to the wool commission men's agents who were on the ground ready to take advantage of the fears of the woolgrowers. I read from the circular:

> The voting of the Republican insurgents (so called) at the extra session, however, has upset all confidence in any legislative body, and trade calculations have been deranged by the action of these progressives.

I further quote:

> As these insurgent Congressmen nearly all come from woolgrowing sections, the trade has been rather bewildered, and have lost confidence in price stability, and are pushing the sales of their wools at very little above its London or free-trade value.

I presume he referred to the action of 19 Republican Senators from the West in voting against free trade in farm products under the name of Canadian reciprocity, while still retaining tariff duties for eastern manufacturers.

I am informed by the wool men of Montana that these eastern wool commission houses, by spreading mysterious rumors of the probable passage of the Underwood bill, and "pulling their buyers off the market," did within a week's time force down the price offered by them to the woolgrowers from 18 to 13½ cents per pound.

I think it is probably true that these western Republican Congressmen have the interests of the western woolgrowers about as close to their hearts as these commission men from Philadelphia and Boston. We at least hope so, anyway.

In my mail yesterday morning I had a signed letter from Mr. Theodore Justice, inclosing a marked copy of the Daily Trades Record of July 24, containing an article by "Bronx," who, I apprehend, is undoubtedly Mr. Justice himself, as it contains many of the identical tables and language set forth in the Justice, Bateman & Co. "wool circular." In a paper slip attached, marked in big printed letters, appeared "Read from here down." I notice a severe attack and arraignment of Senator LA FOLLETTE's wool bill. I notice, however, that LA FOLLETTE's bill does give the woolgrower 40 per cent protection on his wool, with the skirting-clause joker eliminated, which is fully as much real protection as the sheepman is now getting with the skirting-clause joker in the present law. I think myself that Senator LA FOLLETTE has made the duty too low on the coarse carpet wools of class 3 in the present law.

Yet Judge William Lawrence, the great exponent and defender of the wool tariff as applied to the woolgrower, in his historic address as president of the Ohio Woolgrowers' Association in 1898, in discussing the iniquities of the present skirting clause and the inadequate protection to class 3—coarse carpet wools—of the present law, said:

> And yet the wool circular (Justice, Bateman & Co., Feb. 1, 1898) erroneously and absurdly speaks of third-class wools, such as we do not largely produce and such as compete with our own production.

Judge Lawrence added:

> The fact is, these wools injure American woolgrowers more than any other.

In this marked copy of the Daily Trade Record, which Mr. Justice sends me with the special admonition to "read from here down," I have carefully followed his directions. It is very interesting to me. After condemning Senator LA FOLLETTE's bill giving 40 per cent ad valorem to the woolgrowers, with the skirting clause eliminated, the article goes on to approve in glowing terms Senator SMOOT's wool bill, which gives the woolman 9 cents per pound protection, with the skirting clause eliminated. LA FOLLETTE's bill gives the manufacturer about 50 per cent protection; Senator SMOOT's bill gives them about 60 per cent.

The article in question, so highly approved by Mr. Justice, goes on further to say:

> The wool trade generally are hoping that something like the Smoot bill, with the skirting clause restored, will be passed and passed quickly.

In his active campaign among western woolmen regarding tariff duties on wool, I want now to inquire, Whose interests does he represent? The manufacturer or the woolgrower?

I think I am safe in saying that the infamous skirting clause will never be reenacted in another tariff wool bill. Certainly not with the aid of western Republican Congressmen and Senators.

There is one provision in the Underwood bill, the La Follette bill, and the Smoot bill that I hope will be eradicated in each of them, and, for that matter, in every other wool-tariff bill that will ever be presented to this body, and that is with reference to the tariff on wool rags and shoddy.

RAGS AND SHODDY.

I appeal to Democratic Senators to listen to what I now state. We want a prohibitive tariff on wool rags and shoddy. Certainly no Senator by his vote wants to either encourage or permit the importation of either rags or shoddy, with their cholera-laden germs, from the refuse heaps and filth of European and Asiatic cities, where they have been picked by the vigilance of the foreign ragpicker. I fully agree with the statement in the last circular issued by Justice, Bateman & Co. regarding the duty on rags.

It is stated that these foreign rags and shoddy always contain more or less germs. Only a few of the mills subject rags to germ-destroying processes. The majority of the mills simply grind them up and remanufacture them into cheap shoddy clothing.

I am glad to say that the present tariff does place a duty of 10 cents per pound on rags, which is in effect prohibitive.

PRESENT CONDITIONS AFFECTING WOOLGROWERS.

Mr. President, if the duties on raw wool were equitable at the time the law was passed in 1897 and as reenacted in the law of 1909, then by all the rules of reason they should not be diminished now.

The woolgrower of to-day faces an entirely different problem than he did in 1897.

The cost of production is far greater now than then.

The free range of that day is gone now. To-day the woolgrower is from necessity obliged to put at least twice the amount of money into his plant and equipment that he did 15 years ago.

He must now own the majority of his range lands, where then he had their free use. He must now pay a grazing tax for the pasture within the forest reserves, which were free then. He must to-day pay to the sheep herder a wage of $50 per month, where he paid $30 15 years ago.

THE TARIFF COMMISSION.

Mr. President, the cold business logic of the present situation demands that no wool tariff revision bill be passed at this extra session of Congress.

Two years ago, as one of the provisions of the Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act, we provided for a Tariff Commission, with powers to investigate and report to us the conditions surrounding production at home and abroad. We then gave our allegiance to the principle as enunciated in the last Republican platform—that tariffs should measure the difference in cost of production at home as compared to the cost of production in foreign countries. On that platform and by that principle I stand. No matter what may be the pressure in some quarters for tariff revision, I believe the people of this country have, irrespective of their party politics, prepared to accept in the future only those tariffs that are made upon that fundamental principle.

THE UNDERWOOD BILL.

The House Underwood wool tariff bill has been hastily prepared, without even a hearing by the House or Senate committees. Nobody knows or dare prophesy its effect on the wool industry in the United States. But we all do know that it has been written not from any accurate information as to conditions affecting either the growing of wool or the manufacture of woolen goods.

It would be hardly less than a crime for this Senate to enact that bill into law when we know that it has been presented purely as a political measure, intended solely for use in the next presidential campaign.

I am broad enough to know that the woolen manufacturer must also have sufficient protection to offset the cost of labor here and in Europe. We all admit that labor here is paid twice, and, in most cases, three times what it is paid in England, France, and Germany.

We know that it costs the woolgrower, paying the wages that he does here, more to produce wool on the ranges of Montana than it does in the Argentine or Australia.

It is known by all men that the Tariff Board has about completed its wide investigation regarding the cost of growing and manufacturing wool here and abroad.

It will be ready to submit to us its findings of fact next December.

We would belie every promise that we have made, prove false to our professed political platform, and act not as wise and conservative men and legislators if we do not await the report of the Tariff Board three months hence.

For that reason I shall vote not only against the pending House Underwood bill, but also against any and all bills proposing to amend the wool tariff at the present extra session.

Mr. President, you ask me what is my solution of the inequalities of Schedule K. I will tell you. Do away with the infamous skirting clause. Write the tariff duties in plain, every-day English that the sheepman in the West can understand the same as the manufacturer can understand it.

Give us 8 cents per pound duty on wools of the first and second class and 4 cents per pound on carpet wools, as McKinley wanted in 1890. Do away with the false and unwarranted "compensatory duty" above that which the manufacturer actually pays on imported wool.

Either do that or give us a duty of 25 cents per pound on the scoured product. There would be no subterfuge then. The woolman would know exactly the measure of his protection. Many of our woolgrowers, who have given the matter intelligent consideration, have arrived at the conclusion that the scoured basis is the sound basis.

I know that Mr. Hagenbarth, of Idaho; Dr. S. W. McClure, who is the secretary of the National Woolgrowers' Association; and A. K. Prescott, president of the Montana woolgrowers, and many others are in favor of the scoured basis.

Give the woolgrowers a tariff of that kind and I guarantee that within 10 years' time we will produce every pound of wool to supply the needs of the American people for clothing. We will restore a languishing industry to its old-time standard. We will retain here at home the $100,000,000 that we are sending every year to foreign countries for the purchase of wool and woolens.

Doing this we will wrong no man. We will encourage trade and industry under the American flag and bring peace and plenty to our own people.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I do not desire to enter upon a discussion of this question at any considerable length; but a few days since, when I was presenting some views upon it, I yielded, expecting at a much earlier day to complete the remarks that I was then engaged in making, so now I shall be brief.

Mr. President, the argument which has been made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] requires his final statement as to the action that he should take to justify it. I do not believe that the woolgrowers of this country should be compelled to do business under a protective duty of less than 11 cents a pound. If the 11 cents a pound written in the statutes is a fiction, then I would, instead of writing down the 11 cents, write out the fiction.

Mr. DIXON. That has been the whole trend of my argument this afternoon.

Mr. HEYBURN. The woolgrowing and sheep-raising business, for some reason, is not in that prosperous condition at this time that is was expected it would be. I have here from current papers this statement:

Idaho growers are in hard plight—Eastern market quotations on sheep declared ruinously low—Shipments likely to show marked falling off unless change is made—

This is not an article written by somebody for the purpose of affecting votes in the United States Senate, but this is the current statement of the condition of the market in the midst of a very large sheep and cattle producing country. I will not read it at length, but I will simply read a portion of it.

Although up to date an Idaho firm, Le Moyne Bros., of Hagerman—

That is, as I have said, in the midst of a sheep-producing country—have received the top price on the Chicago market for February lambs, which was $7.30 per hundredweight, the conditions in the eastern mutton markets in general are not at all encouraging to the sheepmen of this State. The consensus of opinion is that present prices on sheep are ruinously low, and a radical change to higher prices must soon set in or Idaho growers will lose heavily this year, as they did the two previous years, according to local authorities.

An examination of the testimony of Mr. Hagenbarth and of that of other sheepgrowers in Idaho will confirm that statement as to existing conditions in regard to the raising of sheep. Mr. A. J. Knollin, a citizen of Idaho, who is one of the large sheep raisers, appeared before the Senate Finance Committee and gave it the benefit of his actual experience on one of the largest sheep ranches in Idaho. He has gone with great exactness and detail into the cost of producing sheep. He has taken a year's business as a basis and given us every item and figure, which discloses the fact that sheepmen in Idaho are not making any money. They are simply continuing in the business in the hope that agitation will cease pretty soon and that the business mind will settle down long enough for stability in prices to be reestablished. Mr. Hagenbarth, the largest sheep raiser in Idaho and a very large cattle raiser, testified before the committee to the same effect. He gave the figures, he gave the cost of every item, and he gave the product of every sale by item. I am going to ask to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks these statements which were made before the Senate Committee on Finance, or otherwise I should read them, and I do not care to take the time of the Senate to read them.

I desire first to incorporate Mr. Knollin's tables and statements in this regard in the RECORD as I have prepared them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

I can not better confirm the fallacy of such statements than by submitting for your consideration figures on the operation of a ranch in Idaho for the past decade.

The statement offered by Mr. Knollin follows:

Mr. KNOLLIN. I am submitting for your information figures representing the operation for a ranch in the State of Idaho that, in its richness of soil and its general lay for economical irrigation and handling, is far above the average Idaho ranch. The figures and the statement can be verified by bills and vouchers; they are absolutely correct. You will note the monthly average, the yearly average, and the total expense for 10 years. For my illustration, we will use the latter figures. You will note that the largest item is labor, $30,727.16, and the next largest item is interest on the investment, $15,520.38. The next largest item is for feed used on the ranch for ranch horses, for milk cows, and hogs, and, I will add, for the feeding of beef for home consumption. This feed so used was raised on the ranch, credited to crop account, and charged back to expense. The expense for seeds, $3,655, is in part handled the same way.

The ranch produces the greater part of the seed that has been used. We have the item of incidental expense, when our foreman and employees are away from the ranch attending to business connected with the ranch, amounting to $1,175.08. This, you will note, only figures $9.76 per month, being good evidence that the expense incurred did not include grand opera or long pleasure trips made and charged up to the expense of running the ranch. The taxes amount to $1,570.91; land leases, $37.82; and salt, $51.55. Then we have household expenses amounting to $2,967.43, and equipment amounting to $3,382.63, the total expense of the two being $6,350.06. In explanation of the light household expenses I will say that practically all of the meat and vegetables used on the ranch have been raised; and of the light maintenance expense, that the fences and buildings have been made mostly of poles and logs, so that the large part of the expense of buildings has been in the labor. The total of these two, however, as given—$6,350.06—represents the actual outlay of money, and it is the commodities making up this amount that I presume we might hope to buy at a less cost, in accordance with the theory of people who want lower cost of living. For the purpose of illustration, we will suppose that a saving of 25 per cent could be made on this $6,350.06, which will amount to $1,587.51. You will note the crops we sold amounted to $59,308.78, and there was a profit made on live stock amounting to $7,335.35, making a total income of $66,644.13.

It would require but 2.2 per cent reduction of the income to offset $1,587.51 that we assume we might save. I will ask you if the farmer and the ranchman may expect a difference of 22.8 per cent in the value of the products he sells and the necessities he buys, under the proposed Canadian reciprocity treaty? Is it not more logical to conclude that if by this treaty a saving of 25 per cent could be made on purchases, that a loss of 25 per cent would be sustained on sales? I fail to see how one could look at the proposition in any other light. This being true, we find from the figures we are dealing with that there would be a loss sustained on crops sold of $16,661.03, as against the saving of $1,587.51, or a net loss of $15,073.52. How shall we offset this loss? You will note for the 10 years this ranch has sustained a total loss of $944.85, although during the time the property has appreciated in value $2,915. We have no surplus account from which to take this loss, and if we study the figures carefully it will be seen that the only opportunity for offsetting the depreciation in crops would be to decrease the labor and the interest accounts. It has been my experience that when prices are good and times are prosperous that the interest charges go down, but that when times are hard we are obliged to pay a higher rate of interest for money to operate our ranches on, provided we can get it at all.

Senator GALLINGER. A moment ago you said $1,500 loss. Do you mean to say $15,000?

Mr. KNOLLIN. $1,500 net loss. The statement will show just how that was arrived at. Now, we have our labor accounts, and you will see at a glance that to make up the 25 per cent depreciation in the value of the crops a reduction of 50 per cent would have to be made in labor. The laboring men, which includes the farmer, are the consumers of the country. When you cheapen the cost of living you lower wages.

Does that answer your question with reference to the carpenter and his plane?

Senator MCCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. KNOLLIN. Thank you. Where is it the farmer and his family and the laborers on the farm and ranches spend their money? It is in the towns and cities, if you please. It is there they go to buy their clothes, their shoes, their hats, and for their amusements. Therefore, I am constrained to say out of the fullness of my experience that the leaders in the movement for the cheaper cost of living—honest, undoubtedly, in their opinions—are laboring under an error of mind. In the free-wool period, during Mr. Cleveland's administration, I was slaughtering sheep and lambs in Kansas City. I bought sheep and lambs at times at a little over the transportation and selling charges. I sent this mutton out for sale with instructions to the drivers that they need not replace in coolers mutton that they could not sell, but throw it to the hogs. And during one fall I slaughtered over 7,000 sheep, the carcasses of which were either fed to the hogs or tanked for grease. This mutton was sold from one-half to 5 cents per pound. The retailers and restaurants that bought it of me could not meet their bills, because, they said, they could not collect from the people who consumed the meat, and therefore I quit business with accounts outstanding of between $5,000 and $6,000, which ultimately was a complete loss.

These are facts, and I will leave it to the thinking people of this country as to whether or not a period of cheap living is a beneficent condition. The Master said: "How can one enter into a strong man's house and spoil his goods except he first bind the strong man?"

Are not the words of the one perfect man, who knew no error of mind, of worth to us in the present day? Are they not as true and applicable now as 2,000 years ago?

I wish you would bear that statement in mind, should you refer to the products as shown in the statement. Last year we raised on that ranch 1,800 tons of hay, and, if I remember right, something like 500,000 pounds of grain.

It is 7 miles on the south to a neighbor and 11 miles on the north. The country intervening between these ranches has a productive soil, and would be just as productive as this particular ground were it cultivated, but it requires water, and what is necessary to get the water is capital with which to build reservoirs to store the water as it comes down from the mountains at flood time. That country could be made to produce a thousandfold over what it is producing to-day.

Senator HEYBURN. You produce your grain by dry-farming, do you not?

Mr. KNOLLIN. Partly; mostly by irrigation at that point.

Senator HEYBURN. They had a pretty good crop of dry-farm wheat there this last year, did they not?

Mr. KNOLLIN. Dry-farms are coming in there pretty fast, and they have good crops.

I fully realize that the consumer's interest must be considered, and I make this statement without fear but that I can prove it, that instead of there being an immediate need of our seeking and aiding in the development of new countries and new lands, we will not only feed our own people, but for centuries to come we will be able to materially assist in furnishing food for millions in less favored countries.

That is a little different from the stand that was taken by Mr. Hegenbarth in quoting Mr. Hill, of the Northern Pacific, but I have been out all my life through this great western country, and we are only scratching over it. Here last Sunday I spent the time in the country about Washington, and I was surprised to find a country 300 years old looking so near in its original state. Upon making inquiry, I was told that if I would go down into the timber I would find corn furrows there; that that country had once been cultivated and was productive. Now, it follows that when this country became a little worn the farmer moved to the new country in the West, a virgin soil, more easily worked than the New England hills. The pioneers there built homes and established themselves, and it would be a crying shame if they were driven out of those homes, driven to lose the fruits of their labor by competition from lands north of us that can be had much cheaper and where opportunities for getting hold of those lands are greater.

In my own case, as I will show you, the sheep that we grow in Idaho that I will show you the pictures of are bred up from English stock, the best rams that we could buy, first in Canada and then in England. I have spent a great deal of money—spent all of the money that has come out of the sheep—to improve them. It was my ambition to breed flocks of pure-breed sheep up to the number of 10,000, but now I find myself without room for 3,200 on the national forest, and excepting that we have the mountain feed we can not grow this class of sheep. We have in Idaho, in another way, however, similar conditions that exist in England—green feed the summer through. In July and August, if you go up into these mountains, you will see the lambs playing on long drifts of snow. Below those drifts there will be flowers blooming. They have that succulent feed that produces an abundance of milk from the ewes, and the lambs grow fat.

Now, gentlemen, those conditions are impossible in the East, but the conditions that exist in England, where they sow turnips and have green feed in the summer, owing to their moister climate, those conditions can be worked out in our farming district, so that the sheep industry of the farms can be developed immensely in this country.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you please suspend your remarks for a few minutes, as Senator NELSON is present and has to attend a committee meeting and desires to address the committee for a few moments? If you will suspend now until Senator NELSON finishes, you may resume after he has concluded.

After remarks submitted by Senator KNUTE NELSON—

MR. KNOLLIN RESUMED.

Mr. KNOLLIN. Mr. Chairman, I was submitting a statement of the conditions as affecting the handling of sheep in which I am interested in Idaho. I was stating that it has been my ambition to build this flock of pure-bred sheep up to 10,000 breeding ewes. Senator NELSON, of Minnesota, has just covered very clearly what I have in mind. The opening of the markets of the United States to Canadian products, and with their desire to develop their country, I am confident that I can handle these sheep to much better advantage and handle them cheaper and find a larger market for them by moving those flocks to Canada. But I think to do so would be a real loss to the State of Idaho and to this country.

We have recently passed through a period of high-priced meats—this is especially true of hog products. It is not difficult to locate the reason for this. We had previously passed through a period of low prices. Hog raising was not only unprofitable, but was for some time conducted at a serious loss. This has been true frequently regarding the production of cattle and sheep. Extreme low prices lead to curtailment of breeding operations; extreme high prices stimulate production, and prices are extremely high or low, as the case may be. Neither of these conditions is ideal. A regular supply adequate to the demand, at prices reasonably remunerative to the producer and not burdensome to the consumer, are the desirable conditions. There are many things that enter into the cost of production, such as location as to distance from transportation, distance to market and cost of transportation, droughts and other adverse weather conditions. This is especially true regarding the cost of producing mutton. A hard winter means either enlarged expense for feed or loss of sheep, always a lighter and often a poorer quality of wool. A backward spring causes loss in lambs. I find in raising sheep in New Mexico, over a period of 12 years, my losses have averaged 5.6 per cent, with a maximum loss of 9.5 per cent and a minimum loss of 1.65 per cent; lambs raised has averaged 73.2 per cent, with a maximum of 93.76 per cent and a minimum of 50.2 per cent. The wool clipped has averaged 7.3 pounds—a maximum of 8.6 per cent and a minimum of 6.5 per cent. The wool has averaged to bring 13.7 cents per pound, with a maximum of 20 cents and a minimum of 8.7 cents. I am interested with others in sheep in Idaho—three outfits. About the same variation prevails there. You will readily see that all of these conditions affect the cost of producing mutton. A light loss, a good lambing, a good clip of wool, and a good price for it—mutton will be materially cheaper. Bad conditions, and it will cost higher.

I have brought out these facts to show that it is an absolute impossibility to produce mutton on a basis of a uniform close margin of profit. Averages are of little value, except when covering a period of years.

Our country, however, is so vast and its products so varied that we usually produce a sufficient quantity of meats, grains, vegetables, and fruits to supply our people bountifully at a reasonable average cost. We have, however, in this country a disturbing element, which, for the want of a better term, I will name tariff agitation.

Sheep growing is the most sensitive of all industries to the influence of the tariff for good or ill. Quick to anticipate disaster when threatened with competition from other countries, slow to recover confidence when again recognized as an important industry, and requiring encouragement for its continuance and development.

Under adverse circumstances, products of the factory can be quickly curtailed or cheapened to meet existing conditions, but sheep must be cared for just the same, even when the products are below cost and the investment loses a big percentage of its value. In 1885 there were in the United States 50,360,000 sheep, with a value of $2.14 each, a total value of $107,961,000. Affected by agitation for cheaper wool, followed by the Mills bill of 1884 and continued agitation, culminating in the Wilson bill of 1893 and the free-wool period, our flocks were reduced in 1897 to 36,819,000—a loss of 13,541,000 sheep, with a valuation of $1.82 per head, amounting to $67,021,000; a loss in sheep of 26 per cent; in value, 28 per cent. This was a disastrous period for flockmasters, and had it continued for a decade sheep would have been wiped off the map of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, during that period there was such anxiety on the part of the sheep owners to get rid of their sheep that they actually shipped them to market without expecting to receive any returns for the sheep whatever. The railroads would not accept the sheep for shipment unless the freights were prepaid. I remember one instance on the Kansas City market. Mr. Eugene Rust, then superintendent of the yard at Kansas City, came to me with reference to a shipment that had been in the yard for several days, and said, "What can we do with them?" No commission man would receive them, because they could not afford to assume the responsibility of the charges. I did not feel that I could handle them. The fact of their being cheap was no inducement to me to buy them. Finally, after figuring the thing over, I said, "If you will arrange with the Santa Fe Railway to take off $12.50 freight and you will knock off the yardage of 5 cents a head, I will pay the balance of the freight and the feed charges and take the sheep," and I got them, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen.

Senator HEYBURN. It is also true that the railroads would not accept wool in the sacks, delivered on the station platforms, unless the freight was guaranteed or prepaid.

Mr. KNOLLIN. That is true; and on shipments of horses, also.

Just at that time the sheepmen of Texas had leased lands, bought lands, and built fences to protect their industry—tied up the most of their capital, borrowing money on their sheep. When these hard times came, with low prices for sheep, they went down like a lot of ninepins. There was not in that whole country a solvent sheepman in three months after the passage of that Wilson bill.

The sheep industry, sick near unto death, was revived immediately upon the election of our honored McKinley, our greatest champion of the sheep industry, and when the Dingley tariff bill was enacted into law, in 1897, our flock masters, who had not entirely given up hope, struggling under burdens of debt, took up again with renewed energy the business they understood and loved. New capital and new men were attracted to the business, anticipating an advance in values.

Mr. Chairman, if during the past 14 years you have heard it said that the profits of sheep husbandry were unduly large, it was because of the legitimate enhancement of values and through speculation during such period.

I cited you to the ruinous loss in numbers and depreciation in value of our flocks during a period of adverse legislation. Consider now, if you please, the effect of following the McKinley and Blaine protective ideas with reference to reciprocal trade agreements. Having in 1897 but 36,818,000 sheep, with a valuation of $1.82 per head, a total value of $67,000,000, we had, in 1910, 57,216,000, with a unit value of $4.08 and a total value of $233,664,000, an increase in number of 50 per cent and in value of 248 per cent. In addition to the 20,398,000 live sheep gained, there were 5,000,000 increase in the number of sheep slaughtered. Gentlemen, these are facts that I trust you will carefully consider before you give your prestige to any bill that opens up a way for displanting our mutton and lambs. Continued protection to this important industry means a further rapid increase in our flocks, and it will be but a short time until we produce in the United States all the wool needed and largely augment our meat supply. The man who has his capital invested, much of it borrowed, knowing the close margin upon which he is working, looks upon the movement for a lowering of prices of his products—mutton and wool—with extreme apprehension; and even now, having a vivid remembrance of the ruin wrought by free wool, he is seeking safety from utter ruin by sale of his sheep. I have absolute knowledge that to-day the majority of the range sheep in the United States could be purchased at a discount of one-third of their value of a year ago. This means for the sheep grower that the profit earned above a very low interest on money invested during our period of prosperity has been wiped out and sheepmen again find themselves burdened with debts and their credit greatly curtailed.

Senator GALLINGER. The suggestion is now being made that the duty on wool should be reduced to 5 cents a pound. What do you think that will result in?

Mr. KNOLLIN. Senator, I think that would result in a rapid decrease in our flocks.

Senator GALLINGER. It would not be quite so bad as free wool; it would make some trouble for the sheepmen, would it?

Mr. KNOLLIN. If we built a fence to confine cattle, and we left off the top board that was necessary to keep those cattle from going over that fence, our fence would be of little value.

Senator HEYBURN. If you take one of the four wheels off a wagon, you would disable the wagon.

Mr. KNOLLIN. Not quite so bad as taking off the fifth wheel, but it is bad enough.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to read a letter addressed to Mr. McClure, secretary of our association—or, rather, it is addressed to the Congress of the United States, through Mr. McClure, our secretary:

To the Congress of the United States:
(Through Hon. W. S. McClure, secretary National Woolgrowers.)

George J. Currin & Sons have the second largest sheep and wool plant in Morrow County, Oreg. We have owned and conducted this plant since 1904; our concern involves 20,000 acres of deeded land and 12,000 sheep. We are in debt about one-third the value of this property. We have put the savings of two generations of pioneer life, since 1845, in here. In the first of these years we were enabled to accumulate some means and add to and make our concern what it is in land and sheep; under ordinary circumstances we ought to be able to make some money now, but with the added expense of summer range, the high price of competent help, and the high price of living, we will be unable to do so. In 1910, a year of ordinary sales—not up to the average—we sold off our place in yearling sheep and wool $30,000 worth. After hiring 15 to 30 men for every day in the year and paying all other expenses of a plant of our kind we barely had a margin of profit. This year, 1911, with prospects of putting wool on the free list and the kindred feeling of the sheep interests, we are compelled now, in April, 1911, to sell yearling mixed sheep for $2 per head, while one year ago the same quality yearlings readily brought $3.50 per head. One year ago the average price of our quality of wool sold here in the fleece for 15 cents.

The prospects to-day are that this year's clip will sell at one-third less in price than last year, and, in fact, there are no buyers in sight at any price.

The Congress can readily see where the sheep and wool business has gone out here in Oregon in one year with the simple agitation of the putting of wool on the free list. If you or any set of living men can calculate how we can stay in the business and live—with high labor (for we can not cut wages when only the very best that money will hire will answer our purpose), high living expense, and high taxes—you can do more than humanity in these parts have been able to do. We are anxiously awaiting the termination of this agitation of the tariff question. Meantime we are offering our lands for sale at the minimum price, and we are willing, with the present prospects in view, to go out of the business. But until such time as we can close out our affairs we, the three of us, with all we have put into this sheep business and the chance of losing it all through this depression, absolutely expect to work for nothing.

Very respectfully, yours,
GEO. J. CURRIN & SONS,
Heppner, Morrow County, Oreg.

APRIL 26, 1911.

Gentlemen, I could fill a volume with just such expressions from men that are engaged in the business.

Sheep growing, having a valuation in 1910 of over $233,000,000, and represented and owned by about 785,000 men, should be of importance enough in itself to make the industry worth preserving. However, if its rights of existence are dependent upon something more than intrinsic value, I can cite to you many reasons of great importance.

From personal experience and knowledge of the West, I do not hesitate to assert that sheep husbandry has advanced that vast domain in wealth a quarter of a century. The men who have been and who are to-day developing the West are the home builders. In the early days, when mining and cattle growing predominated, towns were small and far between. It has been said of the first railroads that were built that they seemed like bridges thousands of miles long, connecting the fertile spots between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. The development of this vast region is one of the marvels of all ages. It commenced, as we know, when the man with the plow came. At first progress was slow, discouraging to stay, impossible to leave. There was land everywhere, natural grasses, flowers, and weeds, virtually free for the man who could utilize them. Following the pioneers came the sheep. They for a time subsisted upon the natural grasses and browsed the year round, but it was soon found that it was more profitable to feed during the winter months than to take chances of heavy losses. The sheepmen became the buyers of the products of the farmers, the farmer and the flockmaster working hand in hand, frequently the flockmaster becoming also a cultivator of the soil and the farmer also a flockmaster as well. By this happy alliance grasses that had for ages flourished and died or been consumed by buffaloes and wild horses became converted into money, and so it has continued until the present time. I myself have bought the farmers' product—corn, oats, and hay—in Kansas and Nebraska at from 10 cents to 75 cents per bushel for the grain and from $1.50 to $10 per ton for hay.

When transportation became convenient and cheaper and the East developed her great manufacturing industries and required food supplies, the Middle States were prepared—and sheep husbandry, mind you, had been of untold benefit in this preparation—so when the products of the farm became too valuable for profitable use by the sheepmen they followed on after the man with the plow—westward. The plains lands of Colorado, moistened by the waters of the snow-capped peaks of her mountains and kissed by the warmth of perpetual sunshine, yielded bountifully to the husbandman, and soon he found himself in the same position as were the farmers in the earlier days in Kansas and Nebraska, possessed of surplus products and without a market.

In Colorado, I myself have bought alfalfa hay at from $2 to $8 per ton; wheat and barley at from 55 cents to $1.25 per hundredweight. These extreme low prices prevailed in the latter eighties and early nineties, but with the growth of the sheep-feeding industry in Colorado—for several years past there having been fed in that State about 1,000,000 sheep and lambs a year—the Colorado farmer is insured a stable market for his hay and his grain.

Gentlemen, it is little less than a crime that the feeders of sheep and lambs scattered now throughout the East and West and the Middle States, should make a loss on this last winter's feeding, conservatively estimated at $6,600,000. There is no question but what the agitation for free wool and mutton is largely accountable for this disastrous loss. Do you think—permit me to ask—that these serious losses will encourage and perpetuate the production of mutton? Most surely not.

On the other hand, I know many men who are completely discouraged and who say that as long as they must take chances of ruinous markets, caused by needless and thoughtless agitation, they will never again feed a sheep.

In confirmation of my opinion, I will read a letter from Senator W. H. Drake, of Fort Collins, Colo. Senator Drake has fed a great many lambs and sheep for 20 years. He is a man well posted on affairs and competent to judge of the effect of adverse legislation.

He was State senator for two terms and member of the State board of agriculture for a number of years and has given much of his time and worked hard for the upbuilding of the agricultural resources of Colorado.

FORT COLLINS, COLO., May 11, 1911.

Mr. S. W. MCCLURE.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter received and contents noted. I am very sorry that I can not come and testify before this committee. The truth is that I fed 43,000 lambs this winter and lost so much money that I can not even spare the time.

The thought that the Democrats were going to take the tariff off wool has cost my partners and myself between forty and fifty thousand dollars this winter. If Congress admits frozen meats free it will ruin both the grower and feeder. Our rich Colorado alfalfa lands will depreciate one-half in value in almost no time.

I further believe they are determined to do this and that no amount of argument will do any good. It will be necessary to establish free-soup houses in every block in the United States before people will change their minds. When they do we will have another period of 30 or 40 years of prosperity under Republican rule. That is after they get tired of soup.

Yours, truly,
W. A. DRAKE.

Mr. Chairman, along in January I met Senator Drake and he showed me some pictures. He had just returned from a trip in Canada—through the Province of Alberta—and he had several pictures of steers that he found grazing up there in the open country, and the pictures show, and Senator Drake says it is true, that those steers were in fine condition, almost good enough at that time for export purposes. Senator Drake was so much taken with that country that, having in mind that possibly the markets of the United States would be open to the products of Canada, he bought some land up there, bought it very cheap, land that can be irrigated, that cost him one-fifth of what his lands are worth out at Fort Collins, Colo. He looked up the matter of buying sheep in this country—lambs—and taking them up to that country, feeding them, and returning them to the Chicago market, and he found that he could do this: He could buy lambs in Montana, take them into that country, buy feed to fatten them, and return them to Chicago, with a shorter haul and consequently at a smaller freight rate, at less cost than he handles his business at the present time, going into New Mexico, Idaho, or Oregon and buying his lambs and feeding them in Colorado. He says, "I have my interests up there, and if they don't want me producing food products and employing labor in the United States I can go to Canada and do the work up there," and that bears out the statement that Senator NELSON made and Mr. Hagenbarth has made, and I could go on and name a great number of men I know, not drifters, if you please, but men, who, like Senator NELSON said, in the early days were accustomed to building their cabin out on the Government land with the hope that in time they might afford a more comfortable home. We can not get Government lands here at the present that are situated convenient to transportation, but there are millions and millions of acres in Canada ripe and ready for the husbandman, and Canada is inviting us to come up there and help in their development.

I stated that civilization had been advanced in the great West by the sheep industry. Had it not been for the sheepman employing at times the ranchmen and their sons and providing them with a market for their hay and grains, it would have been impossible for them to have stayed.

The men with the plow and the men with the shepherd's crook, gentlemen, are the men who believe in founding homes and concerning themselves with the God-given blessings, mothers and children, churches and schools, and I defy any man to point to a considerable area of the great West where the creation of wealth and the advancement of civilizing influences have not been accelerated, if you please, by sheep husbandry. I think it would be true to say the same of New England and the eastern Middle States, for in the early days the pioneers therein were assisted in surrounding themselves with comforts by profits from woolgrowing.

I have still another very important reason to present. We need the sheep, gentlemen, for their industrial habits. They gather, when given the opportunity, from the waste places on our farms, in the fertile valleys of our mountains, from the hills, the rugged mountains, and from the desert, not only sustenance for their own living, but they provide food and raiment for the comfort of mankind and increase the productiveness of the soil on which they graze.

In Utah and Nevada and part of Idaho and Oregon we have what is known as the desert country, land that up until the present time it has not been possible to provide water for irrigation, and there is practically no rainfall in the winter in that country. There is a little rain in the spring that starts the grass, and it grows sparsely, and there are hundreds of thousands of sheep taken out on those deserts in the winter, depending upon the snow in the foothills and the mountains and that which sometimes falls on the desert for water. There is no other animal that can live out on those deserts and gather in the feed that grows there, excepting the sheep.

Following the policy of retaining our home markets for our home products and the protection of our labor, we have outstripped our neighbors on the north and all other countries of the world in the development of our natural resources. Continuing this policy, we will not only be able to continue feeding our own people at reasonable prices, but we will also help, as we have and are now doing, to feed millions of people living under less-favored conditions.

I said the cost of mutton to the consumer had not been burdensome, and in confirmation of that statement I want to introduce into this record the average price of sheep and lamb sold on the Chicago market, and the Chicago market governs prices practically in all other markets, during 1910, as compared with a period covering six years, and I would like to have the tables, as shown on page 73, printed into the record. These tables are compiled by the Chicago Drovers' Journal, and I think when these figures are looked into no man can say that the high cost of living can be accounted for by the high cost of production, nor by the price the producer obtains for his products.

Monthly average prices (per 100 pounds) of sheep and lambs at Chicago during 1910, with yearly comparisons.

I have a statement I will file that gives detailed information as to the cost, and also as to the amount of money that is invested to grow a pound of wool, and detailed statement of expenses.

The cost of shipping our wool to Boston and selling it will run from 18 to 22 per cent of the gross proceeds, and about the same on our sheep. That is an expense that the grower of sheep and cattle out in the western countries can not get away from. In the future freights may become reduced as the tonnage becomes heavier over the railroads and they get their roadbeds and equipment in shape to handle it cheaper. Then we may benefit somewhat from that, but it would not lower our cost materially.

I desire, finally, to illustrate the possibilities of sheep growing, and for the purpose we will take the State whose agricultural possibilities have been so thoroughly exploited by the Hon. F. D. Coburn—Kansas.

East of the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers, with the farming States of Kansas and Nebraska added, we have about 19,000,000 sheep, one-third of the entire number in the United States. In this territory Ohio leads, having 3,110,000 sheep, or 76 to the square mile; Florida, one-third larger than Ohio, has 1½ sheep to the square mile, while Kansas, a State well adapted to sheep husbandry and twice the size of Ohio, has less than 3 sheep to the square mile. In this entire district we average 1 sheep to 47 acres. If Kansas, Nebraska, and Iowa had the same number of sheep per square mile as Ohio, they, with Ohio, would contain 19,000,000 sheep, the number now in this entire section.

Illustrating further, by comparison with other countries, France and Spain, each having an area equal to about four-fifths that of Texas, have, respectively, 17,500,000 and 13,750,000 of sheep; Texas has 2,000,000; Bulgaria, with an area a little less than Kentucky, has 3,000,000 sheep; Kentucky has 1,000,000; Greece, that very small country, which we associate with art and literature rather than shepherds and their focks, has 4,500,000 sheep on its 25,000 square miles; West Virginia, having the same area as Greece, has but 625,000; England and Scotland have 304 sheep to the square mile, whereas Kansas, as I have already mentioned, has less than 3 to the square mile.

Now, Mr. Chairman, desiring to stock the State of Kansas with 60 sheep to each one-fourth section, after bringing into that State all the sheep from the other States in this eastern territory, we would be obliged to bring from Texas their 2,000,000 sheep, and assuming that it would be practical to stock Kansas with sheep on the same basis per square mile as Great Britain, having brought all the sheep from east of the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers and from Nebraska and Texas, we have left enough land untrodden by the golden hoof to care for the sheep of Colorado and Wyoming.

Having placed 20,000,000 sheep in Kansas, we need not, I think, feel alarmed about providing for their feed, having 2 acres for every sheep.

In 1909 Kansas produced 147,000,000 bushels of corn, 25,500,000 bushels of oats, besides millions of bushels of other grains that are suitable for feeding sheep; 350,000,000 tons of hay, and as much more sorghum, kaffir corn, milo maize, and corn fodder—twice the quantity necessary for properly feeding the sheep.

If you have held in mind my quotation from the 1910 report of the Secretary of Agriculture that "the value of farm products has increased 186 per cent in 11 years," you will see that sheep have done their part toward making up this great increase in our agricultural wealth.

Gentlemen, if the products of the farms and ranches are reduced so that we can not get a fair profit out of them what will be the result? There will be a still greater flocking to the cities of the people from the farms, and history will repeat itself, and the farmers of the Middle West and the ranchmen of the far West will take up industrial enterprises, as has already been done in the Eastern States. "He is not compelled to dump his crops on the market at time of harvest." Why? Because "he has had a period of prosperity." With profits made, and, mind you, made legitimately, he has not only "paid off mortgages," but by the wealth created "banks have been established," and should prices be lower than cost of production he garners his harvest and holds until he can secure fair returns for his labor. Is it not better by far, Mr. Chairman, for the consumer, as well as for the producer, that this condition obtain? For, mark you, there is no record of successful corners in food supplies when the farmers' granaries and feed lots are full of grain and live stock.

Effect follows cause; and when this desired condition exists, the farmer and ranchman will furnish a regular supply to meet the demand of consumption. On the other hand, when prices are low and times hard, the harvest can not be garnered, but must be sold regardless of price, and this is the speculator's opportunity; he buys at prices so low that he can export enough of the crop to insure him a large profit on the balance by holding until the consumer must have it, and it is under such conditions that corners are successfully run. The bills we have under consideration, gentlemen, propose to place in competition with foreign countries the products of the farmer and ranchman, the only industries of our country impossible to trustify.

Mr. Chairman, I thank you for your attention to the statements that I have made. I have aimed in this preparation to be consistent. I am convinced, as I have stated, that the prosperity of this country depends greatly upon the prosperity of our farmers and ranchmen. If we are going to build, we must lay our plans, we must gather the material about us, and in order to do this and to employ workmen to do it we must have capital, and just to that extent that capital is forced out of the farming and ranch industry the industry will retrogress. As I have said, Mr. Chairman, I have some tables prepared here that will bear out the statements I have made with reference to the percentage of the gross proceeds that we obtain for our products that goes into freight transportation charges and other necessary expense.

(The following tables were here submitted by Mr. Knollin:)

NOTE.—Based on average number of sheep on hand a full year. During the 12-year-5-months period we handled 332,376 head. Of this number there were inventoried the first of each fiscal year, or bought during the year, 244,059, and the difference represents the lambs raised. Some of these sheep were not on hand a full year, but equaled having on hand for the full period (lambs born not included) 221,142 head, which number is used in arriving at averages.

Detailed and classified statement of maintenance of flocks, based on average number of sheep on hand a full year: During the 10-year period we handled 80,711 head. Of this number there were inventoried the first of each fiscal year or bought during the year 51,113 head, and the difference represents the lambs raised. Some of these sheep were not on hand a full year, but equaled having on hand for the full period (lambs born not included) 47,542 head, which number is used in arriving at averages.

On basis of price we obtained for this wool Soda Springs, Idaho, 17.77 cents per pound, adding freight 2.05 cents per pound, and selling charges 1.5 cents per pound, and on a basis of 58 per cent shrinkage, this wool would cost the manufacturer 50.76 cents per pound clean Boston, plus the cost of scouring.

On a basis of cost of production 20.79 cents per pound, adding freight and selling charges of 3.55 cents per pound, 58 cents per pound Boston clean, plus securing charges in both cases.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, Mr. Hagenbarth, who is a native son of Idaho and who has developed into one of the largest stock raisers and one of the best business men in the State, has taken pains to bring together every item of cost and every item of income from the sheep-raising business, and I have taken from the testimony which he gave before the Senate committee such parts and such tables as refer to and completely illustrate this question. He says, in summing it up, that they are not making 6 per cent, nor have they done so for some time. It is all attributable to the disturbed condition and to the threatened changes in the schedules. I ask also to insert Mr. Hagenbarth's statement as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, permission to do so is granted.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Now, reciprocity as affecting sheep has got to be, from our standpoint, more or less theoretical; the known facts are all on one side. In the United States the industry is as old as the civilization; we have nearly 57,000,000 sheep—we did have a year ago, but I do not think we have that many by 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 now. Canada at the present time has less than 3,000,000 sheep; but with the conditions of climate, wages, ranging, feeding, transportation, and everything but markets practically the same, and with civilization advanced as our own, why is it that Canada has only 3,000,000 and we have 57,000,000? There must be a cause where there is an effect. Is it because she has not had reciprocity for the past few years? With reciprocity, would the conditions change and would she enter upon the proper development of her ideal condition for the fostering of this industry at our expense? Why, gentlemen, the State of Montana last year had 5,747,000 head of sheep.

What is the difference between Montana and Canada? It is simply an imaginary line, an imaginary line, and that is the only difference in God's world; northern Montana and southern Canada are identical, yet the State of Montana has twice as many sheep as the entire Dominion of Canada. Now, there is the effect; what is the cause? That is for anybody else to answer. We certainly can reason back to the cause without much trouble. Now, in the United States we find, as a matter of fact we claim, not merely as a coincidence as some of our economic opponents will set up, that the industry has thrived or languished just as the tariff was high or low. Now, if this is true, the facts seem to bear it out—it may be a coincidence, but I do not claim that it is—is not it fair to presume if we take the tariff off of mutton, sheep are liable to be low? That is our view as sheepmen.

* * * * * * *

Now, I have another statement here showing the annual cost for winter feeding sheep and cattle, and these are simply digests by years taken from our books, and if this committee wants them, I also have them here, or can get them without a great deal of trouble, except they would be compelled to go over every item and every detail that went into this table. They are taken directly from our books, not by myself, but by the bookkeepers—the cost of winter; that is, for winter feeding. Now, the labor was $1.12. Another table here is the average expense per annum per head for grazing, which was $38,000 for a period of five years; taxes, $41,653. The interest which we paid, the interest on the sheep, at 6 per cent, figures $127,615.22, and general expenses, $123,386, making a total of 73 cents per head for these items. We have $1.12, 58 cents, and 73 cents, making a total of $2.43 per head as being our cost here, not including interest on investment, and horses, and lands, and wagons, and all the paraphernalia that we have to have for conducting our business.

Senator CLARK. You have that for a period of five years?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. Yes.

Senator CLARK. I had a letter from an ex-governor of our State a few days ago who was interested in sheep raising, who said that it cost them between two and three times as much per head to run the sheep per annum now as it did five years ago. Has that been your experience up in Idaho?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. Yes; on certain costs. Now, I think I have right here some of these very items and details that go into that. Shall I answer that now?

Senator WILLIAMS. No. I just wanted to know if that was the fact.

Mr. HAGENBARTH. That is a fact, and I will give you some details as briefly as I can. Now, here is another table showing per head cost per annum and the per head receipts per annum, showing that we have received from mutton and wool, over a period of five years, $3.1666; and our total cost, including interest on the investment all the way through, is $3.2884 per head, showing a net loss per annum of $0.1218. Now, that fact is absolute, and I can take an oath to it; but, mind you, that would include 6 per cent interest. We have made almost 6 per cent, and I have often congratulated myself that we have done that well.

Senator WILLIAMS. What is your net gain or net loss?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. How is that?

Senator WILLIAMS. If you take 6 per cent out, what have you gained?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. If you take the charge for interest out, we would not have gained anything at all. We have not quite gained 6 per cent; we could not take the interest out.

Senator WILLIAMS. I know; but you allowed that on that 6 per cent interest on the investment.

Mr. HAGENBARTH. Yes.

Senator WILLIAMS. Take that charge against yourself out, what would you make? What would your net percentage be? Your loss is predicated upon charging 6 per cent as a part of the cost.

Mr. HAGENBARTH. We make 5.62 per cent.

Senator WILLIAMS. That is your former statement?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. Yes.

Senator WILLIAMS. All right. That I understood at the time.

Senator STONE. Did you say that the actual cost for running a sheep ranch, raising sheep, was from two and one-half to three times as much now as it was five years ago?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. No, Senator; not quite. As long as that question is up I will go into it.

Senator STONE. That would be rather remarkable.

Mr. HAGENBARTH. I will give you the exact facts.

Senator STONE. I would like to ask, before you begin, I understood Senator CLARK to say some ex-governor of his State has written that it is now costing from two and one-half to three times as much to raise sheep as it did five years ago.

Senator CLARK. To run the sheep per annum.

Senator STONE. Well, to run the sheep. I will put it in that form. That still narrows it and makes it less confusing—to run the sheep.

Mr. HAGENBARTH. Yes.

Senator STONE. He states that it costs from two and one-half to three times as much per annum as it did five years ago. Now, what are the items that make that increased cost?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. The ordinary herders to-day are costing us around an average of $70 per month. We found it necessary to cut the wages this spring, for good and sufficient reasons—we had to do it.

Senator STONE. What do you pay them?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. $50 a month cash at the end of every month for their labor, and we keep them besides.

Senator STONE. You estimate that at $50?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. Don't estimate at all. I am telling you what it costs.

Senator STONE. Well, the actual cost is $50?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. Yes, sir.

Senator STONE. What did you pay your sheep herders five years ago?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. The cheapest five years ago?

Senator STONE. I am not talking about the cheapest. I am talking about the same kind of herders you are now paying $50.

Mr. HAGENBARTH. There has been a gradual raise. The average would be about $40 five years ago.

Senator STONE. How much difference was there in the actual cost of board per month?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. I can not tell you that exactly. I can, right down to the minutest detail, by taking the time to get the data.

Senator STONE. Now, we have a difference in cost of wages paid to herders of approximately $5 a month more now than five years ago?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. Yes.

Senator STONE. You are not able to state the difference in the cost of board? What other item of cost?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. Well, in order to relieve the Senator on that point I will make a statement. The board will cost us just in the same proportion with the general advance in the cost of living that has taken place, cost us just that much more. Now, that would amount, in my opinion, to about—during five years—perhaps 20 per cent of an increase in five years.

Senator STONE. It costs you 20 per cent more now to board a herder than it did five years ago?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. Yes; that is correct.

Senator STONE. Well, that would be about $4 a month.

Mr. HAGENBARTH. Just around that, between $4 and $5.

Senator STONE. What is that due to, that extra cost?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. One of our principal items of extra cost——

Senator STONE. No; what makes it cost you 20 per cent more now to feed and board a herder than it did five years ago?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. I was just coming to that point. One of the principal items is the higher cost of bacon and lard; that is one of our great items of expense; we use a great deal of bacon and lard.

Senator STONE. On the range?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. On the range. Then there has been an advance in the cost of flour; and then there has been the advanced costs of that sort all along the line. Now, there is only one thing that we get cheaper than formerly, and that is condensed milk; everything else is costing us more.

Senator STONE. Well, the average aggregate increase, then, is approximately 20 per cent, or one-fifth, more?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. During five years.

Senator STONE. Well, comparing the present with five years ago?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. Yes.

Senator STONE. Now, we have got the cost of living and the difference in wages. What else?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. Now, hay. Hay will cost us about 300 per cent more. Hay fed to the sheep for winter feeding to-day will cost us 58 cents per head as against 10 to 12 cents five years ago. Freight on lambs to the market, on mutton products, $182.50 per car as against $137.50.

Senator STONE. Do you exclude that in the running expense of ship?

Mr. HAGENBARTH. You asked me for the higher cost of sheep, why it cost more. We have certainly got to pay the freight the same as every other man who produces.

Senator STONE. Well, to go to the market, but I am talking of the cost of raising sheep on the ranch.

Mr. HAGENBARTH. Well, we have to figure the cost on the haul. We are selling our sheep, for we could not keep them out there forever.

Senator CLARK. My correspondent was speaking about the annual cost upon the range of running the sheep, without reference to the range.

Mr. HAGENBARTH. Well, confined strictly to the range. Well, the herders, the labor, and the hay.

Senator STONE. We have that.

Mr. HAGENBARTH. And the hay.

Senator STONE. We have that and the board.

Mr. HAGENBARTH. Well, they are about the principal items of expense in running the sheep.

Senator STONE. Well, you have not figured that out in your statement to anything like two and a half to three times as great.

Mr. HAGENBARTH. I did not make any statement of that sort.

Senator CLARK. He did not agree with me.

Senator STONE. Then I misunderstood him. I did understand him to say that was correct.

Senator CLARK. He said he would not go that far.

Mr. HAGENBARTH. I can tell you why there is a discrepancy.

Senator STONE. I thought you did say that that was correct.

Mr. HAGENBARTH. If the notes show that I stated that it is from two and a half to three times greater, it was a misapprehension and a mistake, because I have the figures right here to disprove it.

Senator STONE. Well, I do not care to go further into that.

Mr. HAGENBARTH. I won't say about Wyoming; that might be true, because the conditions might be different in Wyoming than they are in Idaho—entirely different. Now, there is another statement here, which is a tabulated statement of the cost of production of wool and mutton for five years, showing the results of handling 454,337 stock sheep, the product of which was 225,807 head of mutton, weighing 16,009,198 pounds and worth $799,478.17; the total production for the five years, 445,850 fleeces of wool, weighing 2,967,127 pounds, worth $622,253.63. The net results of the operation shown by this total was a cost on mutton of $0.0507 per pound, for which was received $0.0497 per pound, showing that mutton production failed to give us a return of 6 per cent interest on the capital investment.

Now, for over a period of years it gives all of the cost in the digest form. I want to explain one thing, however: That the percentage of production of mutton as being 56.3 per cent, and of wool as being 43.7 per cent, on the total production, was based on the respective proportions contributed by either wool or mutton to the total gain in our business; that is the way that was arrived at, and you will observe that, too. That makes it easier to know where that statement was taken from.

I have here a statement which I thought I had taken out, because I did not want to burden the committee with it, but I thought possibly Senator WILLIAMS might be interested in it. It shows our loss and gain by years for five years.

Senator WILLIAMS. That is what I want.

Mr. HAGENBARTH. You want it for 10 years?

Senator WILLIAMS. I want to know your financial condition now, and what it was 10 years ago.

Mr. HAGENBARTH. All right. I misapprehended.

Senator WILLIAMS. Then, I will consider the figures from that with this, showing the losses and gains.

Mr. HAGENBARTH. I submit a general statement of loss and gains, showing a total investment for the five years of $9,070,741.27, or an average annual investment of $1,814,148.25. This statement includes, among other charges, a total of 6 per cent interest on the entire investment in our live-stock business, the final summing up of which shows an annual loss per annum of $5,828.75. In other words, the business failed by that amount to pay the legitimate annual charge of 6 per cent for use of capital invested. Now, in explanation, I want to say these figures may seem large, and for fear we may be thought guilty of the crime of being a large corporation, I want to say that our company, though a corporation, was incorporated for convenience only.

Our company is owned entirely by those who labor on the range, and there are no outside stockholders drawing dividends. My brother and my mother and myself own the business, and have owned it since my father died. We have in addition 8 or 10 of the men who are working for us who have been with us from 15 to 20 years, to whom we have given stock, allowed them to work it out, and given them an interest in the business. My father began the live-stock business 25 years ago in a humble way, putting about $26,000 in the business in the beginning and from time to time invested additional capital, and during the 25 years we have paid but four dividends, and they were small ones, and we have only paid one dividend within the last 10 years. All other earnings from the business have gone back into investment, whatever they were; our 6 per cent, 5 per cent, or 8 per cent, or 4 per cent per annum has gone right back into the business.

At the present time we own in fee simple 28,065 acres of land, the book value it has practically cost us, plus the expenses of such improvements as we have made on it, being $448,716.85. We found it necessary to take money out of our business at other places and put into this land in order that we might continue in the sheep business; there were not men enough in that country at that time raising hay, in the Snake River Valley, where we are located, to provide us with hay, so we could be assured of a supply in the winter, and we found it necessary to put money into land in order to get raising areas and in order to have an assurance in the shape of hay against these hard winters. We had to do that or go out of business. The actual value to-day of those lands and water rights would be considerably higher owing to the unearned increment, the advances in the country, and of course the sheep business gets no credit for that. We have leased for grazing purposes from the States of Idaho and Montana 42,120 acres of land-grazing privileges from the Forest Service, for which we must pay. We feed annually 8,000 to 10,000 tons of hay. This hay requires labor, either on the part of ourselves or others, to produce, and we have an average number of employees on the monthly pay roll of 199 men, whose average wages are $57.77, not including keep.

The salary account for general management for handling this investment and handling this business is $7,200 a year, and in order that you may understand our labor charge is not padded I will state the total drawn by my brother and myself for managing this business is $300 each, and that is more than we have ever drawn until two years ago, and we thought then we would have our salaries raised $50 per month, but I feel that we will have to reduce them this fall. These costs are not estimates; they are taken direct from our books and summarized for the sake of brevity, but there is an unlimited amount of record, down to the canceled checks and the vouchers. As I told you, our accounts are divided in 155 accounts, keeping individually, as nearly as we can, every item that enters into the cost. The net results of these costs I have given you as above.

As an evidence that Canada anticipates just such a condition as this, let me quote from page 98 of the secretary's report:

"There were 17 townships along the international boundary line southeast of Wood Mountain, 11 townships southwest of Swiftwater, and between 60 and 70 townships north of the Canadian Pacific Railway set apart for sheep grazing. Quite an area in those districts can yet be leased for sheep."

In Salt Lake City, about a month ago, I found the cards of Messrs. William A. Dryden and W. T. Ritch, both marked "Department of Agriculture, Canadian Government, Ottawa, Canada, Live-Stock Branch." I met these gentlemen in Chicago whilst I was en route to Washington. Upon inquiry, found their mission to be a study of conditions in America and elsewhere, with a view to improving and extending the outlet for an increased production of Canadian mutton.

Now, they were very frank in their statements that they thought it would be a grand thing for the wool industry of Canada if they could come to the United States market, and it would grow and develop by leaps and bounds, and that probably they could successfully grow sheep and cheaply produce them. The thing they lack is a market. Their own population is not one-tenth of what ours is, and there is no inducement for them to grow because they can not compete with the frozen meat themselves up there, but still they can skin us down here, they having a new virgin country.

* * * * * * *

Mr. HEYBURN. Here is a suggestion that I find among my papers which is applicable to the statement of both of these men, that the sheep business is not upon a satisfactory basis. That means that men will not continue in the business and that the country will have to look somewhere else for the commodity which they produce. I read from this memorandum:

DUTIES MUST BE HIGH ENOUGH TO COVER WIDE FLUCTUATION ABROAD.

The wide and severe fluctuations here and abroad must be provided for in tariff schedules, otherwise there would be times when the importations would be so great it would take years to dispose of the products imported, thus displacing our own manufactures for a time too long to recover from. As an illustration, the importation of wool particularly, during the Wilson-bill period, was so great it took us at least four to five years to use up the importation of these wools that flooded the country at that time. The low fluctuation period found wools selling quite low at that time abroad and led to speculation on a wide scale.

I happened to find to-day some figures suggestive of that point. I find here a list of the importations into the United States of shoddy, which is the substitute in hard times for wool. It can be made to look like wool, and yet it is not wool, as we understand the term, or as it is grown upon our ranches.

Under the McKinley law for the three years, 1891 to 1894, the imports of shoddy into the United States were only 908,923 pounds. That is a very small item; it is insignificant as compared with the business. But under the four years of the Wilson law the importations of shoddy—now bear this closely in mind—were 86,263,030 pounds. That is what the Wilson law substituted for the wool of this country.

Not only so, but the evil committed then and there continued until that 86,000,000 pounds of shoddy had been absorbed by manufacture, worn out, and discarded. It was not only that they stopped the production of wool, but they brought in a substitute that sat in the seat of prosperity for years after the Wilson law had been repealed.

The total importation of shoddy in the last 13 years has been only 6,751,000 pounds, as against eighty-six million and odd hundred thousand pounds during the three years of the Wilson law with free trade in wool. That is a very serious consideration. It is the substitution in our market of an inferior article; and I have never seen an item that so completely demonstrated the evil of the substitution of foreign goods in our market as the table of the importations of shoddy.

Mr. President, there is another curious fact in connection with this matter. I have taken the table of the price of raw wool in Boston. In 1896 the price was 16 cents; in 1910 it was 29 cents.

The price has fluctuated, and the table is interesting in that respect, in the light of the suggestion I made a few moments ago as to the necessity of having any legislation sufficiently above and within protective lines to cover fluctuations. Just notice the fluctuations in the Boston market in raw wool—in 1896, 16 cents; in 1900, 34 cents. That shows the effect of the Dingley tariff law on the price of wool. It not only shut off the importations, which had doubled in spite of the importation and substitution of shoddy, but it restored a condition of prosperity in the wool business that enabled those men to get on their feet and to again begin producing wool. You can not put a flock of sheep in the market of production under four or five years.

The sheep did not remain back somewhere where you could go and drive them to the front again. They had gone out of existence. In 1907 the price of wool was 32. In 1908, 30; in 1909, 35; and in 1910, 29.

Now, I take that from Bradstreet's Journal. I have no doubt at all it is absolutely correct. Those are the Boston prices of wool.

Mr. DIXON. What grade of wool is the Senator quoting?

Mr. HEYBURN. Raw wool.

Mr. DIXON. What grade of raw wool?

Mr. HEYBURN. That is the standard quotation.

Mr. DIXON. Higher washed or Western Territory?

Mr. HEYBURN. That is western wool. I am speaking of western wool.

Mr. DIXON. Washed or unwashed?

Mr. HEYBURN. I have that table available, and I can go into it, but at the expense of more time than I care to occupy now. And these arguments are frittered away by such trivialities as that. I am speaking of the standard price of unwashed wool, according to Bradstreet's quotations on the Boston market.

During that same time scoured wool in Boston went from 48 in 1896 to 85 in 1910. Let us see how things move in unison. Take cotton during the same time. See what effect these times had on cotton. In 1896 it was 7.43, and in 1910 it was 14.45. It will be observed that the fluctuations were just about on a par with those of wool. The United States produces about one-eighth of the wool of the world, and the competing countries are those that are not settling up and civilizing as rapidly as our own. They are retaining their ranges and the conveniences of wool production and we are losing them. Of course, with a business made surely profitable, comfortably certain against continual disturbance, we could build up the wool-raising business in this country to the market of our uses or our consumption. But the inducements are not sufficient. There is nothing in the whole commercial world that is so continuously attacked and threatened as wool production. There is not a Congress, there is not a message, there is not a speech, in which some one is not proposing to change the duty or the commercial status of wool.

This argument to which we have listened this afternoon does not please me. It was strongly presented, but the presentation of it was against the wool interests. It was calculated to demonstrate that we could get along as well as we are now getting along, and maintain the boasted prosperity of this time, with an actual protection of only about 7 cents. It is not friendly to the wool interests to urge that doctrine. In my judgment it is not sound. The exception in the wool schedule of skirtings could readily be adjusted by transferring it to another section of the schedule. Why is it necessary to point out these evils, real or imaginary, unless you have a remedy? Is there a man interested in the prosperity of the wool industry, either raw or manufactured, who does not realize that it is running on too slight a margin, and that it is liable to frequent disturbance and in continual danger of destruction? That being the case, why should anyone come in here with an apology for a fraud that has really, according to the argument, reduced the actual duty on wool?

In many instances this question is discussed from an erroneous standpoint. Senators spend time juggling with figures here as to the price of this and that, and lose sight of the real question, which is, Shall the industry remain in the country at all? because if it does not remain no one is interested in whether it is profitable or otherwise. If the sheep industry disappears, and the production of wool shrinks at the rate that it did under the free-trade régime, it is not material to know the relation that the imports bear to the exports, or what would have happened had something else occurred. I am only dealing with it from the standpoint of maintaining and retaining this industry in the country. You can not compel a man to remain in a business by arguing to him that he ought to make a profit. The man himself will be the judge of that. If the Senate were to go in a body and insist that this business would be profitable the man upon whom whose energy and investments it depended for its maintenance would laugh at you. He would say, "Where is your pocketbook? Who is going to be the loser; you or I?" That is what he would say to you; and yet we waste weeks and months here in discussing how tolerable it may be to this man to skirt along the shores of failure and ultimately to be overwhelmed.

You figure that they all can produce wool at one price, and under one condition. My mind goes right to flocks and herds in the country with which I am quite familiar, and I see one man back 30 miles from the railroad. I have his statement here. His wool must be hauled to the railroad on wagons. The provisions consumed by his horses and his employees must be hauled from the railroad. The items of expenses incident to conducting a large business off the railroad are not necessary to be taken into consideration by the man whose sheep pens and shearing places are at the railroad, whose wool is carried upon the grappling hook from where it is baled to the platform by rolling it. You can not make a duty under which the second man can barely live and make what somebody else would call a reasonable profit, and force it upon the man who has extraordinary conditions to confront him. And yet that has been the whole effort here for weeks, not only in regard to wool, but in regard to everything else. You are acting and talking on the assumption that all men can produce commodities at as low a price as the man who is best equipped and located for their production. Someone has said we would compel the factories and mills of the country to come up to the most modern standard of equipment. You would. You would compel every man to be rich enough to do it.

If you had passed that loan-shark bill that we were discussing yesterday he possibly might manage to live. I can think of no other conditions under which anybody would survive except the man who could put in a factory equipped with watch-spring steel and the policy of large expenditures. You are going to make the other men go out of business and tear down their factories, forsooth, because they are not the most expensive that can be maintained. I think not. I would take the other man as the basis, as the criterion. He is the man who needs the protection more than the other man, who can build these magnificent factories and equip them. It is the man who has the one that is builded with his own money and his own effort who is entitled to protection. He owns it. The other man is merely the president of a company, and the stockholders are supposed to own the property. To whom are you going to give the first right? Whose rights are you going to give first consideration to? Throughout all this discussion, in my judgment, there has been serious error in apprehension of the standpoint from which we must deal with the people. It is all the people. The poor man is entitled to at least the same consideration as the rich. The wildest mistake I ever saw in a political platform was that in the last Republican platform, which talked about a "reasonable margin of profit." I suppose the man with a highly expensive mill would perhaps manufacture and make a profit where the other man would make none, and that is applicable to this business.

There are a large number of people in the United States engaged in raising wool. The statistics say there are over a million farms upon which sheep raising is one of the industries. There are the people represented by that many farms interested in this business, and yet you spend your time here splitting hairs between the cost of producing fabrics in the mills in New England or elsewhere. They say, "Yes; let the American producer go out of business and we will get our wool from some other quarter." It is rather interesting to see.

There are 347,320,749 pounds of wool produced in North America. We only produce 328,110,749 pounds of it. There is a big margin. These mills suppose they will buy of these other producers, or of the producers of South America, with its 436,000,000, or Europe, with its 804,000,000, or Asia, with its 210,000,000, or Africa, with its 139,000,000, or Oceania, with its 756,000,000. They go on gaily assuming they will buy cheaper than they could buy from our people. Just as soon as those people find that we have no supply of our own they will make the price. They will not only make the price of wool, but they will make the price of cloth and make the cost of living, so far as it is affected by those things. They will make it not for busy, industrious, prosperous people, but they will make the price of those things for the man who lost his job by reason of the business that he had been engaged in being terminated. They will make the price for those people. They will make the price for the American who wears clothes and needs the products of the flocks, and they will make the price of the meat we eat. They will fix the price of his living.

Do you talk about the low cost of living, considered in connection with this question? You are proposing to destroy not only the opportunity of a livelihood through the wage-earning capacity of the person employed, but you are going to destroy the product of his labor.

I am old enough to have seen it accomplished once pretty effectually. I saw men hiring others to drive sheep off their land, because the sheep were worth nothing and were eating up what grew on the land. I saw in one season 35,000 sheep driven by my home camp to hunt pasture, because they were outlawed in the land where they belonged. They were driving them around hunting some place where there was no one at home and they could allow the sheep to eat. You will see it again, too.

Because, forsooth, they juggle figures and perpetrate a fraud in regard to the skirting proviso in the existing law, we must accept that fraud as the standard of our future life. Once get a fraud established and that is the end of it; it stays there; you are not allowed to disturb it. You could not amend, if you are going to amend, by simply transferring that provision to the next section of the bill or eliminating the proviso. No, we have gotten far from home in the discussion of this question. My only sympathy in this hour is with those who are going to follow it. I have listened patiently here, as much so as any Member of this body, for days and weeks to the discussion of this question. I do not suppose that I am going to shed any new light in the minds of those to whom I speak. I do not know that a man ought to say that kind of a thing; I think, perhaps, he should not; but I feel a little that way.

But, nevertheless, it will never be said that when the contest now pending is referred to in the future I sat here like an idiot and did not know any better than to think that the juggling of figures in regard to the technical affairs of weaving cloth constituted the consideration or discussion of this question. I am not speaking for those people. Make the wool industry prosperous, and you will make the woolen mill prosperous.

I have some data here that I found last night in regard to the number of mills that went out of business during that time. They went out of business because there was no market for their commodity.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Wyoming in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I am a new Senator in the Chamber. Will the Senator kindly inform the Senate who was responsible for that joker and the peculiar way in which it was drawn?

Mr. HEYBURN. That is another case of frittering away your time in doing a useless thing. What would it avail anybody to know who was responsible for it? I am not here to arraign this man or that who may have perpetrated a wrong, innocently or otherwise. That is no argument. Keep to the facts. The main question here is what are you going to do with one of the great industries of the country, not are you going to convict some man who was in Congress 20 years ago of being either a fool or a knave. You do not have to convict him of it. He has long since gone to his reward, and I hope his average was good.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. I was simply asking for information, in order that we may be on our guard in the future, if any matters of that kind are to be perpetrated upon the public. That was the purpose of my question.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, if that was done purposely, it was not as bad as the complete annihilation of the industry. It was doing it some injury, but it was not destroying it. Perhaps the Senator had in his mind the idea of giving his Democratic brethren of that day a little boost for their wisdom and casting some discredit upon the Republicans of that day, or even of this day. That does not affect the right or wrong of the question at all.

Mr. POMERENE. If to seek the truth——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield further to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. If to seek after the truth means what the Senator seems to indicate it does mean, I think we should pursue that inquiry further.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, there is some truth that is worth seeking after and some that is not. It is not worth while to spend any time to determine the result of two and two, nor is it worth while to spend any time to determine the mistake of those generations that have gone before us. All there is in the consideration of such deeds and such men is the good that they have done; nothing else. I never go beyond it.

Mr. President, I might be led on to open up this question, but I am not going to do it.

Here is another class of men who would go out of business to a large extent. In the State of Idaho we produced last year 1,473,000 tons of hay. Its value on the market was $13,257,000. That was fed to live stock.

Mr. BORAH. We have another hay producer now. Canada will furnish the hay now.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; and some of the border States and some of the other States that produce hay will probably realize that. But at this time I would merely call attention to the effect that this law would have upon this class of people. The injury here is twofold, or rather it presents two phases. You first destroy the market for this hay by destroying the flocks, and then, if you did not do that, you destroy the market by opening it to competition with Canada. Canada grows as good hay as we can. We know something about Canada. You can stand with one foot on each side of the line and both feet will rest upon the same character of possibilities.

But I merely called attention to that item. Not only will that hay grower be out of business and all the people who are engaged in it, but there is a large number of them who depend upon it for a livelihood. Hay will keep. I know stacks of hay in my State in preservation to my knowledge 7 and 8 years old; the hay is just as good as it was the day it was put up.

I undertook to count the number of stacks per mile looking out of a car window coming up one of our valleys two or three years ago, and they were so numerous I did not have time to count them between going in and going out of the mile. That is no exaggeration. Just try it some time. There are millions of tons produced. Those people will go out of business, because they will have only a limited market for their hay. There is no use in sending it somewhere else; almost every other State is just in the same condition, the law being of general application.

Live stock of all kinds are attached under the Canadian bill which we passed, and which Canada probably will not pass. Of course we had to set an example to the child. Being a large, full-grown nation, we cheerfully and joyously passed what is called the Canadian reciprocity bill. It looks now as though they would have to go to the people, as they call it, in Canada. I have heard lots of that kind of talk here, about people who had their ear to the ground and were listening to the voice of the people. The Canadians are doing the same thing. They heard about our doing it and they thought they would do it. When they come back from the people you will not recognize them. They would look like the fabulous picture of the man who had been to see the editor. Those same men probably will not get back from the people; the people will send other men there.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HEYBURN. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If they fail to receive the necessary approval from the people there will be at least one comfort for the champions of the proposition, and that is that the print-paper feature of it will become a law without the consent of Canada.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have not been making war on the print-paper people, because they are making war on themselves. They have been gradually destroying themselves, and I rather hope they will either reform or complete the job before very long. During all the discussion of this question I have not referred to those people at all, because, as I said, they are committing business and personal hari-kari.

Montana has $10,000,000 worth of hay. I expect she will be interested if the flocks disappear. Those stacks will blacken there and wait for Republican prosperity to come along and make a market for them. Idaho, according to the census, averages 3 tons of hay to the acre. So it is pretty good land. I do not know what they will do with that land when it is no longer profitable to raise hay on it. They will raise something else on it. Then they will find that this Canadian treaty or this free-trade party in the country has destroyed their market for it. The only salvation is to keep the old Republican Party in power. When I say that I mean Republicans. I do not mean Republicans who think that the Government did not exist, or if it did exist was on a very uncertain and unsatisfactory basis until they came into power.

When I speak of Republicans I mean men who believe in a protective tariff that protects, men who never give a thought to the prosperity of other nations of the earth until after they have made their own people so prosperous that they can sit comfortably on their broad verandas and look out and survey the world without any feeling of uncertainty in their minds as to what may happen to them. I do not mean Republicans who are always threatening some change of government or change of policy. I say the country will never be safe until you have the Republicans in power and in power to stay and until the people realize that they are there to stay. Then they will commence doing business and they will not be afraid that somebody is going to get up and say, "Well, here we are pretty prosperous; there is not much excitement going on; let us go and bring in the people of some other country to disturb us, to take away our job from us, or to take away our market from us." Let us get rid of those people. Let them make their proclamations from their own cellars.

There is one ranch of which I happen to have the figures. A ranchman, a friend of mine, in Idaho, produced 10,000 tons of hay last year and fed it all to his own stock, and he had to buy some of other people. He told the Committee on Finance that with free wool or insufficiently protected wool he would go out of business, not from choice but from necessity; that he would go out of it because he could not make a living at it or in it.

There is too much temporizing with this proposition to change the wool duties. I do not mean to be harsh or to speak lightly of any man, but it has seemed to me that men were scared too easily. Just because somebody in some other place proposes to reduce the duty they get scared and say, "Oh, do not kill me entirely; only kill me halfway; I will split it with you."

The bill introduced by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] which proposes to recede to about 9 cents, and the bill introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] which proposes to recede to about 7 cents, are the result of fright, political fright I mean, of course. They believe these people can do anything they say they are going to do. I hope they will get over it. When somebody tells me that they are going to take away a part of what I have or all of it, I submit the question to arbitration; I appoint myself arbitrator.

That is the condition here to-day. We are confronted with a lot of compromise offers that weaken men who really believe in protection, because you know that instead of counting your whole strength you have only a part of it. That is the trouble.

I had a Senator say to me in very recent hours that he thought we would have to give up something. Why give up something? Why not say to the other fellow "You can not get it. We have got votes enough to keep you from rifling the treasure chest of the people; you can not get it."

Mr. President, there was an old fellow from Wisconsin, Mr. Sterecker, who lives in Manitowoc, who made a statement before the Committee on Finance. I ask that this statement made on behalf of the sheep feeder, showing the condition of the enterprise, containing the statistics as to price and cost, be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT OF ARTHUR STERECKER, OF MANITOWOC, WIS.

Mr. STERECKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Senate committee, I would like to read a little data that I have on sheep feeding in this country.

I live at Manitowoc, Wis., and have been engaged in the sheep and sheep-feeding industry for eight years past. During this period I have fed about 200,000 head of sheep and lambs with varying success.

[Statement of the National Woolgrowers' Association.]

General history of sheep feeding: The sheep feeder stands between the grower, or the producer of sheep, and the butcher or packer. His mission is to take the feeder sheep from the range or from the market, properly fit it for slaughter, which process requires peculiar adaptability and close attention to detail, and finally shipping the finished product to the various market centers.

Factors entering into sheep feeding: I find it convenient to make several groups of the principal factors entering into the feeding or fattening of sheep for market, and will divide the subject as follows:

(a) The quality of sheep desirable for feeders: I have found that the so-called coarse wools or mutton sheep give the largest returns in proportion to the amount of feed consumed, though the investment is perhaps a little larger. We purchase these sheep either by shipment direct from the mountain ranges of the far West or buy them at Omaha, Chicago, St. Paul, or other large markets.

(b) Initial costs: To the first cost of an animal bought for feeding purposes we might begin to add charges, the first item of which is usually a commission ranging around 5 or 6 cents per head. Secondly, whether bought on the range or the market, the item of freight charges to the point of feeding enters into the calculation. In addition to the above, we have general items of expense for traveling, etc.

(c) Feed required: The predominant item in the feeding or fattening of sheep or lambs is usually grain, wheat screenings, or some substitute therefor. Hay is a large, indispensable item, and at times we find it profitable to use oil meal.

(d) Miscellaneous expense: This group includes such items as salt, which is indispensable. The dipping of sheep, required by quarantine regulations of the Government; shearing occasionally necessary; pasture, where sheep are brought to the feeding station before the proper time to feed has arrived; insurance loss and interest on the investment. In addition to these miscellaneous items, we must consider the equipment, consisting of feed barns, yards, lots, feeder mangers, wagons, horses, and tools necessary to carry on the business. These investments are sometimes quite large, and the interest and depreciation or upkeep thereon make a considerable charge per year on the sheep or lambs fed. In my own case my plant represents a cost of about $30,000. A large item to be considered is that of labor.

(e) Marketing: After the finishing or fattening process is over we go to market. Here again we encounter freight charges from the point of feeding to market, yardage, and commission, and our gross cost is only ascertainable after all these costs have been added.

Concrete illustrations: I have thought the best way to give this committee an exact idea of the costs and hazards met with by the feeder in handling his business would be to give the exact results, in figures, of my own experience in the past year in the feeding of one lot of sheep and one lot of lambs.

About the 15th of October, 1910, I began to feed about 6,000 ewes which I had shipped in from Montana or purchased elsewhere. For convenience in figuring I have reduced the results to a per head basis, taking 1,000 head of sheep for the unit.

EXAMPLE NO. 1.

Cost and result of feeding 1,000 Montana ewes.

First cost per head on range	$1.65
Freight paid and feed en route to Chicago	.67
Total cost in feed yards	2.32
Hay, $13 per ton, one-half pound per day per head for 105 days, or $342.25 per 1,000, or 34 cents per head	.34
Screenings, $11.75 per ton, 2½ pounds per day, for 105 days, or $1,539.25 per 1,000, or	1.54
Corn, 50 cents per bushel, 1 pound per day, 50 days, or $446.50	.45
Salt	.01
Insurance (1¼ per cent on $5 per head)	.02
Loss from death and unavoidable causes	.07
Interest (at 7 per cent on $3.84, average value)	.07
Labor	.24
Interest and depreciation on equipment	.16
Total cost feeding per head	2.90
First cost sheep per head	2.32
Yardage, feed, commissions, etc., Chicago	.12
Total cost per head sold	5.34
Net returns on Chicago market, weighing 109	4.58
Showing loss per head of	.76

And I will state to the committee that those ewes topped the market every day they were in there for that class of ewes—well-fed western ewes——

Senator CLARK of Wyoming. Taking out your interest charge there, would it show a loss or a gain?

Mr. STERECKER. It would show a loss—a considerable loss.

Senator CLARK of Wyoming. It would still show a loss?

Mr. STERECKER. Yes, sir. The interest charges amount to, interest and depreciation, 16 and 7 cents—that is, only 23 cents charged for interest and depreciation for both the sheep and the plant. So that would only bring that down to 53 cents loss per head, regardless of interest and depreciation.

EXAMPLE NO. 2.

On Oct. 1 I began the feeding of 1,000 lambs at Manitowoc. These lambs cost $6.25 per hundredweight, weighing 52 pounds at Chicago, or, each	$3.35
Freight to Manitowoc, Wis., from Chicago	.12
Commission charges	.06
Total, first cost, each	3.53
Feeding cost:
Clover hay, at $14.50 per ton, ¾ pound per day per head, or $487 per 1,000, or, per head	.487
Screenings bought locally at $11.75 per ton, 2 pounds per head for 40 days, ½ pound for 50 days, $810 per $1,000, or, per head	.81
Corn, 50 cents per bushel, 1 pound per day for 50 days, $366 per 1,000, or, per head	.366
Oil meal, ¼ pound per day per head for 30 days, or $103.75 per 1,000, or, per head	.104
Miscellaneous expense:
Salt, per head	.001
Labor for 90 days' feed, per head	.21
Insurance, per head (1¼ per cent on $5 per head)	.01⅛
Loss per head, from deaths, etc	.087
Interest, per head (7 per cent on average value, $4.92)	.081
Interest and depreciation equipment, per head	.16
Making a total cost of feeding per head amounting to	2.32⅛
First cost on Chicago market	3.53
Freight, Manitowoc to Chicago, per head	.14
Yardage and selling commission	.12
Total cost, per head, sold	6.11⅛
Jan. 2, 1911, sold 980 lambs, Chicago, at average price, per head, of	5.12
	.995

Thus showing a loss of the difference, or 99⅛ cents per head, or a loss on 1,000 head of lambs fed amounting to $0.995.

On this particular lot of lambs—as you will note, I purchased them weighing 52 pounds—the selling weight was 80 pounds, thus showing a net gain during a 90 days' feed of 28 pounds, the total cost of which was $2.78, or about 10 cents per pound. The finished product weighing 80 pounds should have sold at least for $1.50 per hundredweight higher than was the cost of the original feeder lambs which I purchased. As a matter of fact, I sold them at an advance of only 5 cents per hundredweight over and above the price paid as first cost per hundredweight. This accounts in a large measure for my heavy loss.

I have endeavored to ascertain why the market had declined so seriously during the fall and winter months, and have come to the conclusion that it was owing to the agitation for free meats and a general prediction of lower prices for sheep, owing to the fact that Congress had threatened to remove the protection both from wool and mutton.

The feeding of sheep upon screenings and other by-products of agriculture has grown to be a magnificent industry. It is estimated last year that approximately 6,000,000 sheep were fed in the United States upon such products. It is my judgment that the men engaged in this sheep feeding lost close to $1 per head on each sheep handled.

The feeding of sheep is a matter of importance not only to the sheep feeder but to the general farmer of the Middle West, as it offers him a good market for his products and hundreds of these farmers directly engage in this enterprise themselves.

It appears to us, as sheep feeders, that we are able to furnish all the mutton that this Nation can consume, at fair prices, and it seems to us dangerous to lay down the bars and admit free sheep from Canada and free mutton from the world. Had our sheep feeders and sheep breeders received an unfair price for their products in the past the consumer might be justified in demanding a reduction, but since we have so fully shown that the average price received for sheep by the feeder is small the consumer can not justly have any complaint from this source.

I fully believe that if our markets are given to the sheep breeders of the Canadian Northwest they will develop a sheep industry of approximately 20,000,000 head. With the rapid development of her agricultural lands and her increased production of cereals it necessarily follows that the breeders of Canada will have access to vast quantities of cheap Canadian sheep foods, and if these sheep are to be permitted to enter this country free of duty it surely means that our breeders must sacrifice sheep feeding in this Nation, or else move to Canada and develop the industry there, where feed and other necessaries are obtained at a lower cost. As an evidence that the Canadians are already preparing to take over our feeder market, I wish to quote from Bulletin No. 12 of the Canadian department of agriculture, page 47:

"During the past few years sheep and lamb feeding has been carried on quite extensively at grain-shipping centers in Canada. At Moosejaw, Port Arthur, and other points sheep fattening has become an important industry. At these places very large quantities of elevator screenings, consisting of broken wheat, weed seeds, and short pieces of straw, are cleaned out of wheat prior to reshipping. The value of this material as food for fattening sheep and lambs is very high, producing rapid gains in weight and mutton of excellent quality. Previous to the fall of 1905 large quantities of screenings were annually exported from Fort William and Port Arthur to feeding yards in Minnesota, but since then this by-product has been fed at Port Arthur."

Even in the face of our present tariff the Canadian sheep man has found our markets an important point for the disposal of his sheep.

Quoting again from the above bulletin, on page 93, we have the following:

"In the year ending April 1, 1907, the export of lambs from Ontario to the United States amounted to about 125,000 head."

Every lamb or sheep that is brought from Canada to this Nation displaces one that is raised here. The product of the Canadian sheep breeder, if this treaty is enacted, will come directly in competition with the small sheep farmers of the Middle West and will probably mean that they will have to sacrifice the sheep industry.

The admission of mutton from Australia, New Zealand, South America, and other countries should be strongly condemned, for it must be admitted that meats, on their cheap lands and with their cheap labor, can be produced at a very much smaller amount than can be done by the breeders of the United States. If it were possible that the benefits of the admission of these foreign meats would be accorded to our consumers, there would at least be some argument in its favor, but it is admitted by all authorities that the packing interests of the United States are now in control or will shortly control the dressed meats of all foreign countries, and in order for these meats to reach the consumer of this country they will have to pass through the same hands that have been responsible for the high prices in the past.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. How long have you been engaged in this business?

Mr. STERECKER. About eight years.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. How extensively—how many sheep do you feed annually, on the average?

Mr. STERECKER. I have fed all the way from 15,000 to 25,000, at different points in northern Illinois and Waukesha, Wis., and in Manitowoc, Wis.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. How was the market prior to January of this year?

Mr. STERECKER. It was low in the fall, in October—September, October, November, and December. It was the lowest market we have seen for a good while; that is, the feeding of stock, what we call the feeder end, but it was still lower after January. There has been an unusual marketing of sheep this fall and winter, some say more so than in a good many years.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. That is, more sheep have been marketed?

Mr. STERECKER. Yes, sir.

Senator LA FOLLETTE. Do you think the agitation——

Mr. STERECKER. I think the agitation has had the most to do with it; there is no other apparent reason. It seems to be foolish to carry this stuff and send it on to the market.

Senator CLARK of Wyoming. I was going to ask you if you know—I confess that I do not, although I live in the sheep country and hear constant complaints—I think it is the fact that for the last year, or since the last shearing took place, the wool market has been practically dead.

Mr. STERECKER. It has.

Senator CLARK of Wyoming. In other words, there are many of the sheepmen in the country in which I live—a State which perhaps has as many sheep and as much wool as any other State in the Union—who have been accustomed for years to contract beforehand for the clip for a long while, and I did not know but what during the entire spring they were unable to bring that wool at any figure, and the price of the wool now; that is, the wool on the range, or at a station where it is shipped. Two years ago it was practically from 50 to 75 per cent higher than it is now.

Mr. STERECKER. A year ago you could get for a lot of fat sheep wool—surrounding Chicago, say—you could get from 22 to 25 cents a pound. The price now is from 10 to 18; 18 is an extreme. You might say from 15 to 17.

Senator CLARK of Wyoming. And that discrepancy in price occurs in the mutton sheep, just the same as it does in the wool.

Mr. STERECKER. Oh, yes, sir; the two collectively.

Senator CLARK of Wyoming. So that the loss is heavy all around?

Mr. STERECKER. The loss is very heavy all around. I have met men this winter—I meet probably 20 or 30 every time I go to Chicago—and they all have lost, every one of them. You must have a change of value as well as your gain to pay for feeding. You must change your sheep so that if you buy lamb at 6 or 6½ cents you must change these lambs to at least 7 or 8 cents. You understand what I mean; you must change the value of those sheep to get the value of the lower grade of sheep to get a profit out of them.

This year there has been no change in value, the fat sheep having sold no higher than the feeder at any time during the winter.

Senator KERN. You say wool has been reduced about 10 cents a pound?

Mr. STERECKER. The last year.

Senator KERN. About 10 cents a pound?

Mr. STERECKER. Yes, sir.

Senator KERN. The mutton about the same?

Mr. STERECKER. The mutton more than that—mutton, not lambs especially. A year ago we were selling lambs at from 8½ to 9 cents a pound, clipped lamb.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am going to leave the sheep industry at the mercy of fate. If these people have to stand and mark time in the business world for four years, they can do it; but when the command "forward, march" comes at the end of that time from some great commander who knows what it is to be a Republican, and they advance their foot, it will be to crush out trimmers and those who give in when a fight is put up to them.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, a number of others wish to speak on the pending measure from whom the Senate would probably rather hear than from me, as I confess to having been rather prolix on a former occasion when a wool tariff schedule was under discussion.

The speech of the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] has had in it very much with which I agree, although I am not ready to admit that the general ruling wool prices in London are so near the Boston prices as now, or that first-class wool has received never above 5 cents per pound protection.

The 1910 Statistical Abstract shows:

Total production of wool (in grease) in the United States—pounds	321,362,750
Total amount of wool of all kinds imported into the United States, including wool on skins—pounds	263,928,232
Total amount collected on this importation	$21,128,728.74
Showing a revenue collected per pound of, on an average—cents	8+

A small amount of this imported wool was scoured and some washed, both of which took a higher tariff rate than the regular 11 cents per pound on class 1 and 12 cents on class 2; but, on the other hand, 120,721,019 pounds of wool were of the third class, about 19 per cent of which took a tariff of 7 cents per pound, while about 81 per cent, or nearly 100,000,000 pounds—over one-fourth of our total importation—brought a revenue of but 4 cents per pound.

Thus it is fair to assume, I think, even allowing for the American woolgrowers' loss of percentage of protection through importation of skirted wool and wools of less shrinkage than ours of this country, so fully described by the Senator from Montana, that we have nevertheless received in normal times from 5½ to 8 cents real protection for American growers of No. 1 wool shrinking 66⅔ per cent, and sometimes the full 11 cents, when the woolgrowing industry was not menaced by threats of tariff revision, tariff repeal, and so forth.

I wish to say in explanation of what I alluded to a few moments ago when I interrupted the Senator from Montana, that the importation of skirted wools has been of insidious growth. It was done, in the first place, without permission, done in a sort of fraudulent way, as there was no affirmative law permitting it, and insufficient statutes against it. Finally, in later legislation—the Dingley Act—the woolgrowers, dealers, and all parties concerned, consented to it. The growers, all along, have been cognizant of the fact that they have not been getting constantly the full benefit of the 11 cents per pound rate on first-class, heavy-shrinkage wools. Unfortunately, we have had long periods of abnormal conditions which have depressed the American wool market and greatly reduced the tariff benefit to the grower. During the free-wool period following the passage of the Wilson-Gorman Act, and especially after the elections predicated the reimposition of tariff on wools, several hundred million pounds of wool and immense quantities of woolen goods in excess of current needs were imported free, and for some three years the market was loaded down with this free wool and cloth.

Then we have had, as now, threatened free wool or greatly reduced tariff; mills running on reduced time; trade sluggish, and prices drooping, until at times our wool prices in Boston and New York have been but from 2 to 3 cents higher than those in London.

In fact, the constant nagging at Schedule K, the threat of free wool, and the certainty that the tariff on wool and woolens would be made a political football for the time being and probably for a number of months longer, has had its deadly effect during the past two seasons, and the value of wool in the United States has shrunken to almost the foreign value, and the flockmasters are struggling hard to pay taxes and preserve their herds. It is but the truth to say that nearly all the large woolgrowers of to-day are carrying substantial debt loads caused by the hard winters and drought of the past two years and the low prices on wool due to the continual lambasting of Schedule K and everything and everybody connected with it or giving a good word for it.

This last spring, curiosity to know exactly what our wools would bring in foreign markets caused a shipment of wool to be made from the United States to Bradford, England, which was disposed of with the following results:

Results of sale of United States wool in Bradford, England.

Lot No.	Grade.	Shrinkage.	Grease price, Bradford.	Scoured price, Bradford.	Which netted Philadelphia in grease—	Current Philadelphia price was at the time—
		Per cent.	Cents per pound.	Cents per pound.	Cents per pound.	Cents per pound.
98	Half-blood Wyoming	65	15.71	44.88	14.69	18
1890	Wyoming original	71	12.67	43.70	11.71	14
32	Medium Montana	58	16.50	39.24	15.45	19 to 20
7870	No. 1 scoured			45.62	44	48

In the above calculation, freight and insurance at the rate of $\frac{1}{10}$ cent per pound are taken as the cost of delivering wool in Bradford; and in figuring the net price in Philadelphia (sold Bradford), the cost of delivering wool in Bradford and the selling commission are deducted.

In case of the scoured wool, the freight may be higher than on the grease wool, and the net price in Philadelphia proportionately lower.

From this table it will be noted that—

	Cents per pound.
Half-blood Wyoming was worth:
In Philadelphia	18.00
In Bradford	15.71
A difference of	2.29
Wyoming original (unsorted) was worth:
In Philadelphia	14.00
In Bradford	12.67
A difference of	1.33
Medium Montana was worth:
In Philadelphia	19.20
In Bradford	16.50
A difference of	2.70

However, the real difference, if an American woolgrower should seek to sell in a foreign market, would be greater, because of expenses of exportation charges, including freight, insurance, commission, and so forth.

The natural effect of the low prices in this country is to cut down the importations of wool, as will be noticed from the following tables showing the importations at Boston during two successive weeks in this present month:

On a former occasion, when there was some discussion of wool duties in progress in this Chamber, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] sneeringly remarked that he would have the wools raised in foreign countries rather than in our own, because of better conditions in foreign climes than in ours; that it was not necessary for the United States to raise the bananas we eat nor the wool we consume, treating them as baby industries which must be braced up and supported by an outrageous bounty, but that we should turn our lands and our energies toward raising crops of a more stable variety, and let the foreign countries raise the wool, and so forth.

Well, Mr. President, we have to some extent been doing that. The party to which the Senator from Mississippi belongs has on many occasions shown an earnest of its desire to relieve the woolgrower, and to some extent the manufacturer, of all assistance and encouragement, and the other countries have had every opportunity, considering the large amount of wool we have been compelled to buy from them in addition to that we have raised, to cultivate, extend, and enlarge the sheep and woolgrowing industries. But, nevertheless and notwithstanding this fact, the world's supply of wool does not increase with rapidity, does not nearly increase as fast as the population, and the ratio of increase in woolgrowing in the United States compared with the growth in population has been fully as great as that of the most favored nation on earth in the woolgrowing line during all of those periods when we have had uninterrupted benefits from an adequate tariff. We need more wool and use more wool per capita than any other country. In fact, we use nearly one-fifth of the whole world's product, which is less than 3,000,000,000 pounds, notwithstanding our population is only, say, 95,000,000, as compared with 1,520,000,000, the approximate total population of the world.

To show the countries in which the numbers of sheep have increased or decreased during the 15 years between 1894 and 1910, I submit the following table:

The world's production of sheep, 1894–1910.

	1894 (in millions).	1910 (in millions).	Increase. (in millions).	Decrease (in millions).	Increase (per cent).	Decrease (per cent).
Europe	192	178	.....	14	.....	7¼
North America	48	63	15	.....	31¼	.....
South America	101	101	.....	.....	.....	.....
Oceanica (including Australasia)	119	115	.....	4	.....	3⅓

From this it appears that North America is the only continent in which there was an increase, and this increase, amounting to 31¼ per cent, has been due to the protective tariff act passed in 1897, the so-called Dingley law. Europe in the meantime has decreased her number of sheep 7¼ per cent; Oceanica, including Australasia, has decreased hers 3⅓ per cent, while South America has just held her own.

I am aware of the prevailing belief that we are not keeping up with the times in sheep and wool growing; that we are being eclipsed by the great woolgrowing countries of Oceanica and South America; but the cold facts and figures show that North America leads them all—and in this connection the United States may be considered pretty nearly as "North America."

Returning to the matter of proportion of increase in population and sheep, we will go back some years.

In 1880 we had 50,155,000 people and 40,500,000 sheep, or 807 sheep to each 1,000 people, or 45 per cent sheep and 55 per cent population.

After the four succeeding years and in 1884—after which time the effect of the tariff act of 1883 became apparent—we had 55,000,000 people and 50,500,000 sheep, giving figures in round half millions, or an increase of 918 sheep per 1,000 people, or 13½ per cent in proportion, bringing the percentage of sheep up to 48 per cent, as against 52 per cent population.

Under the depressing influence of the tariff act of 1883 we ran down hill again, as follows:

In 1889 we had 61,000,000 people and 42,500,000 sheep, or 697 sheep to each 1,000 people, a decrease of 24 per cent in the proportion, leaving the percentage of sheep 41 per cent and that of population 59 per cent.

Then followed the McKinley Tariff Act and adequate protection, with the result that in 1893 we had 66,000,000 people and 47,000,000 sheep, or 712 sheep to each 1,000 people, an increase of 2 per cent in 4 years, or 42 per cent sheep to 53 per cent population.

Then followed the Wilson law, and in 1897 we had 70,000,000 people and 37,000,000 sheep, or 528 sheep to each 1,000 people, a decrease of 26 per cent in the proportion, or 35 per cent sheep to 65 per cent population.

Then came the Dingley Act of 1897, continued by the Payne Act of 1909, and in 1910 we had 92,500,000 people and 57,000,000 sheep, or 616 sheep to each 1,000 people, an increase of 16½ per cent in 13 years, making the proportion 38 per cent sheep to 62 per cent population.

These figures show clearly and conclusively that if we would permit an adequate tariff to remain undisturbed in protection of the woolgrowers we would constantly increase our proportion of sheep as compared to population, and would ultimately raise all the sheep we would need for wool to clothe our people and for meat foods such as are furnished by mutton to support our increasing population.

Furthermore, looking at the matter from a revenue viewpoint: Schedule K has brought into the Treasury of the United States since the Dingley law was enacted nearly $400,000,000. Last year the revenues from Schedule K were as follows:

Unmanufactured	$21,128,728.74
Manufactured	20,771,964.26
Total	41,900,693.00

As revenue producers sugar stands first, with returns for 1910 of $53,039,304.17, being an average rate of 52.27 per cent ad valorem.

Wool stands second, with returns for 1910 (as above) of $41,900,693, being an average rate of 44.31 per cent on unmanufactured and 90.12 per cent on manufactured, ad valorem.

Cotton stands third, with returns for 1910 of $38,077,844.04, being an average rate of 56.04 per cent ad valorem.

Tobacco stands fourth, with returns for 1910 of $24,124,239.34, being an average rate of 81.11 per cent on leaf tobacco and 84.30 per cent on unmanufactured tobacco, ad valorem.

So it appears that wool stands second to-day as a revenue producer, and at a lower ad valorem tariff than any one of the other leaders.

The reports of the Census Bureau will show as the number of wage earners in textile industries in 1909, 834,000. Of these, about 300,000 were engaged in wool manufacturers, including hosiery and knit goods of wool or part wool, and nearly 600,000, inclusive, were engaged on wool, if we include the manufacture of hats, caps, clothing, and so forth.

The latest wool figures give the value of the total manufactured wool product in 1909 a trifle over $500,000,000, and the value of the cotton product something over $625,000,000.

Interested in the growing of the wool are more people than there are engaged in manufacturing and working up the material, probably two to one.

The total number of sheep in the world is less than 700,000,000, the number having shrunken in the last 15 years about 40,000,000 head, while the world's increase in population during the same period amounted to nearly or quite 100,000,000. But during the 15 years mentioned, while the world's total number of sheep has shrunken 40,000,000, the sheep of this country have increased from less than 38,000,000 to 57,000,000.

Of the total number of 700,000,000 sheep mentioned, this country raises about one-twelfth; but of the wool raised for market our proportion is more than one-ninth, while our consumption of wool is over one-sixth and nearly one-fifth of the whole, as before stated. The United States, as I have also said before, consumes far more wool than any other nation in the world.

But, Mr. President, the mutton proposition is a most important feature affected by Schedule K. Removal of the duty on wool will put the mutton grower out of business as well as the woolgrower, excepting the growers of small bunches raised and conducted near large centers of population where early lambs and rare cuts bring high prices. The great mutton supply for the millions, that must be raised far away from market in the country where there is only grazing land, which does not ripen the mutton for market, where sheep must be transported by cars or boat from long distances to the corn-growing localities and there finished and then again reshipped and transported to the markets, can not be produced for the returns on mutton alone with wool a mere by-product. With both wool and meat as principal products, we can increase, as I have before remarked, both our wool and mutton supply up to our demands.

Of course the cost of raising beef, mutton, and wool—industries which require vast stretches of land for pasturage and for the raising of forage and grain—must increase rather than decrease as the population becomes denser and higher cultivation and price of land become necessary. But with better care, more liberal feeding, and first-class prices for first-class articles the returns will also be larger.

Again, as land increases in value, so must agricultural crops in all lines pay better returns.

Mr. President, in 1900 there were 10,181,615 persons engaged in agriculture. Of these, 4,410,877 were agricultural laborers, the balance farmers, stock raisers, dairymen, and so forth. Later figures would probably increase the numbers.

Now, Mr. President, are these more than 10,000,000 people, and nearly 5,000,000 laborers in the fields, to be condemned to free trade or a free-raw-material policy for everything they raise, while manufactured products of all kinds which they use and have to buy are the beneficiaries of a protective tariff?

For, even with the measures proposed by the Democratic Party and by those of the Republican Party who believe in lower duties, there remains protection for the manufacturer as against nothing, or nearly nothing, for this great mass of agricultural laborers; for an owner—farmer, stock raiser, or dairyman—is as much a laborer as his hired man, and oftentimes more so, for while the hired man or hired woman puts in the 8 hours a day contracted for, the owner and his family are often engaged 12 to 18 hours a day in order to keep the pot boiling and make both ends meet.

We, as patriotic and progressive Americans, must live and let live, and I can assure my brother Senators, and wish them to believe me when I say it, that less protection for the sheep growers than they now have means the practical wiping out of the woolgrowing interests of the United States.

I was here in this Chamber—I believe I was sitting in the very seat near which I now stand, although I was an ex-Member of the Senate at the time—and talking with the then chairman of the Finance Committee, Mr. Voorhees, and to another prominent member of the Finance Committee, Mr. Jones of Arkansas. It was during President's Cleveland's administration, when the Wilson bill was under consideration, and I then prophesied what would be the effect of free wool. While I do not claim to be a "genuine" prophet, the effect, nevertheless, was as I then stated it would be, and it will be that again.

When the last sundry civil appropriation bill was up there came an amendment from the Democratic side of the aisle, voted for unanimously, I think, by that side, that the Tariff Board should take up the wool proposition and should give us the benefit of its investigation before we met in December; and I beg of Senators upon that side and upon this side to carry out in good faith what was then done, what we have a right to expect, and not undertake to attack an industry that affects the million people directly interested in the woolgrowing interest and auxiliary interests without having better information than we now have. There were no hearings granted at the other end of the Capitol. We have had none here. We have the Tariff Board agents all over the United States now at work on wool and woolens; also in the foreign countries which raise or manufacture wools. It is a mere matter of waiting until next fall; and then, while we are not ready—at least I am not—to say that we are giving more protection to the woolgrower than we should allow, at the same time I believe I speak faithfully for the woolgrowers all when I say that they are ready to meet the issue and ready to take whatever may be your mature judgment, and to try to live under it after the case has been fully and impartially made up on the issues joined and judgment rendered.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I think it is extremely unjust to those who are engaged in this attempt to legislate to say that we are proceeding blindly, without any information; and I simply want to ask the Senator from Wyoming if it is not true that two years ago there were most complete, full, and ample hearings, all of which are now in print, available for the information of Congress; information not only now available, but information which all of us two years ago had not only the opportunity to examine but the actual duty, which we performed, of examining that elaborate testimony? Is not that true?

Mr. WARREN. Only a word in reply. The country did not seem to be satisfied with that finding, and certainly the Senator's party was not satisfied. So that in justice I think we should have a second hearing and make a second judgment.

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon. I do not think he understood me accurately. My point is this, that we are not proceeding without information. There was then given to us the fullest information by the woolgrowers and the wool manufacturers, and conditions are not now, so far as I know, materially different from what they were then.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; there are differences in conditions. I have never said—at least, if I did, it was a mistake to say—that we are without any information; but certainly we have not the best or latest information. If there is any efficacy in a Tariff Board that has given many months' work to this, and expects to give many more, this is the opportunity to test that question. And certainly every two years, or whatever time may pass, affects every industry, and we should have in this industry the very latest information before acting so drastically.

Mr. BACON. The Finance Committee of the Senate is composed of a majority of Republicans, and certainly they have had ample opportunity to possess themselves of information since this bill came from the House.

Mr. WARREN. On the contrary, the bill was referred by a vote of the Senate to the Finance Committee with instructions to report it within about 15 days, or not more than 19 at most, without instructions to have hearings, and under the evident assumption that there would be none. As a matter of fact, the time left for the committee was not sufficient to enable its chairman to notify the woolgrowers and have them prepare their briefs and appear before the committee.

The major portion of the wool grown in this country is raised in remote sections from two to three thousand or more miles from Washington, and the sheep owners at this time of the year are generally in the mountains with their sheep at places far away from railroads and post offices, and hence it was out of the question for the committee to secure information from the woolgrowers. Besides that fact, it was pretty well understood on both sides of this Chamber that the majority of those who voted for the hurry-up call on this bill did not desire any information from the woolgrowers nor from the manufacturers of woolens.

Mr. President, this wool bill seems to suit none except those who wish to use it for a political football. The free traders do not like it because it smacks of protection. The tariff-for-revenue-only people are not satisfied, because some think the rate too high and others think it too low. The protectionists are surely dissatisfied with it, because it is unscientific, lopsided, and inapplicable. As an example of the sentiment expressed, I wish to insert at this point an article from the Commercial Bulletin, of Boston—issue of Saturday, June 3, 1911—which is a trade paper that has made a specialty of wool and wool manufactures, along with other lines, for many years. This paper was for years a free-wool paper, advocating protection for the manufactures of wool—like many other papers in New England. It has been clamoring for the reform of Schedule K and the wool tariff for, lo, these many years. But the House bill does not suit even this organ of free wool or lower tariff; and it stoutly maintains, as will be noted in the article quoted, that:

Even the most rabid opponents of protection have discovered that free wool spells "ruin" to the woolgrowing industry of the United States. Free wool and the radically cut duties on woolens that once wrecked the manufacturing as well as the growing of wool in this country also means, as all but the rabid have recently discovered, such a reduction in the revenue as to make such a change out of the question.

And again:

A more contemptible sacrifice of the industries of the country for political effect has seldom been seen in American legislation.

Schedule K in its present form must go. The public will no longer tolerate it. When it does go, let us have something that shall be permanent, scientific, and equitable.

But I shall include the entire editorial. It is a fair specimen of its kind:

BUNCOMBE SCHEDULE K REVISION.

After much cogitation the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee have managed to produce a wool bill. This is a purely political bill, intended for political purposes, and while it is likely to pass the House, there is very little likelihood of its passing the Senate.

The essential feature in the bill is a change from the specific duties now imposed on wool to a uniform ad valorem rate of 20 per cent. This ad valorem rate is supposed to be the equivalent of a cut, roughly, of one-half the present duties on the raw material.

As a matter of fact it is a very much greater reduction than it appears to be. The present duties on wool are very much higher than an average rate of 44 per cent, as stated by Chairman UNDERWOOD in another column. Certain varieties of wool are absolutely excluded by prohibitive duties to-day and are unavailable to American manufacturers.

It is very fortunate that at least the foolish error of attempting to establish a sliding scale of duties has been definitely abandoned by all parties concerned. A yearly change in wool duties would mean a long protracted agony for the entire time consumed in the reduction, step by step, to ultimate free wool. Any change in the tariff should take place, once for all, after a reasonable period given to the trade to prepare for the new basis of business. The sliding scale has been tried before, and always with prolonged wretchedness and misery as a result.

It is interesting to note also that the radical program inaugurated by the Democratic Congress in 1893 has also been definitely abandoned. Even the most rabid opponents of protection have discovered that free wool spells "ruin" to the woolgrowing industry of the United States. Free wool and the radically cut duties on woolens, that once wrecked the manufacturing as well as the growing of wool in this country, also means, as all but the rabid have recently discovered, such a reduction in the revenue as to make such a change out of the question.

Of course, it is sheer politics that prompts the introduction of any wool bill at this time. Congress has authorized the employment of a Tariff Commission to investigate the conditions of wool importation and wool production. In utter disregard of its own legislation for scientific tariff revision the present House of Representatives has prepared a revision of the wool schedule, based on guesswork, pure and simple. Even if such a measure passed both Houses and was signed by the President it would again have to be changed in the light of the information to be shed by the Tariff Commission in its coming report.

A more contemptible sacrifice of the industries of the country for political effect has seldom been seen in American legislation.

Schedule K in its present form must go. The public will no longer tolerate it. When it does go, let us have something that shall be permanent, scientific, and equitable. It is idle to substitute for a schedule that with all its faults has at least made wool growing and manufacturing profitable mere crazy-quilt legislation that would benefit neither producer nor consumer and admittedly of so ephemeral a nature as to offer no hope of its continuance as a permanent settlement of the question.

The above differs somewhat from the articles that will be found in the acknowledged free-trade papers of to-day, as will be noted from the following, taken from a publication known as the Free Trade Broadside, edition of the current month:

A revenue tariff means repeated agitation and change incident to the ups and downs of party control. Free trade means a settlement once and for all of this most persistent and most troublesome issue of American politics. Let us build not on the shifting sands of popular impulse, but, basing our structure on the solid rock of equity and of justice, let us construct an industrial system which shall be in harmony with the laws of nature and with the highest aims of civilization and which shall bring increasing progress and well-being to mankind for all time to come.

There are a great many people in this country, including some manufacturers, and more especially those along the Atlantic coast, who, while believing in a protective tariff for themselves, wish everything to be free which they are called upon to buy. This spirit invades the professional men, too, who indulge the fallacious belief that, since their salaries or fees are duly prescribed, with a free-trade arrangement what they have to buy would be cheaper and hence their savings would be increased thereby.

While a superficial survey may indicate such a result, a deeper examination of the subject will develop that to sustain the salaries and fees enjoyed in prosperous times practically all classes of business must be prosperous; and experience has surely shown that general depression is more fatal to wage earners and salaried men than to those who employ labor in carrying on their various industries.

Some of our friends engaged in wool manufacturing, while believing in a tariff upon cloths, are anxious to have free raw material of every kind, and especially free wool. This class of narrow, selfish manufacturers finds various excuses to reach the thing desired without openly declaring for free raw material. A recent article in the New York Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin, reprinted in and indorsed by the Boston Transcript, fairly illustrates this point. "It is to laugh" for the woolgrowers when they read such articles, for they know that, with the fertilizing benefits to the land used for sheep culture, and following the reclamation of vast stretches of arid and semiarid lands by irrigation and the dry-farming or deep-plowing process, great tracts of land, once nothing but sagebrush and sand, are now producing two to five crops of alfalfa and from 1 to 3 tons an acre per cutting, and are also producing other kinds of forage as well as small grains of all varieties, so that as the former "public range" has been taken up the increased productivity of the remaining portion is serving to increase the number of sheep which can be kept in a given county or State, rather than to diminish it.

Give the sheepmen, the woolgrowers, reasonable protection and you will hear nothing about decrease in flocks and shortage of land upon which to maintain them.

I will insert at this point the article I have referred to:

[From Boston Transcript, Mar. 30, 1911.]

NOT A PASTORAL LAND—THE TROUBLE WITH THE WOOLGROWING INDUSTRY OF THE UNITED STATES—THE LOGICAL AND ECONOMIC TENDENCY.

In view of the agitation for the revision of the wool schedule of the tariff the cry is raised in some of the Intermountain States that wool raising is becoming unprofitable. It is said that official figures show that the number of sheep in this country diminished from 45,000,000 in 1894 to 36,800,000 in 1907. That indicates that the sheep-raising or woolgrowing industry has not been greatly fostered by the tariff which had been in effect for 10 years before 1907. Would a removal of the duty on raw wool make any serious difference with it while supplying a sure stimulus to the industry of manufacturing woolen goods?

The trouble with making a flourishing industry of woolgrowing in this country is that it is not a land of shepherds or favorable to a pastoral life. As the land once free and unoccupied comes more and more to be taken up and settled it becomes more valuable for something else than for raising sheep. Other occupations are so attractive and lucrative for labor that sheep raising becomes too expensive, even if cheap land were still available. The fact is that even in Wyoming and Nevada the value of land and the cost of labor is becoming too high to make sheep raising a profitable business, and a tariff on foreign wool will not make it so without at the same time making woolen goods such an expensive luxury that only the rich can have them.

There will be considerable sheep raising on pasture lands as an incident of agricultural life so long as there is a wide demand for mutton for food, and wool will be an important by-product; but as land can be turned to other uses with more profit, and consequently rises in value, and as labor finds more lucrative employment than tending sheep, raising large flocks for the wool as a business is sure to decline. Woolgrowing will not be one of the industries of the country unless in a few restricted areas. There are other lands much better adapted to it in parts of South America, in Australia and New Zealand, and in other countries that have no better use for a considerable part of their population than to make shepherds of them.

A pastoral life has its attractions, and no doubt it is more wholesome for body and soul than factory life, but it is to be feared that our country is not well adapted to it. We have been seeking industrial and commercial development, and the tariff has been devised to foster manufacturing industries. That was the excuse for adopting it and has long been the excuse for maintaining it, but there is nothing worse for infant or invalid industries than costly raw materials. If we are to have a woolen industry with any vigor or vitality or staying power in it, we must foster it by giving it a chance to get its materials to the best advantage. Then we may get the industry and also be able to wear woolen clothes, while the shepherds of Wyoming may find more profitable employment for their land and their labor.

One of the worst features of depending upon foreign countries for our clothing material, and one lamentably weak feature in the bill before us—in fact, in the propositions of both UNDERWOOD and LA FOLLETTE—is the shoddy question. The existing tariff against shoddy and rags is high enough to prohibit large importations of this disease-breeding, insect-bearing, filthy, cast-off clothing from foreign countries. To illustrate this I desire to quote a few figures.

Under the McKinley law the importations of shoddy were as follows:

	Pounds.
1891	215,714
1892	321,586
1893	229,583
1894 (8 months)	142,040

Under the Wilson law:

1894 (4 months)	4,028,901
1895	20,718,110
1896	17,011,149
1897	44,505,470

displacing this much pure wool and giving the people a fraudulent, inefficient, insanitary substitute.

Now, note the change.

Under the Dingley and Payne laws:

	Pounds.

only about one one-hundredth part of the amount imported the year before; and since that time it has averaged less than a half million pounds a year, and in 13 years has amounted to only about one-seventh of the amount that was imported in the one year 1897.

As to rags and rags included with shoddy, I quote the following from the Philadelphia Daily Trade Record. This article shows the amount of rags and shoddy used in this country and also in the United Kingdom. It seems that the United Kingdom, with considerably less than one-half, or about 40 per cent, of the population of this country, uses over three times the rags and shoddy used in this country:

EDITOR DAILY TRADE RECORD.

SIR: "The rag-working industry of the United Kingdom consumes about 1,000 tons of foreign rags weekly and probably more than 500 tons weekly of rags of English production." (From the Wool Yearbook, 1911, p. 50, published in Manchester, England.)

The amount of shoddy consumed by woolen and worsted manufacturers in the United States in 1909 was 53,621,000 pounds.

From bulletin of the United States Census Bureau, April 4, 1911, page 4: "United Kingdom, per annum (1910), 166,000,000 pounds; United States, per annum (1909), 53,621,000 pounds."

Very truly, yours,

DOMESTIC WOOLENS.

And the following from a recent issue of the New York Sun gives still further light upon the rag and shoddy business, including the use of cotton with wool as a substitute ingredient:

[From the New York Sun, May 4, 1911.]

SHODDY.

WASHINGTON, May 3.

It is frequently asserted that unless we purchase a wickedly overprotected imported material the cloth of which our garments are made is a combination of cotton and shoddy masquerading as "all wool." A companion assertion is that American clothes contain more cotton and shoddy and less wool than formerly. The facts seriously disturb these notions.

In 1899 the mills of the United States used 193,000,000 pounds of scoured wool, 69,000,000 pounds of shoddy, and 40,000,000 pounds of cotton, while in 1909 they used 290,000,000 pounds of wool, 53,000,000 pounds of shoddy, and 20,000,000 pounds of cotton. The cotton and the shoddy are used chiefly in the production of suits the factory cost of which, finished and ready for wear, is $2.50 to $3 for a three-piece suit, and the retailing price of which is from $7 to $10. After a few days' wear they are not remarkable for their shapeliness, but they are strong and durable, as a rule, except in the matters of seams and buttons. The notion that free woolens would enable the purchasers of goods of that class to buy all-wool garments, equally durable and more shapely, at the same price is entirely false. The cloth from which such garments are made sells at about 30 cents a yard, double width, at wholesale. It might be imported and laid down in New York for about 20 cents a yard, duty free, but that would only mean the destruction of a now extensive domestic industry without reducing by even one cent the retail price of the garments.

The figures show that the use of wool in American mills has increased 50 per cent in the last 10 years, that the use of cotton in woolen mills has decreased 50 per cent, and that the use of shoddy has decreased about 23 per cent. This is accounted for mainly by the fact that the use of worsted fabrics has increased enormously, while the use of woolen fabrics in which shoddy is used has actually decreased. The quantity of cotton yarn purchased by the mills shows an increase of 11 per cent, but the net result is a decided decrease in the amount of cotton used as a material by the woolen manufacturers. The value of the product of all woolen mills, as represented by the selling price of the goods at the mills, shows an increase from $239,000,000 in 1899 to $420,000,000 in 1909. The greater part of this increase appears in the record of the last five years, the product value for the intermediate year 1904 having been $303,000,000. In the 1909 product value—$420,000,000—the cost of materials used is reported as $273,000,000, salaries and wages as $79,000,000, and miscellaneous expenses as $21,000,000; a total of $373,000,000. The selling value of the product being $420,000,000, there is left a margin of $47,000,000, or a little over 12 per cent, out of which must come profits and all business expenses not chargeable to cost of production. Just where and how the manufacturers manage to squeeze out of the otherwise unused balance that 100 to 150 per cent profit about which some of our Democratic Congressmen delight to talk is not easily seen.

These are official figures, obtained by impartial investigators.

And it is a fact, largely due to Schedule K, that the American people are wearing less shoddy and more pure wool per capita than any nation in the world, whereas under the Wilson Act we used for a time more shoddy, rags, and other forms of wool adulterants per capita than ever before, and perhaps the equal of or in excess of other nations.

So that we may have it of record here in our files for ready reference, I desire to insert the following table, showing the imports of wool for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1909, 1910, and 1911:

Just a word about the shrinkage of these wools which we import. The shrinkage varies in scouring from 25 per cent in the low crossbreds to 50 per cent in fine crossbreds, and in merino wools from 48 per cent to 55 per cent. We import skirted wools in nearly every instance because they are of superior quality, cleaner, and shrink less.

A very good illustration of the difference between adequate and inadequate protection is shown by conditions in Canada both as to wool growing and manufacturing. In this country, with the tariff undisturbed, both growing and manufacturing progress and increase. But with the 30 per cent protection many of the Canadian woolen mills are closed and the balance are running without profit or satisfaction, while sheep growing is confined almost entirely to the raising of thoroughbred stock for breeding purposes, for which they have heretofore found a profitable market in the United States.

But aside from the growing and manufacturing of wool comes the subject of flesh food for our increasing population. Late statistics from the Department of Commerce and Labor give the startling information that the number of food animals in the United States has decreased by 5,000,000 since 1901, while the number of consumers has increased by about 12,000,000 in the same time, or between 1901 and 1910. The term "food animals" in this instance includes all cattle, sheep, and swine in the United States. This accounts for the increase in values which the late statistics and census reports show, and plainly points the outcome if, by ruinous tariff legislation, we cause the killing off of our sheep by the hundreds of thousands—by the millions, indeed—as occurred after the passage of the Wilson-Gorman bill.

Much is said by those who know little of the wool and woolen business—and the greater proportion of the people are of this class—about the great saving to the consumer that is to be brought about by the proposed reduction of the tariff on wool and woolens. How fallacious this idea is easily shown when we consider that the total amount of money received by the woolgrower for wool enough to make an all-wool suit of clothes is only $1.25 to $2, and the total amount received by a woolen manufacturer for the finished cloth required to make an all-wool suit is but from $3 to $6, notwithstanding the fact that this small sum of $3 to $6 covers all of the tariff complained of. After the farmer has received his $1.25 to $2, the major portion of which goes for labor, the balance that a consumer or wearer pays for a suit of clothes, be it $10 or $75, is expended very largely for labor, the balance being for cost of transportation, distribution, and so forth. In the $3 to $6 paid the manufacturer for cloth there has already entered a more than considerable factor of labor, and nearly all, from the price at the manufacturer's to the price on the back of the consumer, is for labor and costs which a change in the tariff on wool and woolens would not in any way minimize or affect, unless a severe reduction of wages and salaries should follow.

There will be no appreciable change in the price of clothing to the ultimate consumer by the passage of this or any reduction-of-tariff bill, and on this we can depend.

I beg my fellow Senators to think again and think seriously before they strike down the great industry of woolgrowing, in which a million farmers are interested, when it is a matter of exact truth that the total income to the farmer from the wool for a suit of clothes is a mere bagatelle, and even the amount paid to the manufacturer of cloth is not one that should be burdensome to the American consumer.

If great reductions are to be made in the price of American-made clothes, they can only be made at the expense of great reductions in the prices paid for labor all along the line, from the man who grows the wool to the final delivery of the made-up product to the consumer.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if I should discuss the wool tariff, I should have to do so from a theoretical standpoint and without very much experience. Therefore, I do not propose to trespass upon the time of the Senate in that discussion, but I desire to insert in the RECORD, by permission, an address by one who has devoted years of his life to sheep raising, a man of extraordinary energy and exceptional ability, an address by ex-Gov. Gooding, of our State, upon this particular question. I ask leave to have the address printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ADDRESS TO ARIZONA WOOLGROWERS BY PRESIDENT F. R. GOODING.

I am glad to be in Flagstaff to-day to meet in convention with the woolgrowers of Arizona and discuss with you the conditions that confront our industry.

Again the sheep industry of America has become the football of the Democratic Party as a political issue, and unless the sheep men of the country wake up to the true situation there is grave danger of the destruction of our industry.

The Democratic Party has already passed two bills through the House of Representatives, one placing meats on the free list and another placing an ad valorem duty of 20 per cent on the value of wool that is imported into this country. When we come to realize that the ad valorem duty will be placed upon the foreign valuation of wool, we must understand that the bill just passed by the Democratic House gives but very little protection to the woolgrowers of this country. A careful estimate based upon the average price of wool in foreign countries for the past 10 years shows that this proposed law will give us a protection of from 2 to 3½ cents per pound on first and second class wool and from 1 cent to 1½ cents per pound protection on third-class wools.

A dangerous situation confronts our industry, for if either of these bills just passed by the Democratic Party through the House of Representatives becomes a law it means the passing of the great sheep industry from America for a number of years. There is but one thing left for the woolgrowers in the United States, and that is to organize and fight these measures to the last ditch.

Since President Taft's attack on Schedule K in his Winona speech, no question has attracted more attention than the revision of this schedule of our tariff law. President Taft believes that Schedule K should be revised, and I agree with him in this. But the questions that are of vital importance to the woolgrowers of this country are: Shall Schedule K be revised by the party which believes in the protection of the American industries? or, Shall it be revised by the party that believes in "free trade" or a "tariff for revenue only"? which we know from past experience means the destruction of our industry.

When President Taft decided that Schedule K ought to be revised, he asked Congress for an appropriation sufficient to make a thorough investigation of the whole matter of the cost of producing wool and cloth in this country and abroad. He selected some of the strongest men of the Nation, naming a nonpartisan board by selecting three Republicans and two Democrats, to make this investigation, and has asked them to report by the 1st of next December.

Let us hope that this is the beginning of a new policy for this Government—that of settling the great questions that affect our business interests through a commission whose duty it shall be to make thorough and impartial investigations, and report the facts to Congress, so that the men who pass our laws may have a better knowledge of the laws they pass and their effect on the business interests of the country.

In my opinion, President Taft's recommendation for a permanent Tariff Commission is the wisest step taken in the interest of our commercial world that America has ever known, for it means the settlement of the business affairs of this country in the broad light of common sense and sound judgment. The settlement of the business interests of this country in this manner should give confidence and stability to our commercial world and bring about a permanent prosperity such as we have never known before. It is time that the American people were saying that no political party shall make a football of the business interests of this country any longer.

But to-day we find the Democratic Party so anxious to play their political game in the revision of Schedule K that they are not willing to wait until the Tariff Board makes it report, although these same gentlemen gave their hearty support to the bill creating a permanent Tariff Commission when that measure was before the House in the last session of Congress. But a national campaign is coming on, and it becomes necessary for the Democratic Party to have an issue, and it must be evident to all those who have watched the movements of the Democrats in the past few months that they are to revive their old issue of "free trade" or "tariff for revenue only."

Let no woolgrower in the United States think for a minute that because the Democrats have placed a duty of 20 per cent ad valorem on foreign wool that it has been done for the protection of the wool industry of the United States.

Let me read to you what Mr. UNDERWOOD, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in the House of Representatives, says about this bill. I read from page 26 of the report of this committee:

"It is maintained by a very large number of our best economists and statesmen that the economical situation involved in our rapid progress as a Nation requires that our ports be thrown open to the importation of wool free of duty; and this view, based on the most profound consideration of the public welfare, has found expression in Democratic legislation. It is the constant intent of the Democratic Party to make the burden of the tariff taxes as light as possible for the people and to levy taxes upon a revenue basis as promptly as possible, for the party recognizes no justification whatever for tariff taxes except the necessity of revenue." Mr. UNDERWOOD goes on to say:

"The bill (H. R. 11019) is not to be construed as an abandonment of any Democratic policy, but in view of the Democratic platform for a gradual reduction of the tariff, and of the depleted and depleting condition of the Public Treasury, a result of Republican extravagance, a tariff of 20 per cent ad valorem on raw wool is now proposed as a revenue necessity."

Mr. UNDERWOOD seems to be especially anxious that there should be no misunderstanding in this matter, that there is to be no abandonment of Democratic principles. He has served notice on the woolgrowers of the country that the next step is to be free wool.

Mr. UNDERWOOD goes on to say—again I read from page 26 of the report of the Ways and Means Committee:

"The principal part of our woolgrowing is now in the far western or mountain States, which in 1910 produced about 50 per cent of the domestic clip. For a number of years the raising of sheep for wool has been a comparatively small incident of agriculture in the older and Eastern States. It is evident that the development of agriculture in the West is bringing into more profitable use a great deal of land heretofore used for pasturage, and with the steady increase in our population pasturage must give way more and more to agriculture throughout the continental United States. The raising of large numbers of sheep requires great ranges of suitable grazing land with suitable water and soil conditions. It is therefore evident that in the future, with our rapidly increasing population, if our people are to continue to use wool for clothing to a great extent, a large percentage of the domestic consumption must be imported, as has been the case heretofore. This will not means less demand for our domestic wools, but a greater and better demand for all the domestic wool that can be raised, if unwise restriction discouraging the use of wool can be avoided."

Mr. UNDERWOOD seems to understand only too well the effect of this bill, for he says that a larger percentage of our our domestic consumption of wool must be imported. He goes on to say that it will not mean a less demand for our domestic wools, but a greater and better demand for all the domestic wools that can be raised, if unwise restrictions discouraging the use of wools can be avoided.

I especially want to call your attention to this part of the committee's report. Mr. UNDERWOOD could not have said anything plainer to the American people if he had tried, that after the sheep industry of this country has been destroyed there will be a greater and better demand for all the domestic wools that are left. A greater and better demand any school boy knows means a higher price for the wools that will be raised after the industry has been practically destroyed. Higher wools must mean higher clothing. So at the best Mr. UNDERWOOD only offers temporary relief in the high price of clothing by removing the duty on wool. So the great sheep industry of America is to be destroyed to give the Democratic Party an issue. Mr. UNDERWOOD seems to be under the impression that sheep can not be grown in America, and that sheep growing in the West, he says, "must soon give way to agriculture."

Those of us who are familiar with the range conditions of the West know that with proper encouragement the sheep industry can be increased in practically all of the Western States. Speaking of my own State—Idaho—I know this to be absolutely true. The great ranges that are used in my State for the grazing of sheep and cattle can not be used for any other purpose. It is too rough and rugged for agriculture. What is true in Idaho is true in most range States of the Union. I say, without fear of successful contradiction, that in most of the range States, with proper encouragement, the sheep industry can be increased, not only on the range but on the farms.

At one time the sheep business was a profitable industry in the East, before the Democratic Party destroyed it with their free-trade policies. It can be made profitable again in every State in the Union if proper protection is given to the industry, and it is a national disaster to drive the sheep from the farm. The Democratic Party is not only proposing to drive the sheep off the farms, but they have threatened the destruction of the great cattle industry by putting meats on the free list. Take the sheep and cattle off the farms in America, or reduce them in any considerable number, and you strike a blow at this Government that will prove to be a national disaster. One of the serious questions that confronts the American people to-day is that of soil exhaustion that is taking place in nearly every State in the Union. The one great struggle of the farmer to-day is to keep up the productiveness of the farm, and it can only be done with any success where live stock is used. You can not continue to take away from the soil and not put anything back. We must have more live stock upon the farms of America, even if it does cost more to grow beef and mutton than it does in foreign countries.

The Democratic Party is made up of great statesmen; but, of course, as a party they must have an issue, and the sheep industry of this country seems to be unfortunate enough to be their political football.

Let me call your attention to some more double-dealing of the Democratic Party, and I read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Sixty-second Congress, first session, volume 47, No. 50, page 1866:

Mr. LONGWORTH of Ohio, asks Mr. RANDELL, a Democratic Congressman from Texas and a member of the Ways and Means Committee, this question: "I am asking a member of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee to state how much it is hoped or expected the price of raw wool will be depreciated."

Mr. RANDELL of Texas replies: "I would like to say to the gentleman from Ohio that it is impossible for the committee to know exactly what the changes in the price of wool may be; but, as one of the committee, I know the calculation of at least a large majority of the members of the committee is that the price of wool will be enhanced by this bill. This bill is in favor of the woolen industry by being in favor of the people, and there will be a largely increased demand for wool."

It is going to increase the demand for wool, that is what Mr. UNDERWOOD says also. So in one breath we find the leaders of the Democratic Party telling the woolgrowers of this country that they are going to give them a better demand and a higher price for their wool, and in the next breath they tell the American people they are reducing the tariff on wool to give them cheaper clothing. These great statesmen of the Democratic Party are hard to understand. I think I understand Mr. UNDERWOOD, and I fully agree with him that after the great sheep industry of this country has been destroyed there will be, as he says, a greater and better demand for all of the domestic wools we have left. But if I know anything about cause and effect or supply and demand, this means a higher price for wool, and in return must mean a higher price for clothing.

Now, let me tell you why I am for a revision of Schedule K. Schedule K has practised deception on the woolgrowers for a number of years, for it has not given them the just measure of protection that the framers of it intended they should have. Schedule K has always promised the woolgrowers 11 cents per pound protection in the grease, twice that amount on washed wool, and three times that on scoured wool, but under the manipulation of the importers but little more than half of this duty is now paid on imported wools. When Schedule K was first enacted, in 1867, under what is known as the Morrill bill, it might be said that it was a fair measure, for wools all over the world were very much of the same character at that time.

Certain importers and manufacturers contend that the law never intended to give our woolgrowers an actual protection of 11 cents per pound against foreign wools, but this contention is unsupported by the facts. When Schedule K was first enacted foreign wools shrank on an average of 66⅔ per cent, the same as our wool, and the entire law was constructed upon that fact. It does not require any complex process of reasoning to arrive at this conclusion, for the law says that on Class I wools imported in the grease the duty shall be 11 cents per pound; if imported washed, and washing removes one-half of the dirt, the duty shall be 22 cents; and if imported scoured, and scouring removes all the dirt, the duty shall be 33 cents per pound, thereby proving that the 11 cents duty on the grease pound was based on the assumption that wool shrank 66⅔ per cent. Should this not be evidence enough of the intent of the law. If we examine further, we find that in determining the compensatory duty that the manufacturer should have on imported cloth to compensate him for what the duty on wool had increased the cost of wool to him, we find that the law says the compensatory duty shall be four times the duty assessed upon a pound of wool in the grease, or 44 cents. Now, when wool shrinks 66⅔ per cent, it takes approximately 4 pounds of it to make 1 pound of cloth. Therefore the manufacturer was given his compensatory on this wool shrinking 66⅔ per cent. If the law did not presume that Class I wools in scouring shrank 66⅔ per cent, then it was dishonest to say that the duty on a pound of scoured wool of that class should be 33 cents and the compensatory on a pound of cloth should be 44 cents.

I think the confusion that comes to so many people in a discussion of Schedule K is from the fact that they do not understand what is known as the shrinkage of wools. So I am going to try and make myself plain in this matter. The shrinkage of wools, of course, depends entirely upon the foreign substance that is found in the wool as it comes from the sheep's back; the grease, the dirt, or any other foreign matter that is in the wool must be washed away before it can be manufactured into cloth. We call this scouring. This process of cleaning wool is almost as simple as the old-fashioned washtub. Now, I am sure that we can understand that the only thing of value to the manufacturer in a pound of wool as it comes from a sheep's back is the clean wool or scoured wool it contains. That is the only thing the manufacturer buys, if you please, when he buys wool in the grease. Years of experience have taught him to guess the shrinkage very closely. He always risks his judgment and buys wools in this way from the flockmaster.

Now, let me show you how the importer beats Schedule K. We will buy two lots of 100 pounds each of Class I wool, in the grease, on the London market. We will import the first 100 pounds into this country, and we must pay 11 cents per pound duty, or $11 duty for the 100 pounds of wool. We find that it shrinks 66⅔ per cent. In other words, we find that we have washed away out of this 100 pounds of Class I wool 66⅔ pounds and that we have 33⅓ pounds of scoured wool remaining, just what Schedule K presumes that it will do. Two pounds of dirt and 1 pound of wool. Now, we will import the other 100 pounds of Class I wool that is bought on the London market, and that, too, costs 11 cents per pound duty, or $11 duty for the 100 pounds we import. Now, here is where the importer beats Schedule K. We scour this 100 pounds of Class I wool and find we have only washed away 38 pounds, and we have 62 pounds of clean wool left, ready to be made into cloth. So we find that instead of importing 66⅔ pounds of dirt in the 100 pounds of wool in the grease we have only imported 38 pounds of dirt, and instead of only having 33⅓ pounds of clean wool, as we had in our first 100 pounds, we have 62 pounds of clean wool. We find that we have brought into this country 62 pounds of scoured wool for the same price that the law provides that we shall pay for 33⅓ pounds of scoured wool. Or, in other words, the importer, by buying light-shrinking wools on the London markets, has imported 28⅔ pounds free of duty. Instead of the importer paying 33 cents duty on a pound of scoured wool of the first class, you will find that he is only paying a duty of 17⅓ cents on a pound of scoured wool of that class. So instead of getting 11 cents per pound protection in the grease, as Schedule K says we are, on first-class wools, we are only getting 5⅔ cents per pound on these wools.

A thorough and exhaustive investigation has been made by the officers of the National Wool Growers' Association into the shrinkage of wools imported into this country. After searching the wool lofts of Boston and getting samples of wools and having them scoured, we find that the average shrinkage of the first-class wools imported into this country for 1910 was approximately 38 per cent. So the second 100 pounds of wool that I described to you as having been bought in London and imported in 1910 is a representation of the average importation of Class I wools to-day.

In looking at the provisions of Schedule K covering second-class wools, we find it permits greater deception than in the importation of first-class wools. Here, through a skillful manipulation of words, second-class wools are permitted to be imported into this country either washed or unwashed at a duty of 12 cents per pound. To some this has been known as the "nigger in the woodpile," or the "joker" of Schedule K. Here, again, a careful selection of second-class wools imported into this country in 1910, after having them scoured, shows that the average shrinkage of these wools is only 20 per cent. Or, in other words, the importer brings these wools in on a scoured basis for 15 cents per pound instead of 36 cents per pound, or at a duty of 5 cents per pound in the grease, as against 12 cents, as the law provides. So we find that the man growing second-class wools in America is receiving less protection than the man growing first-class wools. I am sure that we will all agree that when Schedule K is revised it should treat all woolgrowers alike.

Let me describe to you some of the methods that have been employed to beat Schedule K. The whole woolgrowing world has been pitted against Schedule K in its effofts to see how light the shrinkage of wools could be made. So persistent has been this effort that a phrase has grown up in woolgrowing countries of the world "suitable for American trade," meaning that it was an especially light clip, free from dirt, grease, and other foreign matter, and was "fit for America." Not that the wools were any better when this foreign substance was removed, but from the fact of the light shrinkage of these wools more scoured wool could be imported for the 11 or 12 cents in duty. To-day all first-class wools imported into this country are skirted and willowed. "Willowing" means throwing the fleece on a screened table; the wool is shaken so as to throw out all the dirt that is possible to remove in this way. "Skirting" means the taking off of the belly, the short wool around the legs, the dirty wool around the tail, the neck, and the head, leaving nothing but the cleanest part of the fleece to be shipped to America. Only the lightest fleeces out of the same flock of sheep are set aside for the American trade. The importers of wool into this country, of course, have encouraged the growers in foreign countries to handle their wool in this way, and some of the flockmasters in Australia have gone so far as to advertise their rams as "sires fit to produce wool for the American trade." So it is not strange when the whole woolgrowing world has been pitted against Schedule K that it has succeeded in beating the game and has destroyed at least half of the protection that Schedule K has always promised the woolgrowers of this country. The importers have not only destroyed the protection that the flockmasters of this country are entitled to, but this Government, through this method, has lost millions of dollars in duty. So we can understand why wool in this country for a number of years has been selling below the cost of production. Had Schedule K told the truth and given the importers of this country no opportunity to beat the law, and had it given the woolgrowers the full measure of protection that it promised them, and if our industry had not been so unfortunate as to have been the political football of the Democratic Party, the sheep industry of America would have been in a prosperous condition in years past, and we would now be growing ample wool to furnish the domestic demand.

When Schedule K is revised the woolgrowers will insist on a law that places the importation of wool into this country on a scoured basis. The men who want to beat Schedule K will say that this is impracticable; yet it is a well-known fact that every pound of wool purchased by the importers of this country is bought on that basis. Practically all the wools purchased in South America to-day come in on a guaranty that they will shrink a certain per cent. All the wool sold on the London market is sold on a scoured basis. Almost without exception samples are taken of the different lots of wools, and the buyer is assured of their shrinkage. A spirit of fairness to the woolgrowers of this country and to the Government demands that we shall all know what the actual protection on wool is in the new law.

I do not believe that the American people want to see the great sheep industry of this country destroyed, nor do I believe they want to abandon the great principles of protection to American industries and American labor. And I am satisfied when Schedule K is revised they will be willing to give this industry ample protection to make it a successful and prosperous business.

Believing in the great principles of protection, and knowing from past experience that free wool means destruction to our industry, I am here to appeal to the woolgrowers of Arizona to organize and help save the great sheep industry; and, as president of the National Woolgrowers' Association, I shall call upon the woolgrowers of every State in the Union to do their duty in the great crisis that confronts us. It is our duty as woolgrowers to show the American people that the sheep industry is not responsible for the high cost of clothing, and it is our duty as woolgrowers to show the American people that the sheep industry can not exist in America without protection. This is not a theory, for we had a practical demonstration of free wool under the Wilson bill. The struggle of those four years is still fresh in the memories of the American flockmaster, when more than 10,000,000 head of sheep were driven to the slaughterhouses, and many of them did not pay the expense of transportation. We saw some of the best flocks in the world, upon which a lifetime had been spent in building up to a high standard of perfection of both wool and mutton, turned over to the butcher's knife and passed out of existence forever. To save the industry from total annihilation wages had to be reduced from 20 to 40 per cent, and we were forced to practice the most rigid economy in the cost of living. Only the plainest food was within our reach when we were forced to compete with the cheap wools of foreign countries. The average price of wool in my State (Idaho) was 6⅞ cents per pound.

You would expect the Democratic Party would be satisfied with ruining a great industry once in a generation, but in such a hurry are they to revise Schedule K that for the first time in the history of the country the woolgrowers were not given a hearing when legislation affecting their industry was under consideration.

Let us hope in this great struggle to save the industry there are men in the Democratic Party, in the Senate of the United States, who will be big enough, strong enough, and with courage enough to say to their party in no uncertain tones, "The great sheep industry of this country is a blessing to the American people and shall not be destroyed if our votes will prevent it."

If Mr. UNDERWOOD and the Democratic Party had taken the time to make a thorough investigation of the sheep industry in this country, they would have found that it costs 4 cents a pound more to produce wool in the West than it did a few years ago. A good portion of this is paid to the Government for grazing fees on the forest reserves. The balance is paid out in the increased price of labor, the increased cost of living, increased freight rates, and an increased price of everything that enters into the cost of producing a pound of wool.

Here are a few items of expense, if you please, that the American flockmaster must meet before his wool reaches the manufacturer:

In the West, figuring wool on a scoured basis, it costs the woolgrower 3 cents a pound for the privilege of grazing his sheep on the forest reserves for three and one-half months, or at the rate of more than 10 cents a pound, if you please, on the scoured basis, for grazing privileges the year round. We are paying the railroads of this country 6½ cents a pound freight on wool to the eastern markets, figured on the scoured basis. And we must pay the commission merchant in Boston 3½ cents per pound for handling and selling the wool to the manufacturers. These are fixed charges that are not within the power of the woolgrower to change.

We pay labor 20 per cent more than is paid in Australia and 300 per cent more than is paid in Mexico and South America. It is a well-known fact that it costs more to feed the shepherd dog on the ranges of the West than it does to feed the peons who are used for herding in some of the foreign countries, and yet the "free traders" would ask an America citizen to compete with these conditions.

In the protest made by the National Woolgrowers' Association against the free-meat bill before the Senate Finance Committee, Mr. Hagenbarth, of Idaho, and Mr. Knollin, of New Mexico, made a detailed statement showing the cost of every item connected with the sheep industry in the States of Idaho and New Mexico. These two ranches are ideally located for the economical conduction of the sheep industry, and are managed as carefully as any ranches in the United States. Mr. Hagenbarth shows that upon his ranch the average cost of labor for running his sheep for five years was $1.12 per head per year. He shows that the average annual cost for winter feed for each sheep during the same period had been 58 cents per head. He shows the average expense for grazing, taxes, interest, and general expense for five years to have been $1.58 per head, or an average cost of maintaining one sheep each a year, including 6 per cent interest on investment, had been $3.28 per head. He shows that it has cost on an average during this period 21.3 cents to produce a pound of wool, and it has cost 5.7 cents to produce a pound of mutton.

Mr. Knollin shows that on his ranch in New Mexico it is costing in labor for each sheep an average of 89.8 cents per head, and the total cost of running one sheep one year is $2.56 per head. He shows that it has cost on an average to produce one pound of wool 15.3 cents. These are figures that are sustained by vouchers and will be accepted by any court as truly setting forth the facts.

Now, let us look at the conditions that prevail in Australia and South America, the two greatest wool-producing countries in the world. Australia is recognized as one of the best sheep countries in the world. The surface of her land is covered with dense grasses and shrubs that furnish an abundance of year-long feed for sheep. The use of hay is unknown, and, in fact, it is not put up for sheep feed in that country.

The sheep industry of Australia is operated upon an entirely different basis from that obtaining in our own country. The lands, both in Australia and New Zealand, are leased to the sheep men in extremely large bodies for a period of from 5 to 20 years, at prices ranging from 12 cents per section (640 acres) to 10 cents per acre. It is said the average cost of grazing one sheep one year is 6 cents. It is estimated by all authorities that these lands will carry on an average of about one sheep to every acre and a half. This is for the year-long period. These leases range from 10,000 to 350,000 acres each, and are fenced with a wire fence against rabbits and other animals, and are again subdivided into paddocks, containing from 1,500 to 5,000 acres each. The sheep are turned into these paddocks with no one to care for them, except what is known as the fence rider, who goes through the various paddocks each day to see that everything is in proper shape. No herders are required, and at lambing time men on horseback ride through these paddocks and offer such assistance as may be necessary, it being estimated that one fence rider can look after as many as 5,000 sheep during the entire year, except at lambing time and when the sheep are rounded up for shearing, which is done on horseback, the same as cattle are gathered here. In order that you may know more clearly the carrying capacity of these Australian lands, I desire to give a brief description of some of their most important ranches:

In North Queensland, an important sheep district, an Australian correspondent says: "Regarding our sheep business on land from which the Crown draws a rental of from 2 to 4 cents per acre, it works out well, as for many seasons past holdings have been stocked up well, 1½ acres to one sheep for the whole district."

In New South Wales the Bundemar Ranch contains 40,000 acres, and runs from 30,000 to 40,000 sheep per year.

The Red Rock Ranch in New South Wales comprises 20,000 acres, and runs 20,000 merino sheep.

The Middlefield Ranch in New South Wales contains 10,000 acres, and runs 8,000 merino sheep.

In addition to the sheep on these ranches, quite a considerable number of cattle and horses are maintained. Thus it must be apparent to all that the carrying capacity of the New Zealand and Australian land is from four to six times greater than that of the western range land in the United States. It may be wondered at that these ranges are so productive, but this undoubtedly may be accounted for by the fact that the greater part of New Zealand and Australia has an average rainfall of from 18 to 24 inches per annum, and its climate permits grazing the year round.

In order that you may understand that hay is not relied upon as a feed for sheep, I quote some of the large land holdings in Australia and give the number of acres, as well as the number of acres cultivated on each ranch: Murtee Ranch, 343,600 acres, 167 acres cultivated; Marra Ranch, 252,900 acres, 10 acres cultivated; Avenue Ranch, 109,600 acres, 93 acres cultivated; Natillie Ranch, 322,300 acres, 29 acres cultivated.

The conditions of South America are superior to those obtaining in Australia, for we have innumerable Government publications which deal in detail with the great productiveness of the ranges of the Argentina. In that country alfalfa is sown upon the open range and produces a stand as great as that produced on the irrigated lands of this country. As much as 50,000 acres in a tract are seeded to alfalfa in South America and used solely for the grazing of sheep and cattle. You can imagine what the carrying capacity of such ranges would be.

Labor in South America commands an insignificant wage and consists largely of the native Indian and half-bred. These men receive in wages from $12 to $20 per month and board themselves. Sheep there are run largely in pastures, but in the more unpopulated parts herding still obtains.

There can be no doubt but that wool can be produced in Australia, New Zealand, and South America at less than one-half the cost in this country, due largely to the difference in the cost of labor and everything that goes toward the cost of producing a pound of wool. Take it on grazing privileges, the flockmaster of Australia is not paying more than 25 per cent of what the flockmaster who uses the forest reserves pays in America.

The question that the American people must settle is, "Shall the sheep industry be destroyed in this country because wool and mutton can be produced cheaper in foreign countries than in this?" Not only must the American people decide whether the sheep industry of this country shall be destroyed because wool and mutton can be grown cheaper in foreign countries, but they must decide whether the cattle industry shall be destroyed also. For if the free-meat bill becomes a law that has just been passed by the Democratic Party through the House of Representatives, the great cattle industry of this country must also become a thing of the past. For it is just as impossible to grow cattle in this country in competition with Australia and South America as it is to produce wool and mutton in competition with those countries. Free meats and free wool, together with reciprocity with Canada, leaves nothing on the protected list for the American farmer or the live-stock producer.

Let me say to the great manufacturing interests that this country could not endure half slave and half free, and if I judge the temper of the American people rightly, the farmers and live-stock breeders of this country will not submit long to a tariff on manufactured articles while all of their products are on the free list. If there is to be free, unrestricted competition with the world in the products of the soil of his country, then there must be free and unrestricted competition with the manufactured articles. If the labor on the farms and the labor of the live-stock industry is to be placed in competition with the peon labor of foreign countries, then the labor of the factories and mills must come in competition with the cheap labor of foreign countries. If the principle of protection is right, it is right all the way around. Nor is there any raw material produced on the farm. For the wool, the fat sheep, the fat steer, the wheat, oats, and the barley are the finished products of the farmer, as much as the output of the mills and the factories is the finished product of the manufacturer. All represent labor and all should be treated alike. If there is an honest difference in the cost of production of an article in this country, that honest difference should be given by a protective tariff, or else the industry that produces that article can not exist.

It seems to me that every American citizen should be proud of the fact that it does cost more to produce a pound of wool in this country than it does in foreign countries, for wool, like everything else that is produced, is a representation of labor; and who will deny that the high standard wages in this country is responsible for our splendid citizenship, and to reduce labor to the conditions in foreign countries would be a crime against this Government, and it must never be done.

We hear much about the high cost of clothing, and the sheep industry is charged with this responsibility. I deny most emphatically that the sheep industry or the protection placed on wool is responsible for the high cost of clothing, and I charge Mr. UNDERWOOD with knowing this to be true. If Mr. UNDERWOOD and the Democratic Party had made an investigation into the high cost of clothing they would know that the woolgrowers are not responsible for this high cost, and they know, too, that the high cost of clothing in this country can be charged to the corporate greed and an extravagant system of doing business in America.

Now let me show you what the American flockmaster gets for the raw material that is put into a suit of clothes:

The average price of wool in the grease, as it comes from the sheep's back, has been for the past two years 14¾ cents per pound. The average shrinkage of American wool is 61 per cent; that is, after it is washed or scoured, as it is called, 61 per cent of wool is washed away in dirt, grease, and foreign substances that is found in the wool as it comes from the sheep's back.

Now, in making this wool into cloth another loss occurs, so that it takes 19 ounces of scoured wool to make 1 pound of cloth. The average weight of a yard of cloth, taking what is known as the lightweight for summer and the heavyweight for winter, is 14 ounces, and it takes about 3¾ yards of cloth to make the average suit of clothes, or 9 pounds of wool in the grease, and at the average price that this wool has been selling for the past two years at the railroad stations of this country—for 14¾ cents—we find that the American flockmaster gets the magnificent sum of $1.34 out of an all-wool suit of clothes.

Is there a man in America that this $1.34 that the woolgrower receives for all the wool that goes into a suit of clothes so poor that he has been denied the privilege of wearing an all-wool suit of clothes? I think not. I do not believe that there is a man in America that this $1.34 would be a burden to. One dollar and thirty-four cents, if you please, for all the wool in an all-wool suit of clothes, and don't forget that this is the best. This is cloth made out of what is known as first-class wools—the best wools in the world.

Now let us see what the manufacturer gets for his cloth. I find upon investigation that it is the custom for the great mills of this country to sell their cloth under contract to the great wholesale houses in our large cities at from $1.10 a yard to $1.75 a yard. So I find that the manufacturer receives about $4.40 for the cloth in a suit of clothes. This represents all that the woolgrower receives for a year's labor of growing the wool; all the railroad gets for hauling the wool some thousands of miles; all the commission men get for handling and selling the wool; and all the manufacturer receives for making it into cloth. Four dollars and forty cents, if you please, for the cloth in a suit of clothes, "all wool and a yard wide," ready to be made into a suit.

Now let us follow this cloth to the wholesalers—men who produce nothing at all, who neither spin nor weave—and see what they get for selling the cloth to the merchants of the country. A careful investigation shows that they charge from 80 to 140 per cent for distributing the cloth to the merchants, or, in other words, the great wholesalers get more out of a yard of cloth than the flockmasters, the railroad, the commission man, and the manufacturer all put together. Follow this cloth to your tailor, and you will find he has paid from $2 to $4 a yard for it. Now, let him take your measurement for an all-wool suit, and you will find it will cost you from $30 to $65, depending largely upon the location and reputation of the tailor. Next step into the retail merchant's establishment and ask for a ready-made all-wool suit of clothes, and you must pay from $20 to $30. Will Mr. UNDERWOOD guarantee the American people, if he is allowed to destroy the sheep industry of this country, that they will have cheaper clothing? I have a suspicion that this $1.34—all the woolgrower receives—would go to increase the profits of the wholesales and retailers before it reaches the American consumer.

The flockmasters of this country pay $60,000,000 a year for labor, the best paid labor for the growing of wool in all the world.

Mr. UNDERWOOD tells the people that one reason why they are levying a 20 per cent ad valorem duty on wool is because of the depleted condition of the Treasury; but upon investigation I find there is no truth in this, as the Treasury is not depleted, nor is there any danger of its being depleted under the present laws. The only time we have had a depleted Treasury in this country in time of peace was when the Democratic Party put wool on the free list and tried to operate this country under Democratic principles enacted into laws.

We hear much from the Democratic Party about the efficiency of labor in this country, and we are all proud of the fact that labor generally is more efficient here in this country than in any nation on earth. But the labor is more efficient here because it is better paid, and this gives the laborer a chance for better homes, better food, and better clothing. The home is always better, and the citizenship of the country is better where the wolf is kept away from the door.

Let us not forget that this is the twentieth century, and the whole world is advancing with a rapidity that was never known before. America is taking the lead in this great advancement of efficiency, and the American laborer is largely responsible for this advancement. The shorter hours and better pay he has received has given him a chance for self-improvement and he has become the inventive genius of the world. Let us continue to see that he is better paid than any other laborer on earth, and not throw our ports open, which means placing them in competition with the world.

Let us not become foolish about the efficiency of labor and believe that this is enough to protect him against foreign labor. I am sure that all who have watched the wonderful development of Japan during the last decade must realize that the Japanese are becoming wonderfully efficient in anything they undertake; and then will the "free trader" tell me why the Englishman, the German, the Frenchman, or any other foreigner can not be made just as efficient in his own country as he is in this? We must not forget that during the 50 years that a protective policy has been the law of this country it has built up conditions that can not be ignored. To ignore them would be a crime. You can not bring about a readjustment of business in this country by a reduction of wages, nor an increase in the hours of labor, nor should it be done.

The Democratic Party seems to be under the impression that they have been elected to inaugurate the free-trade policies again; but if they will look at the vote of the country that has given them a temporary control of the House of Representatives they will find that their majority was brought about largely by the Republicans staying at home and not voting. Hundreds of thousands of people in this country have become alarmed at the corporate greed that threatened this form of government, and they are impatient toward any party that is in power that does not regulate this great evil at once.

I sometimes wonder if the American people have forgotten the conditions that existed under the Wilson bill, when for the first time in 30 years the free-trade policies of the Democratic Party were enacted into laws. There can be no better demonstration than that given by President Cleveland's two administrations as President of the United States what free-trade principles mean when enacted into laws. During Grover Cleveland's first administration the Republicans had control of the Senate, so that it was impossible for the Democratic Party to enact any of their free-trade principles into laws. During those four years Grover Cleveland paid off $340,000,000 of the national indebtedness. But Grover Cleveland was elected a second time, and with him a Democratic House and a Democratic Senate, and here we find the free-trade principles enacted into laws, and oh, what a story of misery and suffering they tell. Hundreds of thousands of men were thrown out of employment and free soup houses had to be established in all the large cities to prevent death from starvation. Instead of paying off any of the national indebtedness he was compelled to sell $260,000,000 worth of bonds in time of peace to pay the running expenses of this Government. One hundred and seventy-seven railroads, with mileage enough to reach twice around the earth, could not meet their obligations, and were forced into the hands of a receiver. In those four years of free trade and Democratic rule the country witnessed 60,000 commercial failures, with liabilities amounting to $900,000,000. One hundred and seventy-five national banks closed their doors, and the balance of trade turned ruinously against us. If capital alone had suffered during those fours years it would have been bad enough, but those who suffered the most were the army of men thrown out of employment, many of them with families depending upon them for their daily bread.

Let us hope that the American people have not forgotten those years of depression, and that they will not try again those old policies of the Democratic Party that have always brought ruin and disaster when enacted into laws.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of the Hon. GEORGE W. KIPP, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon.

RECESS.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, in order to enable certain Senators to address the Senate on the pending bill, I move that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning. Then the regular session will begin at 12 o'clock.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, pending that, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to say that at that time I should like to submit some observations upon the amendment which I shall offer as a substitute for the pending measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HEYBURN in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, July 27, 1911, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 26, 1911.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, Father of all souls, we thank Thee for that deep and abiding faith which through all the vicissitudes of life holds us close to Thee; for the star of hope which illumines our way and leads on to nobler life and endeavor; for that subtile, pure, mysterious something which we call "love," which binds us together into families and friendships which time nor space can sever. Once more the angel of death has visited the congressional family and taken from this House a Member who, though modest and unassuming, promised a career of great usefulness to his State and Nation. Comfort his colleagues and friends, and be very near to the bereaved family; inspire them to look forward to a happy reunion somewhere, sometime, where sorrow and death never come. And we will ascribe all praise to Thee, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, July 22, 1911, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed wtihout amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 4412. An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes.

The message from the Senate also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 323. An act for the payment of certain claims for damages to and loss of private property;

S. 943. An act to improve navigation on Black Warrior River, in the State of Alabama;

S. 3024. An act to provide for the reconstruction, alteration, and repair of a bridge across the Weymouth Back River, in the State of Massachusetts; and

S. J. Res. 21. Joint resolution increasing the membership of the Joint Committee of Congress upon the Library.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3024. An act to provide for the reconstruction, alteration, and repair of a bridge across the Weymouth Back River, in the State of Massachusetts; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 943. An act to improve navigation on Black Warrior River, in the State of Alabama; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

S. 323. An act for the payment of certain claims for damages to and loss of private property; to the Committee on Claims.

S. J. Res. 21. Joint resolution increasing the membership of the Joint Committee of Congress upon the Library; to the Committee on the Library.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—KILLIAN SIMON.

Mr. KONOP, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Killian Simon, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

TREATY OF 1832 WITH RUSSIA.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes in which to address the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I understand an announcement was to be made, and that the House was to adjourn soon. I think it is not desirable to have any other business transacted in the absence of a quorum.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. May I say to the gentleman from Illinois that I merely rise to present to the House and to have printed in the RECORD a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York?

Mr. MANN. The proper way to do that is to present it through the basket. The rules provide a method of doing that.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The concurrent resolution favors the abrogation of the treaty of 1832 between the United States and Russia, and I am sure the gentleman from Illinois can have no objection to printing that in the RECORD. I think the gentleman should accord that courtesy to the Legislature of the State of New York as well as to the people affected by the matter involved.

Mr. MANN. The Legislature of the State of New York is entitled to no more courtesy and no less than the legislature of any other State in the Union. The rules of the House provide a method of presenting such things.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The Massachusetts resolution was read the other day. I trust that the gentleman from Illinois will allow this resolution to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York has the floor now. Why does he not use it?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his objection?

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; not at all. The question has not been submitted for objection yet.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois is objecting?

Mr. MANN. I have not heard any request submitted by the Chair yet.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I made the request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair put the question to the House: "Is there objection?"

Mr. MANN. I beg the Chair's pardon. I did not hear the request submitted. I was mistaken. But I do not think it desirable to have any business transacted to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution which I now present be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the resolution which he sends to the Clerk's desk be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am not so easily caught as that. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. CANNON. The regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is to lay before the House two reports from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 4412. An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12312. An act to amend paragraph 500 of the act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. CANNON. I do not raise the point of no quorum. It looks as though there was no quorum, but I do not raise the point.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand what the gentleman from Illinois said.

Mr. CANNON. I made the remark that I doubted if there was a quorum present. If there is not a quorum present, and the point is made, of course no business can be transacted; but I do not care to make the point myself.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. CRAVENS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 12312. An act to amend paragraph 500 of the act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes"; and

H. R. 4412. An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes.

PUBLICITY OF CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Chair to lay before the House the bill (H. R. 2958) which has passed the Senate, known as the publicity bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the request is made, I shall make the point of no quorum.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will permit me to make a statement and will reserve his point.

Mr. MANN. I understood that an announcement was to be made to the House, and if it is to be made it would be better to have it made now.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement, if I may.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can make the statement to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes to make a statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] asks unanimous consent for five minutes to make a statement. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. At this time I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I object to the gentleman objecting.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE KIPP.

Mr. ROTHERMEL. Mr. Speaker, at the request of his family, I desire to announce the death of Hon. GEORGE WASHINGTON KIPP, late a Member of this House and a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania, and I move the adoption of the following resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 247.

Resolved, That the House has heard with regret and profound sorrow of the death of GEORGE WASHINGTON KIPP, Representative in this House from the fourteenth congressional district of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That a committee of 15 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral, at Towanda, Pa.; and that the necessary expenses attending the execution of this order be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for properly carrying out the provisions of these resolutions.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were agreed to, and the Speaker appointed as the committee on the part of the House Mr. ROTHERMEL, Mr. MCHENRY, Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania, Mr. PALMER, Mr. DIFENDERFER, Mr. GREGG of Pennsylvania, Mr. LEE of Pennsylvania, Mr. SHERWOOD, Mr. LAMB, Mr. UNDERHILL, Mr. MCDERMOTT, Mr. OLMSTED, Mr. MCCREARY, Mr. LANGHAM, and Mr. ANDREWS.

Mr. ROTHERMEL. Mr. Speaker, as a further mark of respect, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The resolution was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, July 27, 1911, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

[Continuation of legislative day of Wednesday, July 26, 1911.]

The Senate met, at the expiration of the recess, at 10 o'clock a. m., Thursday, July 27, 1911.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11019) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE obtained the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I trust the Senator will not make a call for a quorum. I would prefer to go on. I think Senators will come in, and if a call should be made it would compel us to suspend proceedings.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin will proceed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin has kindly yielded for a few minutes to me for the purpose of discussing the pending bill (H. R. 11019) to reduce the duty on wool and manufactures of wool. I did intend to go into this question in detail. I had hoped to have time enough to explain to Senators before the vote upon this bill was taken the working of Schedule K, beginning with the wool in the grease and following it until it was manufactured into clothing. But I am admonished by the Senator from Wisconsin that he would like to begin his speech at 10.30. Therefore, I shall have to content myself with discussing very briefly one or two points, leaving the question of a thorough consideration of Schedule K to some future time, more than likely after the Tariff Board has made its report.

I wish that the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] were present, for, in a spirit of friendship and kindness, I wanted to call attention to some of the statements made by him yesterday, because I believe that he has been misinformed as to the price of wool in London and the price of wool in this country, or as to the grade and classification of the wools compared. On further examination I am positive the Senator would make the correction. If true, his statement proves beyond question that our woolgrowers in this country are in such a disorganized condition or so woefully lack business capacity that a tariff rate of any amount would not help them, for they sell their wool for the price offered them and do not take into consideration the world price, knowing that the manufacturer must import wools and pay the London price plus the duty, whatever it is.

Congress can not legislate a market for wool. That is impossible. It can legislate a duty upon wool in the grease of 11 cents per pound, a duty on washed wool of 22 cents, a duty on scoured wool of 33 cents a pound; but it can not pass a law directing the wool men of this country to sell their wool for 11 cents more in the grease than it is sold in foreign lands, grade, shrinkage, and classification being equal; nor can it say to the manufacturer "You must pay 11 cents per pound more for like wools." Eliminate from the present law the skirting clause and increase the rate on washed wools of the second class to twice that of wools of the second class in the grease and the average shrinkage of foreign wools imported into this country will be about the same as the American wools, grade for grade alike. I know for the last year the American woolgrower has not received much benefit from the tariff, but the reason for that is the fear of the American manufacturer, the only purchaser the woolgrower has, that the revision of Schedule K will place wool on the free list or nearly so. The manufacturer must look ahead at least one year, for it takes at least that length of time after purchasing the wool in the grease before he can convert the wool into finished goods and get returns from the sale of them. He is not like a merchant who can buy a sack of sugar to-day and it is sold to-morrow. One hundred per cent on wools with inadequate protection of the manufactured article would not benefit the woolgrower a penny, for with the American mills closed and woolen goods being furnished the American people by foreign manufacturers the woolgrower would have to look to the foreigner for a market for his wool.

Mr. President, the agitation which has been going on, through the newspapers and magazines of this country, I believe, moderately estimated, has cost the industries covered by Schedule K $150,000,000. It caused the farmers who grow wool to sell the clip of 1910 at $25,000,000 less than they received for the 1909 clip. Prices in the United States have fallen 30 per cent, while everywhere else in the world they have advanced 10 per cent. The prices in the value of wool carried over from 1909 to this year, with the goods made therefrom, has caused another loss of $25,000,000. There has been a shrinkage of $2 per head in the value of 25,000,000 sheep, making another $50,000,000.

But the most disastrous effect of this agitation has been felt by the laborers employed in the mills that manufacture wool. Lack of employment and loss of wages from this cause have been another $50,000,000, and this is the most cruel blow of all. These losses to a great American industry are caused by the fear of radical legislation. What the losses would be in case the House Democratic wool bill became a law no man can tell, but all must admit that it would be appalling.

We do know that to-day not to exceed 33⅓ per cent of the woolen cards of this country are running. The business stands almost paralyzed under the wicked assaults made upon it. All sorts of misrepresentations and falsehoods by individuals and press have been directed at Schedule K. It has been made the basis of criticism of the last tariff act. What has Schedule K done for this country? It has stimulated the manufacture of ready-made clothing, so that a suit in this country, fashionably cut and well tailored, made of an all-wool worsted fabric, can be bought for less money than would have to be paid in Europe for a similar suit made there by a merchant tailor, admitting that his cloth in Europe is only one-half the price of similar cloth in America. So an English laborer coming here could purchase a suit of clothes for one week's pay which he could not get in England for two weeks' pay. A German laborer could purchase a suit of clothes for one week's pay here which he could not buy in Germany for three weeks' pay. An Italian laborer could buy here his suit for one week's pay, which he could not buy in Italy for five weeks' pay. A Chinese or a Japanese laborer could buy here a suit of clothes for one week's pay which he could not buy in China or Japan for 14½ weeks' pay.

So I say, Mr. President, that Schedule K has not been so bad after all, when considering the grade and the price of clothing to the American people.

I wish that every American citizen actually knew what the manufacturer received for the cloth in his suit of clothes. I wish that every American citizen knew that a blue or black worsted serge can be bought by the American clothing manufacturer, he who makes the cloth into clothes, for from $2.90 to $5 per suit. I believe if he understood it there would not be this hue and cry against the woolen manufacturer of this country.

I realize, Mr. President, that while my State is chiefly interested in the development of the sheep industry and the growth of wool, its people must have a home market for that wool, or, no matter what duty is levied upon it, they would get no benefit from it. Therefore I am interested not only in protecting the woolgrower, but I am interested also in protecting the woolen manufacturer, because he is the only purchaser of the product of the woolgrower in this country.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMOOT. Just for a question, because I have only a few minutes remaining.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah declines to yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not decline to yield for a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. STONE. I have just come into the Chamber, and I failed to hear the previous remarks of the Senator. I wish to ask him whether he is defending in his speech the present duties in Schedule K of the Payne law or whether he is presenting reasons why they should be reduced according to his bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not the time to-day to discuss any particular bill; I have only a few minutes at my disposal. I am speaking on but one or two points affecting Schedule K.

The production of a woolen mill is sold to the trade six months ahead on samples made and submitted by it. These sample pieces are made by every mill twice a year, one lot called "lightweights" and the other known as "heavyweights." They are first made in blanket form, and the mill designer hardly knows whether the blanket will contain successful patterns or not. A blanket may contain a thousand different designs and but few found, after finishing, worthy of selection as popular sellers. The success of a mill greatly depends upon the designer, for if the samples made by him are not what the trade demands in color, styles, pattern, price, and finish the mill will be idle for want of orders, while if his designs are popular and the trade requirements met as to patterns, fabric, and price, the mill will be crowded with orders. No mill is always successful in this regard, nor always unsuccessful. Every cloth mill has a designer, makes its own samples, submits them to the trade twice a year. For these reasons it is impossible to form a woolen manufacturers' trust. There is always the sharpest kind of competition.

There have been, Mr. President, statements made in the Senate and a sentiment created in this country that there was a woolen manufacturers' trust or monopoly. Any person who understands the manufacturing of woolen goods would never make such a statement. The plan of converting wool into goods is of such a nature that it is impossible, unless all or the great majority of the mills are actually owned by one corporation.

Mr. President, in the United States we have over a thousand woolen mills. The American Woolen Co., or the so-called trust, owns about thirty of these thousand mills. It has nearly 8,000 looms. In America there are nearly 70,000 looms. There is produced in this country over $450,000,000 in woolen goods. The American Woolen Co. produces between $28,000,000 and $35,000,000 of this amount. Every other mill in this country makes its own goods, submits them to the trade every year, sells its goods upon the samples submitted—there are no two mills with samples just alike—so I say it is impossible under these conditions to form a Woolen Goods Trust.

It has been charged by Senators not once, but a good many times, that the profits in the woolen business are exorbitant, and they claim that it is the result of the tariff that these immense profits are possible. I ask leave to put in the RECORD a table showing the actual profits of some of the leading mills in the different sections of this country. It shows that the average profit of those mills is less than 7 per cent per annum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

NOTE.—Operations of Amory and Manchester are for 17 years and American Woolen since organization in 1899.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to briefly call attention to another matter, and that is the question of levying ad valorem duties on woolen goods. Every time that a bill has been passed since 1867 changing the system of specific duties or the plan of specific and ad valorem duties combined in Schedule K it has proved disastrous to the business in this country.

Mr. President, take the act of 1883, called anybody's act, but sired by nobody and damned by everybody, and what do we find? The specific duties were lowered especially upon clothes and wastes. The result was heavy importations and a period of depression in the woolen business. I have here a table showing the years, the rate of duty, the quantity imported in pounds, the value of the product, the duty collected, the average price per unit, and the average ad valorem duty. Take rags, shoddy, and mungo. Under a duty of 10 cents a pound we imported 1,235,360 pounds in 1884, the first year of the act. The importation grew until in 1889 we imported 8,478,984 pounds. Take the importations of the manufactures of wool, or of cloth, or of flannels, and the difference is as great, and in some cases greater. I ask to insert the table in my remarks, without reading.

The table referred to is as follows:

Mr. SMOOT. Coming now to the Wilson law, I have here, Mr. President, a statement showing the importation of cloths, woolen or worsted. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] the other day stated that it was not on account of the rates in the Wilson law that the woolen mills in this country were closed, but it was because, he said, the purchasing power of the people was not so great and there was a stagnation of business all over the world. I want to call the attention of Senators to the fact that there was a stagnation of business in America; the purchasing power of the American people was reduced by lack of employment over one-half, and instead of goods being made here by American labor they were made abroad; but, hard as the times were, little money as the people had, the importation of woolen and worsted goods, dress goods, yarns, and wastes actually increased.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator——

Mr. SMOOT. I can not yield, because I have only about seven minutes left.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah declines to yield.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but merely to ask a question. Were those importations of raw wool or cloth I will ask the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. Those importations were of manufactured yarns and cloth. Mr. President, if the market for American wool is to be destroyed it makes no difference to the woolgrower whether it is accomplished by a high duty on wool with a low enough duty on woolen goods to close the mills, his only purchaser, or by a law giving inadequate protection on wool. A pound of manufactured cloth imported into this country displaces 4 pounds of American-raised wool in the grease and deprives the American laborer of employment in making the wool into cloth. I want to call the attention of Senators to the fact that shoddies and wastes of all kinds imported into this country for three years and eight months, under the McKinley law beginning in 1891 up to 1894, amounted to 908,923 pounds.

Mr. McCUMBER. For the four years?

Mr. SMOOT. For the three years and eight months. During the three years and four months of the Wilson law the importations increased from 908,923 pounds to 86,263,630 pounds, an increase of not 100 per cent, not 1,000 per cent, but of 9,000 per cent. That was the period when shoddy reigned. We all remember those days when the theory of free raw materials and a duty for revenue only on manufactured goods was put in practice. That was the time the American people were clothed with patched suits or cloth made of rags and shoddy, instead of wool. Mr. President, what does that mean? It means that it would take the State of California 19 years to raise wool enough to equal the importation of shoddy for those 3 years and 4 months; it would take the State of Wisconsin 27 years, under her present production, to produce wool enough to take the place of the shoddy that was imported into this country under the Wilson law during 3 years and 4 months. We find that during the 13 years after the repeal of the Wilson law there have been imported into this country only 6,751,557 pounds of shoddies and wastes.

Mr. President, if the Democratic wool bill passes this Senate and becomes a law, there will be scarcely a woolen mill in this country that can survive. I plead with Senators to save the business, because it is a great one. Senators will notice that even under the rates to-day there is collected in revenue from the importations of manufactured woolen goods something like $20,000,000. It seems to me that the only proper way to handle this question is to wait for the report of the Tariff Board, not particularly to learn what the wages in this country are, not particularly as to what the cost of production of wool in this country is, but more particularly to obtain the cost of production of wool in foreign countries and what the cost of production of cloth in foreign countries is, and especially the wage paid the employees.

Mr. President, an ad valorem duty equaling the difference between the cost of production in this country and a foreign country is never a protective duty, for undervaluation has been and always will be resorted to by the importer and foreign manufacturer; it can not be avoided and has always proven a curse to the protective system and a robbery of the Public Treasury; but a specific duty can not be evaded. It is so much a pound, while an ad valorem duty is based upon the value of the goods at the last port of shipment. What protection would the woolgrower receive under the 20 per cent ad valorem duty? I received a telegram this morning giving the price of wool per pound, unskirted, in Buenos Aires—wool that comes in direct competition with 85 per cent of all the wool grown in the Rocky Mountain States, shrinking 65 per cent. The price named is 13½ cents per pound. Twenty per cent on 13½ cents is 2.6 cents per pound.

Mr. President, I say to the Senate now that if the House bill should become a law, it would be worse in its operation on the wool industry than the Wilson law, because under the Wilson law the manufacturers were given an average duty upon cloth of from 40 to 50 per cent. It was utterly impossible for the mills with those rates of ad valorem duty to exist with free wool; and under the Underwood bill the manufacturer is taxed 20 per cent on his wool and only given an average ad valorem duty of 35 to 40 per cent. Under such conditions it would be impossible for the manufacturer to exist; and if the manufacturer should cease to run his mill the market of the American woolgrower would be taken from him and it would be impossible for him to raise wool for exportation.

Mr. President, the time allotted to me has expired, but I do wish that I had an hour or so to go into the details of the operation of Schedule K. However, as stated before, I will content myself by taking some other time to show to the Senate the workings of that schedule. It is said that it is a difficult schedule to understand. It is a scientific schedule, and perhaps when a few provisions are taken out of it and the maximum rate is limited, as my amendment proposes to limit it, to 80 per cent, I believe that it will be the best system for maintaining the woolen industry in this country.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE obtained the floor.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield for a moment.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] declined to yield for a question. He charged in his address that the woolen mills were closed by the Wilson law. I want to ask the distinguished Senator from Utah what is the cause for the closing of the woolen mills to-day? They are closed in my part of the country, and I was handed a pamphlet to-day containing engravings of several mills that are closed. In figure 4 there is the engraving of the Provo Woolen Mills, Provo, Utah, Hon. REED SMOOT, president; and it is stated that those mills have been idle for several years, being deprived of the raw material by duties from 100 to 700 per cent. Now, I ask the Senator if the present Payne-Aldrich bill will not keep his mills open, in heaven's name what does he want?

The Senator has spoken of the wage earner in the woolen mills. As I said some days ago, in response to the Senator from Idaho, the less said about the wages of the wage earner in the woolen mills of this land the better for the credit of the woolen manufacturer. They are paid a mere pittance, until body and soul can scarce hold together.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the statement made by the Senator may be——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield for a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. The statement made by the Senator may be satisfactory to him, and if true worthy of an answer. I can not take the time of the Senator from Wisconsin to answer in full the statement made by the Senator from New Jersey, but in answer to the Senator's statement as to wages paid in the woolen mills of America, I want to put in the RECORD a statement showing the wages paid in the different departments of the woolen mills of this country and those paid in England.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission to do so is granted.

The table referred to is as follows:

	Wages in England per report W. A. G. Clark.	Wages in United States (Philadelphia rates).
Wool sorters	$7.00 -$8.00	$14.00-$15.00

[2] $18 for 18 looms.

Mr. SMOOT. In reference to the circular to which the Senator from New Jersey has called my attention, I will say that the Provo Mills are running to-day. The circular was inspired by a lot of disgruntled carded woolen manufacturers who wanted low rates on shoddy and wastes in order that they might import them and displace as many pounds of scoured wool. The falsehoods contained in the circular I have not the time at present to answer.

The Senator wants to know why some of the woolen mills of the country are closed to-day. I will tell the Senator the reason. It is because of the pall cast over the business by the action of the present Democratic House of Representatives, and because of the further fact that the continual agitation for a revision of Schedule K has discouraged the merchant from buying for future wants and the manufacturer finds himself without orders, and it will be so until the question is settled and settled in the right way.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. One moment. The Senator from New Jersey must not interrupt until the Senator from Wisconsin gives permission.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I can not yield for a running debate. I have some——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor, and can not be taken from it without his consent, and that consent he declines to give.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would be very glad to yield to Senators, but it will take me all the time that I can get between now and 12 o'clock to conclude what I have to say on the amendment which I now offer.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin has declined to yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I will not ask to have read at this time, because it will consume time which I prefer to take in explaining the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment can be presented now, to be offered later.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Very well. I present it now, to be offered later.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield for a question.

Mr. GORE. I desire to request the Senator from Utah, in connection with his table showing the wages in England and the United States, to print also a table showing the wages in the woolen mills in free-trade England and in protected Germany.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Oklahoma can print the tables in his own time, I will say.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I had hoped that they might go to the country together.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered as a substitute to the pending bill is substantially the same amendment which I offered to the bill carrying out the President's agreement with Canada. I have made one change in that amendment to which I wish to direct the attention of Senators. I have transferred from the free list to class 2 hair of the goat and alpaca, which under the provisions of my amendment will take a duty of 10 per cent.

Senators will remember a brief two years ago when that gifted man of power, the late Senator Dolliver, was here in all his splendid vigor, striking masterful blows against this particular schedule, and pressing in debate the then Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. Aldrich, the latter made the impassioned declaration that Schedule K was the very citadel of protection. I think he rightly characterized it.

It has been the stronghold of protection, but it has inspired the severest and most unanswerable criticisms that have been leveled against the protective system. The very foundation of the power of Schedule K was laid in a coalition between the woolgrowers and the wool manufacturers. It combined the laborers in the factory with the laborers upon the farm. It had no counterpart in any other schedule of the tariff law. The mill owner and the sheep owner united at that time to construct a schedule which would protect the interests of both.

It is my judgment that there are no more iniquitous, no more indefensible, no more harmful provisions in all the tariff law than those contained in Schedule K. The mill men and the woolgrowers together constructed a law the terms of which are so complicated, so devious and obscure that within its windings and turnings, comprehension and criticism are lost. They contrived a mixture, a blend of duties, compensatory and protective, specific and ad valorem, so compounded with mysterious proportions, equivalents, and equivocations as to make the logarithms of trigonometry a simple pastime in comparison. They based duties upon false claims as to some of the terms of their formulæ and equations.

The duties on wool were made to appear much higher than they are. The manufacturers' duties were obscured and concealed in the technical terms of the business. The woolgrowers were ignorant of manufacturing. The manufacturers were masters of their craft in all its details. The excessive duties of Schedule K are a product of expert knowledge and misrepresentation regarding it. The public is the victim. It is therefore quite apparent that the manufacturer, and not the woolgrower, was the author of the iniquity of this schedule.

Let us look at it calmly and dispassionately. Two duties are imposed upon manufactures of wool under Schedule K; first, a compensatory duty, which is supposed to equal the amount of duty imposed upon the quantity of raw wool contained in a manufactured article. This is levied on the assumption that it is necessary in order to place the American manufacturer, as to his raw material, on a level or equal footing with his foreign competitor, who has free wool.

Second, in addition to this there is the so-called protective duty, presumed to measure the difference in the cost of production in this and the competing foreign countries. The compensatory duties are sufficient to give the American manufacturer an equal opportunity with his foreign competitor, who has free wool. The protective duties begin at the point where the compensatory duties are supposed to leave the manufacturer as to his raw material on an absolute equality with the foreign manufacturer who has free wool. And the protective duties are fixed in the law independently of, and additional to, the compensatory duties and profess to be equivalent to the difference in the cost of production here and abroad. The protective duty is supposed in the main to measure the difference in the cost of wages here and abroad, as everybody will agree.

Now, Mr. President, when the manufacturer and the grower came together in agreement, and when Schedule K was first constructed—right at the very outset they agreed upon a false standard by which to measure compensatory duties.

The manufacturers persuaded the Congress that adopted that scheme of legislation that it took 2½ pounds of wool in the grease to make a pound of yarn worth not to exceed 30 cents per pound. That is false. That is not true. We know to-day, if we have cared to look into it, that on the average it does not take to exceed a pound and a half of wool in the grease to make a pound of yarn worth not to exceed 30 cents per pound. They had that false basis incorporated in the law; it was made a part of the statute, that yarn worth 30 cents a pound or less should take a compensatory duty equal to the duty on 2½ pounds of first-class wool. That means it will take a duty, when computed on the 11-cents-a-pound basis, of 27½ cents. They persuaded the Ways and Means Committee to believe that it took 2½ pounds of that kind of grease wool, which paid a duty of 11 cents a pound, to make a pound of yarn of the 30-cent-per-pound grade. It does not. That falsehood, Mr. President, was written into the law, and we have been paying duties on that false basis ever since.

Now, what does it take? Decisions of the Treasury Department on drawback propositions show that on the average it takes a pound and a half of wool in the grease of the first class to make a pound of yarn worth 30 cents per pound.

This "compensatory" duty, therefore, of 27½ cents per pound gives an excess compensatory duty of 11 cents on every single pound of yarn valued at 30 cents—in other words, that duty of 27½ cents levied on all yarn worth 30 cents or less per pound, on the theory that it takes 2½ pounds of wool in the grease to make it, gives an advantage to the wool manufacturer of this country of 11 cents on every pound of that grade of yarn, which, figured on an ad valorem basis, shows the duty to be 40 per cent in excess of what actually measures the difference in the cost of raw material. Then, in addition to that, they secured the protective duty that they contended was necessary to measure the difference in the cost of production in this and competing foreign countries. I hope I make myself understood.

Mr. RAYNER. I should like to ask the Senator——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. RAYNER. And on top of that they got double the amount of the protective duty, as I understand it. How much more did they get for the protective duty, in addition to that for the compensatory duty?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It depends on what you are dealing with, I will say to the Senator. Upon yarn worth less than 30 cents per pound added to this excessive compensatory duty they have a protective duty of 35 per cent, and on higher grades a still higher protective duty.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will yield for a question. I can not yield for any extended interruption if I am to conclude what I want to say. I desire to explain my amendments before I get through. This is only preliminary to that.

Mr. SMOOT. I realize that, Mr. President, and perhaps I had better not interrupt the Senator. But I was going to ask him, and I will ask him, one question. What is the average shrinkage of wools raised in the United States?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the shrinkage varies.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, the average.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The shrinkage is very great and the average varies on every lot of wool; there is no question about that. The ad valorem rates of duty which I have provided in my amendment will automatically adjust themselves to every possible condition; that will meet the prices and the shrinkage upon the coarser wools and the prices and the shrinkage upon the finer wools.

And it is for that reason, Mr. President, that I believe, as I shall explain more fully if time permits, that we should adopt ad valorem instead of specific duties, unless we can have our whole tariff system scientifically overhauled and the lines where specific duties should take effect fixed upon a scientific basis and not upon the loose system which has been devised in the committee rooms of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I realize that it will take too much time to ask any further questions that will give any enlightenment, so I will not ask them.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Now, Mr. President, just a word further on the point I was discussing when interrupted. We have this provision regarding yarns valued at 30 cents per pound and less; and then a further provision written into the tariff law that if the yarn is valued at more than 30 cents a pound the law will presume that it took 3½ pounds of wool in the grease to make that pound of yarn, and therefore the compensatory duty shall be three and one-half times 11 cents a pound, which is the duty on wool in the grease, and this in addition to the protective duty of 40 per cent ad valorem.

It does not take 3½ pounds of that sort of wool to make a pound of that kind of yarn; but, Mr. President and Senators, let me say that you have that same opportunity, that same side door through which is stolen additional protection—and you have had it from the very beginning—not only on the yarn but on cloth. If cloth is worth less than 40 cents per pound, then they made the law say that it takes 3 pounds of wool in the grease to make a pound of cloth. If it is worth more than 40 and less than 70 cents a pound, the men who framed this law originally were led to believe that it took 4 pounds of wool in the grease to make every pound of that class of cloth. That is false, Mr. President. That is not true. But Schedule K says it is true, and on that false basis assesses a compensatory duty of 44 cents a pound on every pound of that cloth and adds to that a protective duty of 50 per cent ad valorem.

Now, I do not simply put my assertion up against the law. Mr. S. S. Dale, of Boston, is the editor of the Textile World Record, the trade paper of the textile industry, and particularly of the woolen industry. He was the manager of great woolen mills and has become familiar through personal experience with everything pertaining to the industry. I have come to know him quite well and to greatly respect him not only for his very accurate knowledge of this whole subject, but as a man of the highest standards of integrity.

Knowing the jugglery that was practiced when the law was originally framed, Mr. Dale, some time ago, conducted a series of experiments to determine whether there were 4 pounds of wool in the grease in every pound of cloth that was assessed upon that basis of a compensatory duty of 44 cents per pound in addition to the protective duty.

Mr. Dale, as superintendent of factories, as a hand in the mills working his way up from the very beginning, knew that that was not true, and he conducted, as I say, a series of experiments to determine the measure of grease wool entering into the manufacture of a large range of woolen cloth. He took 11 typical samples and followed them through the various stages of manufacture from the grease wool, as it came into the factory, to the finished cloth as it was turned out. Then he applied the Payne-Aldrich tariff, in order to settle the question whether there was an excess of duties afforded on the compensatory provision, and he found just this with respect to the 11 samples of cloth; and he made it so thorough that he took 10,000 yards and followed it through as it was manufactured, so that, pound by pound of cloth to grease wool, he knew exactly what there was in it. Then he figured out the compensatory duty allowed under the law on each pound of that finished cloth, and he found that, pound per pound, clear through the 11 samples there was an excess of compensatory duty to be added to what the manufacturers themselves had said was a sufficient protective duty. In the ad valorem duty which they get on these various grades he found that there was an excess of compensatory duty on each one of these various grades and samples: Sample No. 1, 26.5 per cent excess of compensatory duty, which of course was added to the protective duty; sample 2, excess of compensatory duty, 53.8 per cent; sample 3, excess of compensatory duty, 19.2 per cent; sample 4, excess of compensatory duty, 18.7 per cent; sample 5, excess of compensatory duty, 70.2 per cent; sample 6, excess of compensatory duty, 40.4 per cent; sample 7, excess of compensatory duty, 21.2 per cent; sample 8, excess of compensatory duty, 79.1 per cent; sample 9, excess of compensatory duty, 58.7 per cent; sample 10, excess of compensatory duty, four-tenths of 1 per cent; sample 11, excess of compensatory duty, four-tenths of 1 per cent.

On the great range covered by these experiments of Mr. Dale we find that surreptitiously upon this false basis incorporated in the statute in the beginning, there is added, under the guise of a compensatory duty, an additional protective duty.

Mr. BACON. Without interrupting the Senator, I should like to have him state on what class of goods is the highest percentage of excess.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, that varies.

Mr. BACON. I simply wanted to know whether it was on the higher priced goods or on the lower priced goods.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In the excessive duties under this complex system of specific and ad valorem rates, as a rule the burden falls upon the cheaper grades of manufacture. It is for that reason that I propose in the redraft of this schedule which I have presented a complete system of ad valorem instead of the present mixed scheme of ad valorem and specific rates.

It will be observed that the amendments which I propose to this schedule contemplate the substitution of a straight ad valorem system of duties for the present confused and hybrid mixture of specific and ad valorem rates. The objection is frequently made that an ad valorem system of levying duties lends itself to fraud upon the revenue of the Government through undervaluation; and that, in view of that fact, it has been the tendency throughout Europe to get away from the ad valorem system and substitute specific rates instead, under which loss of revenue through undervaluation becomes impossible and the collection of customs revenue greatly simplified.

While theoretically this may be true, we are confronted with a condition, not a theory; and the conditions in the United States are vastly different from those prevailing in Europe.

It is pertinent in this connection to ask why of all countries the United States, which has had the highest customs duties and has been most anxious to collect all the revenue that came from its customs, has been slow to follow the example of European nations in this regard? The reason for it is that with our crude tariff classification it is next to impossible to introduce a system of specific duties applicable throughout the tariff. So far as possible we have adopted specific rates. That applies to articles of a more or less staple character in which there are few, if any, grades and varieties. For instance, we have specific rates on iron ore and other ores; also on the cruder forms of iron and steel. We have also specific rates on cereals and most of the food products. The moment, however, you come to adopt specific rates on manufactured goods, or even on comparatively crude articles having numerous grades and kinds, such as raw wool, for instance, the specific system works great injustice if you provide a single specific duty for the entire class of articles. That is the trouble with our uniform duty of 11 cents a pound on most clothing wools. To adopt specific duties for the different kinds would make the tariff exceedingly complicated, and while diminishing the inequalities would never entirely do away with them, as is the case with the ad valorem rate, which automatically adjusts itself to every variety and kind of articles, irrespective of their value or quality.

The adoption of specific rates is one of the principal reasons for the great minuteness with which modern European tariffs have gone into the matter of classification. Whenever we should definitely decide to substitute specific duties for our present ad valorem system it will require a most thorough overhauling of our entire tariff scheme, and is a work that ought to occupy the attention of a tariff commission, or some such body, as only a body of technical experts, each making a specialty of one schedule or part of a schedule, working in conjunction with a body of tariff experts and spending a year, if not years, on this work, would be at all competent to undertake a task of such magnitude.

It certainly is not feasible under any other conditions.

On the other hand, the possibility of undervaluation in the case of raw wool has been greatly exaggerated. It is well known that the world price of raw wool is fixed in London, where wool from all over the world is sold at auction—the auctions taking place four times a year and lasting some three weeks at a time. These auctions are visited by the leading woolen manufacturers or their representatives from all the woolen manufacturing countries of the world, and under this system of open public bidding the difference of one-eighth of a cent a pound will determine the sale of a lot of wool at auction. Under this system of open bidding any attempt to defraud customs officers of the United States would be extremely risky and unlikely to succeed. It would be an easy matter for the Secretary of the Treasury to detail one of the Treasury agents stationed in Europe to attend the London auction sales and issue certificates to every purchaser of wool for exportation to the United States, certifying as to the price at which the wool has been purchased and placing his seal on the wool bales to prevent fraudulent substitutions of more expensive grades of wool for that actually purchased. In the case of wools imported direct from other countries, it would be easy for wool experts in the employ of the Treasury Department to determine the market price of the various grades with sufficient accuracy to prevent undervaluation. The grades of wool are standardized and market prices are quoted daily and published in trade papers. Under these conditions it is next to impossible to undervalue this commodity.

In the case of woolen goods, I have already called attention to the fact that our system of compound duties, consisting of a combination of specific and ad valorem rates, results in great injustice to the consumer. And if undervaluation is feasible it is just as easy to undervalue goods with compound rates of duty as it would be under a straight ad valorem system. The ad valorem, however, offers the advantage of an equitable distribution of the burden of duty in proportion to the value of the article, which the other system does not.

Mr. President, the whole country, I think, understands pretty well the iniquities of this schedule of the tariff law. Everybody knows that it is bad. The question is, How bad is it? Mr. President, its duties are so excessive that it is perfectly safe for Congress to cut them down without fear of crossing the line that measures the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. Enough has been done in the way of investigation—scientific investigation as complete and thorough as it is possible for man to perform—to teach us that much at least. These duties are enormously excessive, and no protectionist who cares for the principle involved in protection and wants to see that system maintained in this country will hesitate to cut the duties, and to cut them deeply. No legitimate interest will suffer; they will still be safe.

I know how dangerous prophecy is, and it is likely to come back to plague one hereafter, but I venture to say that this will be shown when the Tariff Board reports, if its work is done with thoroughness. Now, it may not be. I have never been satisfied, Mr. President, with the establishment of this so-called Tariff Board. It is not a tariff commission at all. It is not even a Tariff Board. It has no such designation in the law. The law provides merely for the employment of "persons" appointed by the President. They have no fixed terms of office. Their tenure is entirely dependent upon either the will of the President or upon Congress to provide their pay. No authority is conferred, no duties defined, nothing is provided to give weight or character or dignity to any report of the findings of the persons so employed. When they go to a factory the only information they are able to secure is what the owners choose to give them.

Their investigations into the wool and cotton schedules are performed under very great embarrassment, owing to the weakness of the four or five lines in the statute that called them into being. If we are to have anything that is to be characterized a Tariff Board or a Tariff Commission we ought to have, in the first place, a law that should prescribe the qualifications of the men trained to serve on such a board, not "lame ducks," not small politicians. The so-called Tariff Board is on trial. It will be judged by its work. There are one or two men, more perhaps, on that commission who have expert training qualifying them to serve on such a commission.

I know it is shocking to some Senators to hear a statement as plain as that, but I have gotten into the habit of saying on this floor what I know to be true, and I am going to continue it.

We should have, Mr. President, a permanent Tariff Commission with real powers. They should be given authority to compel the production of books and papers, examine witnesses, value plants, and make all the investigation necessary to determine the difference in the cost of production between this and competing foreign countries. The present so-called board, in undertaking to investigate chemicals, had the doors of the factories shut in their faces at the very beginning of their work. I happen to have heard of that through friends and acquaintances who are in the manufacturing business. They were shut out, these independents tell me, and not permitted to see the books or investigate a thing bearing on the cost.

The paper industry took another tack. They thought they had the paper business so hedged that the Tariff Commission could find out nothing about it. They opened their books and invited investigation; they swung the doors wide, and according to their books they were losing money on their investments. Then it was discovered that there were a lot of holding companies owned by these paper manufacturers controlling the raw material. The holding companies were making enormous profits. That was the way those gentlemen sought to cover up the facts. By accident, as it were, we got the full information with respect to these paper industries. For that reason the Tariff Board was able to lay before the Senate a document of great value in determining whether we in this country can compete with Canada in the manufacture of print paper.

So I say, Mr. President, what we shall get when this so-called Tariff Board reports to the Senate upon the woolen and cotton schedules is somewhat a matter of chance. I do not wish to disparage or discredit their work. My criticism is of the wholly inadequate law from which they derive their feeble powers. I count myself a friend of the men on that board who are honestly seeking for the truth regarding the difference in the cost of manufacture here and abroad. I stand ready here and elsewhere to defend those men, as I stand ready here and elsewhere to denounce any men on that board who seek to cover up the truth.

The document that was submitted to the Senate as the report of that board upon the manufacture of news-print paper imposed upon me an excessive amount of labor in order to get at the truth. I could not but believe, Mr. President—and I hope ultimately to get the facts, and when I have them nothing shall deter me from giving them to the country—that there were influences at work to leave that report in confusion, that the print-paper manufacturers of this country might go on securing excessive profits; that the truth should not be made known to the country and to Congress, or in any event that it should be left obscure. The high tariff had simply operated to lead these industries to go on using ancient machinery. That any good business judgment would have rejected and assess the buyers of print paper enough to pay for their antiquated and inefficient equipment. I get my information from the report itself, and have had to hunt back on the blind trail as best I could. The 139 pages of text showed clearly enough when you came to dig it out what should have been made plain at once to anyone looking at those tables.

So I say, Mr. President, it behooves Congress not to expect too much of the report of the Tariff Board at the next session, but to hope for the best. I am confident that there are several men on that board who are working with the high purpose of serving the public and of laying before Congress the cost of production of American manufacture as compared with competing manufacture abroad.

And, Mr. President, let me say to the Democrats, whether you believe in a tariff for revenue or any other kind of a tariff, the information that can be secured through a commission with real powers will be useful to you in many ways. It will be valuable to you in considering the trust problem. For every reason we should have a commission of experts, a commission fully equipped, a commission authorized to go into these great establishments—whether they desire it or not—that are operating under advantages which this Government has given, and compel them to show their books, to disclose the inmost secrets of their business, not to be given to their competitors, but to be given to this impartial investigating body, that it may communicate to Congress the truth it finds, the facts it finds, and let Congress determine what action shall be taken in the case.

I have never been able to understand why our Democratic brethren have at times heretofore resisted the establishment of a Tariff Commission upon the right basis, with large powers, to get these facts for us. In this day of industrial and commercial development along all lines, we can not intelligently legislate; we can not even begin a proper consideration of these great problems without the information that these expert commissions should lay before us.

Now, Mr. President, I have just exposed one side of the iniquity of Schedule K—the compensatory duties.

Two or three years ago a young man, who had especially equipped himself, was sent abroad to make an investigation for the Bureau of Manufactures as to the difference in the cost of production in this country and competing countries. That was before the passage of the law creating the Tariff Board. He is a son of Chief Justice Clark, of North Carolina—Graham Clark, a very able man, a graduate of Harvard, who had equipped himself especially for this work. After graduating from Harvard, he took courses in several technical textile schools, where he learned all the theories of the business. Then he went into the manufacturing field and there served as superintendent of various factories. He became so well recognized throughout the country among the manufacturers themselves as an eminent expert that they asked the Bureau of Manufactures to appoint him. He was appointed upon the recommendation of the great manufacturing industries of this country as an expert, sufficiently well equipped to be sent abroad to study trade conditions there and to inform the manufacturers of this country as nearly as could be ascertained the inside situation across the water with respect to various lines of manufacture. He made a thorough-going investigation. As a demonstration he took a series of eight typical wool fabrics.

Members of the Senate can get Mr. Clark's report on the wool industry, which he investigated thoroughly. I wish they would. If they gave it the consideration it merits, I venture to say that no Member of this body can then say what the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] said yesterday regarding the revision of Schedule K, that none of us had any information upon which to cast a vote, as I understood him. Any man who will study Mr. Dale's analysis, or the analysis made in a different field by Mr. Clark, will not only be convinced that it is perfectly safe to make a deep cut in the existing duties of Schedule K, but he will feel compelled, in good conscience, if he is a real public servant, to vote for material reductions in this schedule.

I must not take the time to go into Mr. Clark's work further than to say that on the eight different samples Mr. Clark found that the protective duty—I have spoken of Mr. Dale's work on the compensatory duty—Mr. Clark found that the excess of duty on sample 1—and, mark you, these were typical samples of the woolen industry—that on sample 1 there was an excess of duty of 54.5 per cent; on sample 2 an excess of duty of 52.1 per cent; on sample 3 an excess of duty of 54 per cent; on sample 4 an excess of duty of 56 per cent; on sample 5 the excess of duty equaled 49 per cent; on sample 6 the excess of duty equaled 44 per cent; on sample 7 the excess of duty equaled 63 per cent; and on sample 8 the excess of duty equaled 55 per cent.

O, Mr. President, no man who cares to look into the facts, no man who does not sleep at his post, need be in ignorance, or can, it seems to me, excuse himself from voting for making in these extortionate duties in Schedule K a very pronounced reduction.

Mr. President, I now come to discuss the exact amendment which I have proposed. First, I have swept aside——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. GORE. At this juncture I think there are certain American and Canadian statistics that ought to go into the Senator's speech. The President in urging reciprocity, stated that the wages of labor and the cost of living were substantially the same in the United States and in Canada. Now, according to a report prepared by an expert of the Treasury on the general classification of the woolen and worsted goods, the ad valorem equivalent on the importations into the United States for 1910 was 144 per cent, in Canada the British preferential was 30 per cent, and the intermediate and general were 35 per cent. On flannels for underwear of the first class the American ad valorem was 91 per cent, on flannels of the second class the American ad valorem was 108 per cent, whereas in Canada the British preferential duty was 22 per cent, the intermediate was 30 per cent, and the general was 35 per cent. On knitted goods of the first class the American ad valorem equivalent was 13 per cent, the British preferential was 22 per cent, the Canadian intermediate was 30 per cent, and the Canadian general was 35 per cent. According to the Canadian Yearbook and our own Consular Reports the Canadian woolen mills are quite as prosperous as are the American woolen mills, which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] states have closed because the House of Representatives is Democratic.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to ask one question of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield for it, if it will not prolong the debate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the Senator from Oklahoma if the expert to whom he refers is not the expert who has been assigned to assist the minority members of the Committee on Finance?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desired to bring that out, Mr. President, if the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, simply because when I used a table here a few days ago prepared by that same expert there was a disposition to question it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I say now what I shall not have an opportunity to say later before I refer to the character of my amendment, that the average duties of Schedule K under the Payne-Aldrich law are something over 61 per cent, while the average duties of Schedule K, as I propose them in my amendment, are something over 38 per cent. The rate of decrease is much less than would be warranted under the investigations of both Dale and Clark.

I have allowed in every duty which I have proposed, and in any duty which I shall propose I shall allow, a difference of 100 per cent in the labor cost. England, our greatest competitor, manufactures, so far as the labor cost is concerned, at about one-half of that which we expend. I do not take into account the difference in the efficiency of labor. I omit all consideration of the difference in the cost of living, and everything of that kind, and just take the naked wage proposition.

In woolen manufactures Mr. Clarke figures the labor, taking it from the raw wool clear through to the finished product, to be about 21 and a fraction per cent.

The census report shows practically the same result. When you take the total value of the output of the woolen manufacturer in this country and take the total wages paid, it shows practically the same thing, that about 25 per cent, at the very outside, is the full measure of the labor cost. If allowance be made for the differences to which I have directed attention, the duties which would measure the true difference in the cost of production will be found to be far below those I have offered to the Senate, starting with wool at 40 per cent as a base line.

Mr. President, it may be that the people of this country are to be denied at this session any revision of this schedule, which nobody has the courage to defend, which even the President of the United States, who thinks the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill the best ever made, has felt bound to admit is a bad schedule, that ought to be changed.

It is six years ago since the people of this country, starting out to change the tariff, demanded revision. The demand for revision did not come from the protected interests; it came from the people who were paying extravagant prices because of excessive duties. They were denied relief. Have you ever stopped to think that the words "stand pat" came into our political vocabulary within the last five or six years? Do you remember how? It was because the public was pressing for revision of the tariff on a lower basis, and Members of Congress were resisting and saying, "We stand pat," and that added a new phrase to the political vocabulary of the American people.

Mr. President, the stress and strength of the assault of the American people for six years was directed against this very schedule; and it is the very schedule, intrenched in the citadel of protection, that was strong enough, by rallying its support from the agricultural side and the manufacturing side, to resist having a hand laid upon it in the tariff revision of 1909. So I say to you now that there is every reason in the world why the Senate, with the facts that the public has possession of and that we have possession of, should proceed to reduce the duties now.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to go along as rapidly as I can upon the amendments which I have offered. I offer amendments proposing reductions in the duties on woolen goods, the rates upon which have long been recognized as grossly excessive. These reductions, if adopted, will compensate the farmers, at least in part, for the loss which they will suffer as a result of free trade in agricultural products with Canada. They will, in some measure, relieve all of the people of the United States who have been made to pay tribute to the Woolen Trust, long the pampered favorite of the tariff law.

In proposing the reductions of duty which I am about to submit to the Senate, I am mindful of the fact that the Tariff Board is at present at work on an investigation of the cost of production of woolen goods and that we expect to have the report of the board on the woolen schedule possibly at the next session of Congress; but even if it come at the next session of Congress, with the Senate Republican and the House Democratic, you may go on here for years, and you do not know that you will get any tariff revision. Here is the opportunity to get it and give relief on the highest schedule of the tariff, except the schedules on spirits and tobacco. Will you dare to throw over your shoulder the opportunity to lift a little of the burdens from the people of this country?

If that work is done with the thoroughness and care which the subject demands, but which the board will have difficulty in performing, owing to the weakness and imperfections of the law which authorizes its existence, we may perchance be in a position to undertake a more thorough and scientific revision of the woolen schedule based upon a more exact knowledge than we now possess of the difference in the cost of production of woolens in this country and in the competing foreign countries.

Two years ago, at the time we were considering the present tariff act, which left Schedule K practically unchanged, I proposed certain amendments. Those amendments I have modified and offer as an amendment to the pending bill. For reasons which I shall presently explain, I believe that the duties proposed by me on manufactured woolen cloth are greater than are necessary to protect American manufacturers from European competition. However, bearing in mind that this is but a temporary measure, to be followed, as I hope, by a more thoroughgoing revision, and with the purpose of meeting the views of a majority of the Senate to the end that some reduction may be promptly secured, I offer, for the present consideration of Senators, the following changes in the woolen schedule, which I will briefly explain:

The effect of the amendments to Schedule K, which I now propose, are as follows:

	Per cent.
Duty on clothing wools	40
Duty on carpet wools	10
Duty on tops	45
Duty on yarn	50
Duty on carpets	40
Upon cloths and all other manufactures composed entirely of wool or having wool as the component material of chief value	60

Mr. President, that does not recognize a large number of intermediate grades to be fixed by specific valuations, subject to jugglery, the importers seeking to get the duty down, the appraisers seeking to get the duty up, and if it crosses the dividing line, passing at once to a very much higher grade of duties. An ad valorem duty follows the value of the goods. And under the present tariff law, which provides that the guide or standard for valuation shall be the foreign markets, and with all the facilities that our customs department have for ascertaining the values upon these various grades of goods, and the check that that affords against undervaluation, I think we need have no fear. It seems to me that the ad valorem system of fixing duties is the only safe and just one, both for the producer and the consumer. At least that is so until we shall have, as they have in Germany and in the other countries where they have adopted largely the specific system of duties, a thoroughgoing, scientific revision of all tariffs, based upon scientific and expert knowledge.

In this connection I ask the indulgence of the Senate while I go over very briefly some of the reasons for the changes proposed.

The present average duty on raw wool, as shown by the Report on Commerce and Navigation of the Bureau of Statistics for 1910, is a fraction less than 45 per cent. In proposing a duty of 40 per cent ad valorem I make no wide departure from the duties paid to-day on raw wools on the average. It will do away, however, with the gross inequalities and discriminations under which the users of the cheaper wools, which go to make up the poor man's clothing, have to labor under the present specific duties.

A glance at page 1103 of the Report of the Bureau of Statistics on Commerce and Navigation for 1910 will show that the average duty on raw wools of all kinds is forty-four and a fraction per cent, representing a range running from twenty-nine and a fraction per cent to three hundred and thirty-three and a fraction per cent, and 375 per cent on shoddy. Even this figure does not show the extreme height to which our present specific duties on raw wool rise, since the report of the Bureau of Statistics covers only wools actually imported and not those that are kept out by prohibitive rates. An estimate made by Samuel S. Dale, editor of the Textile World Record, based upon actual prices at which wool is sold in the London auction, which fixes the world prices of wool, shows that the duty on raw wool is as high as 550 per cent.

A straight ad valorem duty of 40 per cent will do away with the prohibitive rates such as I have just cited, and will reduce the rates on wools which the manufacturers of woolen goods need to-day for the purpose of blending with our own wools, so that they can not result in any detriment to our woolgrowers, but would result in great benefit to the consumer. The ad valorem duty will also do away with the present injustice of subjecting wools that contain three-fourths of their weight in grease and dirt to the same duty as the fine, expensive wools, with a shrinkage of, say, 20 per cent.

Passing now to the proposed duties on the intermediate and finished products, the principle underlying them is that in all cases a compensating duty equivalent to the duty on raw wool shall be imposed in addition to a protective duty, which is to cover the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad in the manufactured article.

I want to ask the attention of Senators upon this particular point: The amendment which I offer, starting with a 40 per cent duty on the raw product—the raw wool—as a base line, has been worked out with elaborate care, and with the assistance of the best experts, I believe, in this country.

For whatever I have done in constructive legislation, here or elsewhere, I have done not because I have made conquest of the whole field of knowledge but because I have always been willing to call to my assistance the best expert knowledge of the country, and I think I have done that in the construction of the amendment which I have submitted to the Senate. I say to you that beginning with the 40 per cent base line on raw wools, as you follow the product of raw wool step by step clear through to the finished manufacture, every article takes the duty which it should be given in order to measure the cost of production in the various stages.

Mr. President, I have fixed in this amendment which I have proposed a duty of 45 per cent on tops, which would furnish not only full compensation for the 40 per cent duty on raw wool, but also more than 100 per cent on the cost of labor and other expenses, each of which constitute but a small fraction of the total value of the tops.

The next stage in the process of manufacture is yarns. It is estimated by experts that wool constitutes about 80 per cent of the total value of yarn, the remaining 20 per cent representing labor and other expenses. A compensatory duty of 40 per cent on 80 per cent of the total value of yarns on account of the raw wool equals 32 per cent. Allowing 100 per cent on the labor and other expenses, which constitute 20 per cent of the total value of the yarn, results in a protective duty of 20 per cent, or a total rate of 52 per cent, or, in round numbers, 50 per cent, as I propose.

We now come to the finished cloth. It is estimated that the raw wool constitutes about 65 per cent of the total value of the cloth. This agrees also with the figures just published for the 1910 census. Salaries and wages represent less than 20 per cent of the value of the cloth, and the remainder other expenses, including profits. Allowing 40 per cent on the 65 per cent of the value of the cloth as compensation for the duty on raw wool, we get 26 per cent ad valorem; allowing 100 per cent on the labor and other expenses, will give us 35 per cent ad valorem; making a total compensatory and protective duty of 61 per cent, or, in round numbers, 60 per cent, which is the duty which I propose.

And so up through the different stages of manufacture.

The average ad valorem duty on manufactures of wool during the year 1910 under the existing law was 90 per cent, representing a wide range from 61½ per cent to 154 per cent ad valorem. These duties are mostly prohibitive, and in any event outrageously high, and out of all proportion to the cost of labor and the difference in cost between this and foreign countries. Our total importations of woolen cloths amount to about 3 per cent of our domestic production. If a duty such as I propose, based on a rate of 100 per cent on the total labor cost and other expenses of production, including profits, will not protect the American manufacturer, it is difficult to say where we are going to draw the line of reasonable protection.

We are told that manufacturers in the woolen and worsted industry are barely able to make both ends meet, and, from the wails of the Woolen Trust, one might think it was on its last legs. As against these ex parte statements we have the following comments of the Census Office in its preliminary report on woolens and worsteds for the census of 1910:

> The comparative figures of the above statement clearly indicate the remarkable development that has taken place in the industry since 1899. Although the number of establishments has decreased, denoting a tendency toward concentration, which has been the rule in the wool-manufacturing industry since 1870, on the other hand the amount of capital reported as invested shows an increase from $256,554,000 in 1899 to $415,465,000 in 1909, or 62 per cent during the decade. The cost of materials used increased 85 per cent and the amount paid in salaries and wages 58 per cent. The number of salaried officials and clerks increased but 47 per cent and the number of wage earners only 29 per cent.
> The value of products increased from $238,745,000 in 1899 to $419,826,000 in 1909, or 76 per cent. The greater part of this increase took place during the second half of the decade; in fact, the increase of over $100,000,000 in the five years since 1904 is far greater than that of any decade prior to 1900 in the history of the industry.

Mark the figures! While the number of establishments has been continually going down, not less than 308 firms having fallen by the wayside or been absorbed by their stronger rivals, the capital invested in the industry increased during the same decade to the extent of 62 per cent. While our highly protected American labor added to the value of the products 76 per cent during the decade, their wages, in which are included also the salaries of the high-salaried officials and clerks, increased only 58 per cent. With a total labor cost not exceeding 20 per cent of the value of the cloth, we would be justified, if such a revision could be passed at this time, in fixing the duty on the finished material at a lower figure than I propose.

On the basis of the imports during the last six months of 1910 the proposed change in rates would result in a loss of annual revenue under the entire Schedule K of only $12,000,000, or less than 3.7 per cent of the total revenue collected from customs. The ordinary increase in imports which takes place from year to year as a result of the natural increase in population is sufficient to offset this loss, assuming that there will be no increased importations of goods which are to-day entirely shut out from the American market by prohibitive rates.

The amendments proposed by me are as follows:

Paragraph 361 is to be amended so as to include in one class all the clothing wools which are divided under the present act into class 1, enumerated in paragraph 361, and class 2, enumerated in paragraph 362. This will entirely eliminate paragraph 362 of the present act.

The new paragraph 362 is to provide for the so-called carpet wools enumerated in paragraph 363 of the present act, the only change being that they will be known as class 2 instead of class 3, as in the present act, and will also include the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and like animals. The present tariff act already provides in paragraph 583 for the free admission of hair of horse, cattle, and other animals, or, in other words, on the only kind of animal hair which the farmers produce in this country. What justification can there be in that case for anything more than a revenue duty on the hair of the camel, goat, and alpaca, and other like animals, of which we have practically none or a negligible quantity in this country, and which, on the other hand, are needed as raw materials by our manufacturers? For these reasons I eliminate the protective feature of the rate and retain a 10 per cent duty on hair for revenue reasons.

Paragraph 365. The change in this paragraph is likewise a mere verbal one, substituting the words "class 1" for the words "class 1 or class 2" in the present act.

Paragraph 366 is to be amended to read as follows:

> The duty on wools of the first class shall be 40 per cent ad valorem.

This requires no further comment, in the light of what I have said in my remarks, except that it may be urged that a specific duty imposed upon the basis of scoured wool would meet the situation just as well, or, as some claim, even better. I quite agree that a specific duty on the basis of scoured wool would do away with one of the glaring injustices of the present system of levying duties on raw wool, namely, the imposition of higher duties on cheap wools of heavy shrinkage as compared with the more expensive wools of light shrinkage. But that is probably as far as it would go by way of ameliorating the present situation, for we would still have the same specific duty applicable to wools of different qualities, and therefore of different values. Unless we adopted a very elaborate scale of duties, with minute subdivisions for wools of different classes and values, we could not do away with the inequalities on that score, and even then the evil would be only mitigated, but not entirely removed, as it will be under a system of ad valorem duties, which automatically adjust themselves to every change in gradation in quality and value. It may be urged, on the other hand, that the ad valorem system will bring in new evils, namely, undervaluation, with its subsequent loss of revenue to the Government. I shall take up that objection later in the course of my remarks.

Paragraph 367 is to be eliminated, since the ad valorem duty does away with the necessity of distinguishing between unwashed, washed, and scoured wools, the increased value of the washed and scoured wool automatically taking care of the duty on the ad valorem basis.

Paragraph 368 (new paragraph 367) is to be amended to read as follows:

> The duty upon all wools of class 2 shall be 10 per cent ad valorem.

The present average duties on wools of this class is about 36 per cent ad valorem. It is not a protective duty, its only effect being to furnish revenue to the Government. The duty is not protective, because we do not produce wools of this kind at the present. Preliminary figures just published by the Census Office for the census of 1910 on the subject of carpets and rugs show that the carpet and rug establishments of the country purchased in the year 1909 foreign wool to the extent of $11,696,000, while of domestic wool they purchased $57,000, which is but a drop in the bucket. While there is therefore no ground for a protective duty, I believe a moderate duty may be justified as a source of revenue. This duty, however, should not be high, because, being a raw product, it would enter into every successive stage of manufacture, and in that way result in a cumulative burden upon the consumer. For this reason I favor a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem.

Paragraphs 369 and 370 of the present act, providing for the present rates of duty on wools, are to be stricken out, since that has been covered in the paragraphs just quoted.

Paragraph 371 (new paragraph 368) is to be amended so as to provide for a duty on wools on the skin. This is in keeping with the present law, which provides for a duty of 1 cent less on wools on the skin as compared with that on clipped wools of the same class.

Paragraph 372 (new paragraph 369) is to be amended by substituting a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem for the present duty of 30 cents a pound on top waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, and garnetted waste.

Paragraph 373 (new paragraph 370) is to be amended by providing for a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem on shoddy, woolen rags, noils, and upon all wastes composed wholly or chiefly of wool.

None of the products enumerated in these two paragraphs are entitled to a protective duty on their own account, since they constitute wastes and by-products of an industry; but in view of the facts that they can be mixed with new wool in the manufacture of cloth and other articles of wool they should be subject to a duty as an indirect protection to wool, but the duty should not be as high as that on the best new wool. I propose a rate of 30 per cent ad valorem, which is 10 per cent ad valorem less than the rate on new clothing wools.

The same consideration applies to other wastes and to mungo and flocks, enumerated in paragraph 374 (new paragraph 371).

Paragraph 375 (new paragraph 372) is to be amended to read as follows:

Combed wool or tops, and all wool and hair which have been advanced in any manner or by any process of manufacture beyond the washed or scoured condition, not especially provided for in this section, 45 per cent ad valorem.

Paragraph 376 of the present act is to be stricken out as inconsistent with the changes proposed in the preceding paragraph. It should have been stricken out at the time the present tariff was enacted, since the act provided specifically for a duty on tops in paragraph 375. The paragraph had its chief use in the Dingley Act, in that it provided indirectly, as a joker, for a duty on tops as high as that provided for on finished cloth. The scandalous history of its surreptitious smuggling into the tariff act at the time the secretary of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers was serving the Aldrich committee, while receiving his salary from his association, was so fully aired in the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee that I need not take the time of the Senate to repeat it in this connection.

Paragraph 377 (new paragraph 373) is to be amended to read as follows:

On yarns made wholly of wool, or of which wool is the component material of chief value, the duty shall be 50 per cent ad valorem.

I have already given my reasons for fixing the duty at that rate.

Paragraph 378 (new paragraph 374) is to be amended by providing a duty of 60 per cent on cloths, knit fabrics, blankets, dress goods, and other manufactures made wholly or chiefly of wool, not specially provided for in the tariff act.

Paragraph 379, relating to blankets and flannels; paragraphs 380 and 381, relating to women's and children's dress goods, and so forth; paragraph 382, relating to clothing; paragraph 383, relating to trimmings, are to be stricken out, being covered in the proposed version of paragraph 378, which I have just read.

Paragraphs 384, 385, 386, 387, 388, 389, 390, 391, and 392, relating to carpets and rugs (combined in new paragraph 375), are to retain the same phraseology in the amended form as the present act, with the exception that a duty of 40 per cent ad valorem is uniformly substituted for the present compound duties. This duty is determined by the same computation as that I have given in detail with reference to duty on cloth. It is based on an allowance of 100 per cent on the cost of production, which is 35 per cent of the total value and a compensatory duty for the 10 per cent duty on carpet wools.

Paragraph 393 (new paragraph 376) is to be amended by leaving out carpets and mats of cotton or flax, so that, as amended, it will relate exclusively to carpets and carpeting made of wool, and is to be subject to a duty of 40 per cent, which is the same as that on other carpets and represents a reduction of 20 per cent from the present rate. My reason for eliminating carpets and mats of cotton or flax is that we are dealing with the wool schedule, and there is no reason for providing for articles made of flax or cotton outside of the schedules which are devoted to those products.

Paragraph 394 (new paragraph 377) is to be amended by changing the words "wholly or in part of wool" to read "wholly of wool, or of which wool is the component material of chief value."

I have endeavored to carry out this change consistently throughout the schedule, with a view of doing away with the gross injustice of assessing wool duties on articles made chiefly of other fiber than wool. The late Senator Dolliver convulsed the Senate by relating the instance of a chair, having some wool in its upholstering, being assessed under the wool schedule at the rate of 44 cents a pound (upholstery, wood, and all) plus 55 per cent ad valorem, under the provisions of the act which makes all articles made "wholly or in part of wool" dutiable as manufactures of wool.

Numerous instances of this kind were cited during the tariff debate of two years ago, and a mere reference to them should be sufficient to make clear the reason for the proposed change in phraseology.

Paragraph 395 (new paragraph 378) is left unchanged.

Finally a new paragraph (379) is to be added, providing for a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem on all manufactures of hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and so forth. Since the raw material of which these goods are manufactured is made dutiable at 10 per cent, a duty of 35 per cent on the manufactured product is amply protective. This completes the changes in Schedule K proper.

The proposed change in the system of levying duties on wool will do away with an endless series of provisions which have been a fruitful source of revenue to customs lawyers and a useless burden upon all legitimate business. It will make it possible for anyone who understands the English language to read Schedule K and know what it means. It will do away with the time-honored question as to how many pounds of raw wool it takes to turn out a pound of cloth and how many pounds of raw wool it takes to turn out a pound of blankets. Without attempting to solve this problem, which can not be answered by a single equivalent, it will simply make it unnecessary to consider it and do away with the bounty which the tariff has been placing at the disposal of manufacturers of woolen goods at the expense of the people by granting them a so-called compensatory duty equal to four times the duty on raw wool, on the assumption that every piece of cloth is turned out at the rate of 4 pounds of raw wool to 1 pound of cloth. It is a notorious fact that this represents the rare exception rather than the rule, and that an exceedingly large proportion of all of our so-called woolen and worsted cloths, probably considerably more than half of them, are made in large part of cotton. This means that for every pound of cotton the manufacturer puts into cloth by mixing it with wool he is voted a so-called compensatory duty of nearly 44 cents in addition to the protective duty of 55 per cent ad valorem. The straight ad valorem duty proposed by me will do away with all of these illicit gains and with a surreptitious bounty which has, or should have, no place on the statute books of the United States.

Finally, the ad valorem system of levying duties on woolen goods will do away with the crying injustice inherent in compound duties such as we have in the woolen schedule to-day, which weigh heaviest upon the cheapest cloths, the cloths that go to cover the poor man's back as compared with those used by the rich. Two years ago in discussing the wool schedule I gave numerous instances of this. To-day I could parallel them by citing some instances from the Bureau of Statistics Report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, which was the first year under the Payne-Aldrich Act. One instance may suffice to bring vividly to the minds of Senators the wrong I am trying to do away with by the proposed change. On page 1105 of the Report of the Bureau of Statistics on Commerce and Navigation for 1910 we find that the ad valorem duties on cloths are as follows:

On cloths valued at not more than 40 cents per pound, 144 per cent (disregarding fractions); on cloths valued at from 40 to 70 cents per pound, 123 per cent; valued at above 70 cents a pound, the duty drops to 96 per cent.

One hundred and forty-four per cent for a cloth worth less than 40 cents a pound and only 96 per cent for a cloth worth nearly double that! Striking as this inequality appears to be, it does not give an adequate idea of the real inequalities of duties, and the height to which the duty actually rises on the poorer cloths and to which it drops on the more expensive ones, for each of the rates given in the Bureau of Statistics report just cited represents an average for a class of cloths in which the extreme high and low rates are merged into one, the duties on the individual cloths rising higher and higher as the value of the cloth declines, greatly exceeding 200 per cent on the cheapest, while being as low as 80 per cent on the most expensive cloths.

To sum up: The ad valorem rates proposed will simplify the schedule in point of phraseology, will automatically do away with whatever fraud there is in the so-called compensatory duty, will abolish the discrimination against the poor man's cloth in favor of that of the rich man, will remove the discrimination against the carded-wool manufacturer in favor of the worsted-goods manufacturer, and, without attempting to draw the line between the compensatory and the protective duty, will automatically provide for both, leaving ample protection for the woolgrower and the manufacturer, without leaving the consumer completely at the mercy of the latter.

The proposed amendments of duties on manufactures of wool would result in a reduction from 89.58 per cent ad valorem under the present law to 56.02 per cent ad valorem, or a reduction of more than 33⅓ per cent ad valorem and more than 37 per cent below the present rate. The change for the wool schedule as a whole would represent a reduction from an average ad valorem of 61.74 per cent under the present law to 38.24 per cent, or a reduction of 23½ per cent ad valorem and over 38 per cent below the present rate.

It is difficult to estimate the effect these reductions would have upon the revenue derived by the Government from these sources. A reduction of duty may result in an increase of importations which will not only offset the reduction in rate, but bring in a larger revenue than the old higher rate did. Of course this is not always the case, since the manufacturers may reduce their price to the consumer, and thereby prevent increased importations from abroad. What usually happens, and what would probably happen if the proposed amendments were adopted, would be a combination of both conditions, and it is impossible to foretell what the ultimate effect upon the revenue would be. The comparative tables, showing the present and proposed rates of duty and estimated revenues under each, were prepared on the same basis that was employed two years ago by the Finance Committee. That is to say, assuming that the imports of commodities will remain the same, the revenues will, of course, fall off in proportion to the reduction of duty. On that assumption—which, I repeat, is purely tentative—the proposed changes would result in a falling off of revenue. From the wool schedule the revenue would decline for the same six months' period from $15,826,000, in round figures, under the present law to $9,803,000 under the proposed rates, or a loss of a little over $6,000,000 for six months, or $12,000,000 annually.

As against this imaginary loss of revenue to the Government, what possible benefit awaits the consumer as a result of the proposed changes in duties? As in the case of revenue, the estimate can be only approximate, although I believe it can be made much more accurate. I estimate the consumption of woolen goods in the United States as follows:

Value of woolen goods produced (exclusive of carpets), census of 1910	$420,000,000
Value of carpets and rugs produced, census of 1910	72,000,000
Total production	492,000,000
Imports entered for consumption of woolen manufactures, fiscal year 1910	23,049,645
Total production and imports	515,049,645
Less manufactures of woolen goods exported, fiscal year 1910	2,369,283
Net consumption of woolen manufactures, 1910	512,680,362
Proposed reduction in tariff on woolen manufactures (per cent ad valorem)	33⅓
Estimated saving to consumer	$170,000,000

We thus have a saving under the wool schedule of $170,000,000 in round figures. The question may be raised as to the accuracy of the assumption that the reduction in duty will be completely reflected in an equal reduction in price. This raises the general question of the extent to which the duty is added to the price of articles to the consumer. No one will dispute the fact that the purpose of a protective duty is to increase the price to the consumer; otherwise there would be no object in manufacturers seeking protective duties. However, competition among producers at home tends to a reduction in price, which prevents the manufacturer from adding the entire duty to the price at which the foreigner would be ready to sell his products under a condition of free trade. To the extent to which domestic competition is reduced this modifying effect is eliminated, and the less there is of domestic competition the greater is the proportion of the duty which is included in the price to the consumer. We know that the Woolen Trust dominates largely the woolen industry, and that independent manufacturers follow its lead largely in their price policy. To what extent the duty under the wool schedules is added to the price it is difficult to say with the data at present available. It is a matter of common knowledge to all who have traveled abroad, as well as to those who have studied the conditions in business, that woolen goods are sold in this country generally at double the price at which they can be purchased in England. This would justify the assumption made in these estimates that the duty enters fully into the price to the consumer. Moreover, it is the basis upon which the estimates were made two years ago by the Finance Committee in arriving at a calculation of the "savings" to the consumer under the high rates of the Payne-Aldrich bill. In any event, they are much nearer the truth than the estimates of the loss in revenue to the Government.

Mr. President, I sought the first opportunity offered since 1909 to redeem the pledge which the Republican administration violated in the tariff revision of that session.

Under the Constitution no tariff bill can originate in the Senate. But when the President's Canadian tariff bill came before us at this session it presented the first chance since the Payne-Aldrich bill passed to move for a reduction of the duties of Schedule K. I promptly offered this same amendment to the so-called reciprocity bill, believing that if it were adopted it would surely receive Executive approval as a part of that bill which the President was sure to sign.

The combined votes of stand-pat Republicans and Democrats defeated its adoption at that time.

I think it should have been made a part of the bill which forced the farmers to sell their products in a free-trade market, because it would have relieved them of some of the burdens of these excessive duties at the same time that the Canadian tariff deprived them of all protection upon the products of their labor.

It was a moral certainty that the President would approve the Canadian bill even though we attached to it my amendment reducing the duties on woolen goods. It would have been a great relief to all consumers throughout the land, but it was defeated then.

It is said now that the President will veto any tariff bill which we may pass. If he should take such a course, in the face of the public demands for the redemption of the broken pledges of 1908, Senators who refused to make this amendment a part of the Canadian tariff bill, as well as the President, will have to answer to the people. The least the Senate can do at this time is to pass that revision of the tariff duties of the woolen schedule which the President will be most likely to sign.

It is certain that he can find less justification for refusing to approve a reduction of Schedule K along protective lines than a bill which can be called a Democratic revision of that schedule. For that reason, if for no other, I believe the Senate should adopt the amendment to this woolen schedule which I offer, and relieve the people of a part of the great burden which the Payne-Aldrich tariff imposes upon them.

Mr. PENROSE. There is a message from the House——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. PENROSE. There is a message from the House which I should like to have presented to the Senate before the regular session begins at 12 o'clock.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator yield to me for a question before he concludes?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. If I understand the amendment of the Senator correctly, it gives 9 cents per pound as the protection to the raisers of wool.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well, that depends, of course, upon the price at which one figures the wool. It gives a 40 per cent duty.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator's amendment eliminates the whole provision relating to skirting.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It does, most emphatically.

Mr. McCUMBER. It was shown in the article that the skirting provision deprived the raiser of wool of about a half of his supposed protection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; that is true.

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, the Senator has another provision, which is in that subdivision relating to noils, card waste, slubbing, and so forth, which he leaves at 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that would amount to about 2½ to 3 cents per pound——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That would not be true upon the waste product generally.

Mr. McCUMBER. My theory is, I will state to the Senator, that with such a small duty upon woolen rags and material of like character we will merely repeat what we had under the Wilson-Gorman law—that is, an immense importation of woolen rags and shoddy and stuff of that kind, which in effect will cut down the demand for the farmer's product, and therefore deprive him of the full value that would be given by the Senator's amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Just let me say to the Senator that he need have no anxiety about that proposition. Rags were free, while mungo and flocks had a 15 per cent duty under the Wilson law. During the period that law was in effect there were large importations of woolen rags, because they were free. No such danger threatens under the amendment I propose, as it imposes a duty of 30 per cent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. May the Chair interrupt the Senator? According to the Chair's understanding of the agreement——

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will yield now. There is a message from the House of Representatives, which the Senate ought to hear with some respect, I think. It refers to the death of a Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Very well, Mr. President, I will yield.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE GEORGE W. KIPP.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
July 26, 1911.

Resolved, That the House has heard with regret and profound sorrow of the death of GEORGE WASHINGTON KIPP, Representative in this House from the fourteenth congressional district of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That a committee of 15 Members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral at Towanda, Pa., and that the necessary expenses attending the execution of this order be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for properly carrying out the provisions of these resolutions.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolutions which the Secretary will read.

The resolutions (S. Res. 117) were read and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of the Hon. GEORGE W. KIPP, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate under the second resolution Mr. PENROSE, Mr. OLIVER, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey, and Mr. POMERENE.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the late Representative I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to, and (at 11 o'clock and 55 minutes a. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, July 27, 1911, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 27, 1911.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITION.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a memorial of Machinists' Union No. 600, of Saginaw, Mich., remonstrating against the so-called Taylor system of shop management in the Government navy yards, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSENGER TO COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 115, submitted by Mr. NELSON on the 25th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger at a salary of $1,440 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

ADDITIONAL CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Mr. BRIGGS. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 105 submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] on the 14th instant, to report it with amendments, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendments were, in line 2, before the word "additional," to strike out "two" and insert "an"; in the same line, after the word "additional," to strike out "clerks" and insert "clerk"; in line 3, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight" and insert "six"; and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "each" and insert "and an additional clerk at an annual salary of $1,440," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and it is hereby, authorized to appoint an additional clerk at an annual salary of $1,600, and an additional clerk at an annual salary of $1,440, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

The amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MESSENGERS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. BRIGGS. I report from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate an original resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 118) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That each of the following-named committees is hereby authorized to employ a messenger at a salary of $1,200 per annum: Committees to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, Canadian Relations, Civil Service and Retrenchment, Coast Defenses, Conference of the Minority, Education and Labor, Expenditures in the Department of the Interior, Expenditures in the Navy Department, Expenditures in the Post Office Department, Expenditures in the Treasury Department, Expenditures in the War Department, Indian Affairs, Industrial Expositions, Interoceanic Canals, Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, Library, and Patents; that said salaries be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

Mr. DIXON. This is a resolution giving additional messengers to the committees named?

Mr. BRIGGS. Giving messengers or additional clerical service.

Mr. DIXON. I thought the Republican caucus three weeks ago, and afterwards ratified by the Senate, took action on the report of the committee appointed to investigate the question, and which had recommended that the details should be abolished. I do not understand why half a dozen committees have been singled out for additional clerical hire and why other committees have not been given the same help.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I think I can explain it. The resolution which is submitted from the committee is an omnibus resolution, made up of resolutions which had been offered by the chairmen of committees providing for additional help. In the case of those who have not presented such a resolution r othing has been done; the committee is awaiting the action of the chairmen of the committees.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I can not appreciate at this time the wisdom or the justice of this report. The very thing that has been complained of by Senators heretofore, and which the committee appointed by the Republican caucus sought to obviate, is again being reenacted in a different way. I can not understand why one committee, with the same work as another committee, shall be given additional clerical help and the other committee not.

I shall object to the consideration of the resolution at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over under objection.

Mr. DIXON subsequently said: Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Does the resolution reported this morning providing for clerical help to certain committees, which went over, go on the calendar?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It goes on the calendar.

Mr. DIXON. Will it be on the calendar to-morrow morning for consideration?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, before the Senator from New Jersey leaves the Chamber, I ask unanimous consent to make an inquiry. I notice in the resolution that was laid over, as well as in the others, the clause "to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, until otherwise provided for by law."

We have endeavored to put all the necessary annual clerks and employees under the regular appropriation law—that is to say, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act. Otherwise, when an appointment is made it goes on interminably, perhaps 1 year and perhaps 30, under the contingent fund.

I wish to ask the Senator whether it is his intention to recommend to the Committee on Appropriations that these clerks be put upon the regular roll when the next appropriation bill comes in?

Mr. BRIGGS. It is.

Mr. WARREN. Then I wish to ask the Senator further, in case the Committee on Appropriations and the Senate should consider the number of employees excessive, and the Senator himself and his committee should so consider it, will he expect to provide otherwise by law in those cases?

Mr. BRIGGS. So far as the Senator from New Jersey is concerned, he expects to be content with the action of the Committee on Appropriations and the Senate upon the matter.

SENATE POST-OFFICE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. BRIGGS. I ask unanimous consent for a reconsideration of Senate resolution No. 75.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey moves a reconsideration of the vote by which the following resolution was passed.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the clerk in the post office be hereafter designated as "chief clerk of the post office" and receive an annual salary of $1,800, and that the person now holding the office of assistant postmaster be appointed messenger at the card door and receive an annual salary of $1,600.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote by which the resolution was passed is reconsidered.

Mr. BRIGGS. I move an amendment to the resolution, which is simply to make a correction. In line 6, after the word "dollars," I move to strike out the period and insert a comma and the following words: "to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the clerk in the post office be hereafter designated as "chief clerk of the post office" and receive an annual salary of $1,800, and that the person now holding the office of assistant postmaster be appointed messenger at the card door and receive an annual salary of $1,600, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

Mr. WARREN. I think it is a bad practice to continue payment of salaries of regular employees from the contingent fund. I assume these employees will probably be taken up and provided for in the regular way.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to say a single word in regard to the resolution. There are two officers. The office of assistant postmaster was abolished. The result was that the officer who held it and the officer who had held it and who are both performing duties for the Senate were left without any pay at all. It is absolutely necessary to bridge them over in the way proposed. They are regular officers of the Senate, and have been.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to say that the Committee on Appropriations has undertaken to provide for these two employees in the joint resolution which is now on the calendar. While on my feet I wish to give notice to the Senate that I shall endeavor, at the close of the consideration of the special order to-day, to bring up House joint resolution 130 and dispose of it this afternoon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

CHAUFFEUR FOR THE VICE PRESIDENT.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 121), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Vice President be authorized to appoint for his service a chauffeur, to be paid at the rate of $1,000 per year out of the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided by law.

MESSENGER TO THE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution No. 106, submitted by Mr. PERKINS on the 20th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a messenger at a salary of $1,440 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HEYBURN:

A bill (S. 3113) granting an increase of pension to Solomon Baker (with accompanying paper); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 3114) to repeal the various acts of Congress relating to the conveyance of the title of the United States to square 1131 and certain other land to Sidney Bieber, and for other purposes (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. GORE (by request):

A bill (S. 3115) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to withdraw from the Treasury of the United States the funds of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 3116) to amend section 1 of the act of Congress of June 22, 1910, entitled "An act to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands," so as to include State land selections, indemnity school and educational lands; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. GAMBLE (by request):

A bill (S. 3117) for the relief of John G. Mead; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON THE CENSUS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 119), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Census be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk at a salary of $1,200 per annum.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON CONSERVATION OF NATIONAL RESOURCES.

Mr. DIXON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 120), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Conservation of National Resources be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk at a salary of $1,200 per annum, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

Mr. BRIGGS subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the foregoing resolution, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

TARIFF REVISION OF METAL SCHEDULE.

Mr. CUMMINS. I give notice that on Monday next, immediately following the addresses for which notices have been given, I will submit some observations to the Senate upon a proposed revision of the metal schedule, being Schedule C of the present tariff law.

THE FREE LIST.

Mr. BRISTOW. I understand that we are to vote next Tuesday on what is known as the free-list bill, according to the unanimous-consent agreement. Is that correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have a number of amendments that I want to offer to that bill. I will offer them to-morrow and let the Senate take action upon them, so as not to have a congestion of business on Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I give notice that to-morrow, at the close of the morning hour, I will address the Senate on an amendment presented by me to the free-list bill, providing that the duties on all imports which do not equal one-tenth of the total production of the similar articles in the United States shall be gradually reduced at the rate of 10 per cent per annum.

I ask leave to have the amendment which I have offered printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. NEWLANDS to the bill (H. R. 4413) to place on the free list agricultural implements, etc., viz: Insert at the proper place the following:

That the Tariff Board is hereby authorized, upon the complaint of any importer or upon its own initiative, to inquire as to whether the importations of any dutiable article have been for the year preceding such inquiry less than one-tenth of the total production of similar articles in the United States; and if it shall appear that such importations do not equal one-tenth of the production of similar articles in the United States, such board shall report the fact to the President of the United States, and thereupon the duty on such article shall be reduced at the rate of 10 per cent per annum until the importations thereof shall for one year equal one-tenth of the production of similar articles in the United States, whereupon any further reduction of such duty hereunder shall cease and the subject matter shall be reported to Congress for its action. But if, after such reduction has ceased, the importations of any dutiable article shall diminish so as to bring such importations below one-tenth of the consumption of similar articles for the period of one year, such annual reduction shall be resumed until the importations thereof shall equal one-tenth of the total annual production of similar articles in the United States, whereupon any further reduction of such duty shall cease and report thereof shall be made to Congress for its action. The President of the United States shall from time to time make proclamation of such reductions.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I also submit an amendment, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

That all specific duties authorized by law are hereby changed into ad valorem duties, as of the 1st day of January, 1912, and the President of the United States, with the aid of the Tariff Board and the other statistical forces of the Government, is hereby empowered and directed to ascertain the ad valorem equivalent of the existing specific duties where specific duties alone are levied and the ad valorem equivalent of duties where both specific and ad valorem duties are imposed, as of the 1st day of January, 1912; and as soon thereafter as such ad valorem equivalent duties are ascertained, to announce the same by a public proclamation; and thereafter no specific duties shall be imposed or collected, but in the place thereof such ad valorem equivalent duties shall be collected.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a comparative table showing the rate of duties on wool and the manufactures thereof—Schedule K—in the United States and corresponding rates in the Dominion of Canada.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. BAILEY was, on his own request and by unanimous consent, excused from further service upon the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

LAWS OF THE PHILIPPINES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Philippines and ordered to be printed (S. Doc. No. 78):

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 86 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith copies of the laws and resolutions enacted during the first session of the second Philippine Legislature and of certain laws enacted by the Philippine Commission.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 27, 1911.

TARIFF DUTIES ON WOOL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate House bill 11019, in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore entered into.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11019) to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] offers an amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu thereof to insert:

SECTION 1. The act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," is hereby amended by striking out all of Schedule K thereof, being paragraphs 360 to 395, inclusive, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

SCHEDULE K. WOOL AND MANUFACTURES THEREOF.

360. All wool, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, shall be divided, for the purposes of this act, into the two following classes:

361. Class 1, that is to say, merino, mestiza, metz, or metis wools, or other wools of merino blood, immediate or remote, Down clothing wools, and wools of like character with any of the preceding, including Bagdad wool, China lamb's wool, Castel Branco, Adrianople skin wool, or butcher's wool, and such as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Buenos Aires, New Zealand, Australia, Cape of Good Hope, Russia, Great Britain, Canada, Egypt, Morocco, and elsewhere, Leicester, Cotswold, Lincolnshire, Down combing wools, Canada long wools, or other like combing wools of English blood and usually known by the terms herein used, and all wools not hereinafter included in class 2.

362. Class 2, that is to say, Donskoi, native South American, Cordova, Valparaiso, native Smyrna, and all such wools of like character as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Turkey, Greece, Syria, and elsewhere, excepting improved wools hereinafter provided for, the hair of the camel, Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals.

363. The standard samples of all wools which are now or may be hereafter deposited in the principal customhouses of the United States, under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be the standards for the classification of wools under this act, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to renew these standards and to make such additions to them from time to time as may be required, and he shall cause to be deposited like standards in other customhouses of the United States when they shall be needed.

364. Whenever wools of class 2 shall have been improved by the admixture of merino or English blood, from their present character as represented by the standard samples now or hereafter to be deposited in the principal customhouses of the United States, such improved wools shall be classified for duty as class 1.

365. The duty on wools of the first class shall be 40 per cent ad valorem.

366. The duty upon wools of class 2 shall be 10 per cent ad valorem.

367. The duty on wools on the skin shall be as follows: Class 1, 35 per cent ad valorem; class 2, 10 per cent ad valorem; the quantity and value of the wool to be ascertained under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

368. Top waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, and garnetted waste, 30 per cent ad valorem.

369. Shoddy, noils, wool extract, yarn waste, thread waste, and all other wastes composed wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, and not specially provided for in this section, 30 per cent ad valorem.

370. Woolen rags, mungo, and flocks, 30 per cent ad valorem.

371. Combed wool or tops, and all wools which have been advanced in any manner or by any process of manufacture beyond the washed or scoured condition, not specially provided for in this section, 45 per cent ad valorem.

372. On yarns made wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, the duty shall be 50 per cent ad valorem.

373. On cloths, knit fabrics, blankets, and flannels for underwear, composed wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloths, bunting, clothing, ready-made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, including shawls, whether knitted or woven, and knitted articles of every description made up or manufactured wholly or in part, felts not woven, and not specially provided for in this section, webbings, gorings, suspenders, braces, bandings, beltings, bindings, braids, galloons, edgings, insertings, flouncings, fringes, gimps, cords and tassels, ribbons, ornaments, laces, trimmings, and articles made wholly or in part of lace, embroideries and all articles embroidered by hand or machinery, head nets, nettings, buttons or barrel buttons or buttons of other forms for tassels or ornaments, and manufactures of wool ornamented with beads or spangles of whatever material composed, any of the foregoing made of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, whether containing india rubber or not, 60 per cent ad valorem.

374. Aubusson, Axminster, moquette, and chenille carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description; Saxony, Wilton, and Tournay velvet carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description; Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description; velvet and tapestry velvet carpets, figured or plain, printed on the warp or otherwise, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description; tapestry Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, printed on the warp or otherwise; treble ingrain, three-ply, and all chain Venetian carpets; wool Dutch and two-ply ingrain carpets; carpets of every description, woven whole for rooms; oriental, Berlin, Aubusson, Axminster, and similar rugs; druggets and bockings, printed, colored, or otherwise; all the foregoing, made of wool, or of which wool is the component material of chief value, 40 per cent ad valorem.

375. Carpets and carpeting of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this section 40 per cent ad valorem.

376. Mats, rugs for floors, screens, covers, hassocks, bedsides, art squares, and other portions of carpets or carpeting made wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, and not specially provided for in this section, shall be subjected to the rate of duty herein imposed on carpets or carpeting of like character or description.

377. Whenever, in any schedule of this act, the word "wool" is used in connection with a manufactured article of which it is a component material, it shall be held to include wool or hair of the sheep, camel, goat, alpaca, or other animal, whether manufactured by a woolen, worsted, felt, or any other process.

378. All manufactures of hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other like animal, or of which any of the hair mentioned in paragraph 363 form the component material of chief value, shall be subject to a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem.

SEC. 2. That on and after the day when this act shall go into effect all goods, wares, and merchandise previously imported, and hereinbefore enumerated, described, and provided for, for which no entry has been made, and all such goods, wares, and merchandise previously entered without payment of duty and under bond for warehousing, transportation, or any other purpose, for which no permit of delivery to the importer or his agent has been issued, shall be subjected to the duties imposed by this act and no other duty, upon the entry or the withdrawal thereof.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of the act be, and the same are hereby, repealed. This act shall take effect and be in force on and after the 1st day of January, 1912.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Upon the adoption of the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the substitute, to come in on page 4, line 3. The paragraph reads:

Woolen rags, mungo, and flocks, 30 per cent ad valorem.

I move to strike out the word "thirty" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, paragraph 370, line 3, before the words "per cent ad valorem," it is proposed to amend the amendment by striking out "thirty" and inserting "forty," so as to read:

370. Woolen rags, mungo, and flocks, 40 per cent ad valorem.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Upon agreeing to the substitute offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], and shall vote. Before doing so, however, I will say that I do not know how the senior Senator from Maine would vote upon this particular amendment if he were present. I, however, vote "nay."

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. In his absence, I withhold my vote. If he were present, and I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I am not advised how he would vote, if present. I withhold my vote because of his absence, but if permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Owing to my general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], I withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] is unavoidably absent. He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS]. If present and voting, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. I understand that the Senator from Mississippi, if present, would vote "nay," and I should vote "yea." I prefer therefore to let the pair stand and not to vote.

Mr. RAYNER (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has authorized me to state that if his colleague were present, he would vote "nay." Therefore I vote "nay."

Mr. SMOOT (when Mr. SUTHERLAND's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I make this announcement, and shall allow it to stand for the day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the announcement of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BURNHAM] that his colleague [Mr. GALLINGER], with whom I am paired, if present would vote "nay," leaves me free to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. TAYLOR. My colleague [Mr. LEA] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. BACON. Before the vote is announced, I think it due to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], with whom I am paired, to say that while I have no specific instructions from him as to this particular vote, the general instructions which I have from him lead me to have no doubt that, if present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 66, as follows:

YEAS—14.

Borah	Clapp	Gronna	Poindexter
Bourne	Crawford	Kenyon	Works
Bristow	Cummins	La Follette

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further amendments to be offered to the bill as in Committee of the Whole? If not, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I again announce that I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. If he were present, he would vote "nay." I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. By arrangement with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], who is paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY], I transfer my pair to the Senator from Mississippi, so that the Senator from New Hampshire will stand paired with the Senator from Mississippi. This will leave me at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. Were he present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. GALLINGER], as I have stated, is necessarily absent. If present and voting, he would vote "nay." He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. As stated by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS], that pair has been transferred to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which allows me to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. RAYNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT (when Mr. SUTHERLAND'S name was called). If my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 36, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—36.

Bacon	Fletcher	Myers	Simmons
Bailey	Foster	Newlands	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Gore	O'Gorman	Smith, S. C.

NOT VOTING—10.

Culberson	Frye	Percy	Tillman
Dillingham	Gallinger	Rayner
du Pont	Lea	Sutherland

So the bill was rejected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill failed to pass.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I should have made the motion or seconded it but for the fact that I voted for the passage of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin that the vote by which the bill was rejected be reconsidered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair, as before announced, with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. By arrangement with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Hampshire to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY], with whom the Senator from North Dakota is paired, and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER'S name was called). I make the same statement as before regarding the absence of my colleague [Mr. GALLINGER], and will say that, if present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. RAYNER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT (when Mr. SUTHERLAND'S name was called). If my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] were present and free to vote, he would vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the affirmative). I should have announced before casting my vote the transfer of the pair I have with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], and also that if present the Senator from Maine would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—49.

So the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I inquire if the bill is now in the Senate and open to amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin offers an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert in lieu——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It would save time and it would not be necessary to read the amendment if I could be permitted to state that by it the basic duty on wool is reduced from 40 per cent to 35 per cent, and the other duties are scaled accordingly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hardly thinks that could be done according to the agreement. The Secretary will read the amendment, unless unanimous consent be asked to dispense with its reading.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask, then, that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

Mr. CLAPP. Unless objection is made, I shall ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. STONE. I object.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. WARREN. I think the amendment ought to be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The SECRETARY. Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and in lieu insert:

SECTION 1. The act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," is hereby amended by striking out all of Schedule K thereof, being paragraphs 360 to 395, inclusive, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

SCHEDULE K. WOOL AND MANUFACTURES THEREOF.

360. All wool, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, shall be divided, for the purposes of this act, into the three following classes:

361. Class 1, that is to say, merino, mestiza, metz, or metis wools, or other wools of merino blood, immediate or remote, Down clothing wools, and wools of like character with any of the preceding, including Bagdad wool, China lamb's wool, Castel Branco, Adrianople skin wool, or butcher's wool, and such as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Buenos Aires, New Zealand, Australia, Cape of Good Hope, Russia, Great Britain, Canada, Egypt, Morocco, and elsewhere, Leicester, Cotswold, Lincolnshire, Down combing wools, Canada long wools, or other like combing wools of English blood and usually known by the terms herein used, and all wools not hereinafter included in class 2.

362. Class 2, that is to say, Donskoi, native South American, Cordova, Valparaiso, native Smyrna, and all such wools of like character as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Turkey, Greece, Syria, and elsewhere, excepting improved wools hereinafter provided for; the hair of the camel, Angora goat, alpaca, and other like animals.

363. The standard samples of all wools which are now or may be hereafter deposited in the principal customhouses of the United States, under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be the standards for the classification of wools under this act, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to renew these standards and to make such additions to them from time to time as may be required, and he shall cause to be deposited like standards in other customhouses of the United States when they shall be needed.

364. Whenever wools of class 2 shall have been improved by the admixture of merino or English blood, from their present character as represented by the standard samples now or hereafter to be deposited in the principal customhouses of the United States, such improved wools shall be classified for duty as class 1.

365. The duty on wools of the first class shall be 35 per cent ad valorem.

366. The duty upon wools of class 2 shall be 10 per cent ad valorem.

367. The duty on wools on the skin shall be as follows: Class 1, 30 per cent ad valorem; class 2, 10 per cent ad valorem; the quantity and value of the wool to be ascertained under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

368. Top waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, and garnetted waste, 30 per cent ad valorem.

369. Shoddy, noils, wool extract, yarn waste, thread waste, and all other wastes composed wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, and not specially provided for in this section, 25 per cent ad valorem.

370. Woolen rags, mungo, and flocks, 25 per cent ad valorem.

371. Combed wool or tops, and all wools which have been advanced in any manner or by any process of manufacture beyond the washed or scoured condition, not specially provided for in this section, 40 per cent ad valorem.

372. On yarns made wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, the duty shall be 45 per cent ad valorem.

373. On cloths, knit fabrics, blankets, and flannels for underwear, composed wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloths, bunting, clothing, ready made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, including shawls, whether knitted or woven, and knitted articles of every description made up or manufactured wholly or in part, felts not woven, and not specially provided for in this section, webbings, gorings, suspenders, braces, bandings, beltings, bindings, braids, galloons, edgings, insertings, flouncings, fringes, gimps, cords and tassels, ribbons, ornaments, laces, trimmings, and articles made wholly or in part of lace, embroideries and all articles embroidered by hand or machinery, head nets, nettings, buttons or barrel buttons or buttons of other forms for tassels or ornaments, and manufactures of wool ornamented with beads or spangles of whatever material composed, any of the foregoing made of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, whether containing india rubber or not, 55 per cent ad valorem.

374. Aubusson, Axminster, moquette, and chenille carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description; Saxony, Wilton, and Tournay velvet carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description; Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description; velvet and tapestry velvet carpets, figured or plain, printed on the warp or otherwise, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description; tapestry Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, printed on the warp or otherwise; treble ingrain, three-ply, and all chain Venetian carpets; wool Dutch and two-ply ingrain carpets; carpets of every description, woven whole for rooms; oriental, Berlin, Aubusson, Axminster, and similar rugs; druggets and bockings, printed, colored, or otherwise; all the foregoing, made of wool, or of which wool is the component material of chief value, 35 per cent ad valorem.

375. Carpets and carpeting of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this section, 35 per cent ad valorem.

376. Mats, rugs for floors, screens, covers, hassocks, bedsides, art squares, and other portions of carpets or carpeting made wholly of wool or of which wool is the component material of chief value, and not specially provided for in this section, shall be subjected to the rate of duty herein imposed on carpets or carpeting of like character or description.

377. Whenever, in any schedule of this act, the word "wool" is used in connection with a manufactured article of which it is a component material, it shall be held to include wool or hair of the sheep, camel, goat, alpaca, or other animal, whether manufactured by a woolen, worsted, felt, or any other process.

378. All manufactures of hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other like animal, or of which any of the hair mentioned in paragraph 363 form the component material of chief value, shall be subject to a duty of 30 per cent ad valorem

SEC. 2. That on and after the day when this act shall go into effect all goods, wares, and merchandise previously imported, and hereinbefore enumerated, described, and provided for, for which no entry has been made, and all such goods, wares, and merchandise previously entered without payment of duty and under bond for warehousing, transportation, or any other purpose, for which no permit of delivery to the importer or his agent has been issued, shall be subjected to the duties imposed by this act, and no other duty, upon the entry or the withdrawal thereof.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed. This act shall take effect and be in force on and after the 1st day of January, 1912.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho will state it.

Mr. BORAH. Is it permissible under the agreement under which we are proceeding to ask a question of the Senator from Wisconsin in order to ascertain what we could not hear?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that any question is in the nature of debate; but if a Senator raises the question that he could not hear the reading, the Chair thinks it would be easier to ask the question than it would be to reread the whole amendment.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment has been read.

Mr. BORAH. The amendment was read, but nobody heard it in this part of the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the amendment, or any portion of it suggested, will be read again. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I object. It has been read in full.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It has been read. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection has been made.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the amendment. On page 4, paragraph 371, I move to strike out "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof "forty."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 3, before the words "per centum ad valorem," it is proposed to strike out "twenty-five", and insert "forty," so that if amended the paragraph will read:

371. Woolen rags, mungo, and flocks, 40 per cent ad valorem.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Upon the question of the adoption of the amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I again announce my general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], who, if present, would vote "nay." I transfer my pair to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). I announce again my pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. By an arrangement with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Owing to the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], with whom I am paired, I withhold my vote. Were he present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] is necessarily absent. He is paired on this vote with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY], as has just been announced.

Mr. RAYNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT (when Mr. SUTHERLAND's name was called). If my colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 48, nays 32, as follows:

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer of my pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] to the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], and the fact that if the Senator from Maine were present he would vote "nay." I vote "yea."

Mr. CULBERSON (when his name was called). In view of my general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], I abstain from voting. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I again announce that I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which is transferred, by an arrangement with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). Owing to my general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] I will refrain from voting. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. RICHARDSON (when Mr. DU PONT's name was called). My colleague [Mr. DU PONT] is necessarily absent. He has a general pair with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). I make the same announcement as before. My colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] is unavoidably absent. He is paired on this vote with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. If my colleague were present and voting, he would vote "nay."

Mr. RAYNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. If he were present, I would vote "yea."

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 48, nays 32, as follows:

YEAS—48.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I wish to request a reprint of the bill as passed. There is quite a demand for it and the copies are exhausted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, an order therefor will be entered.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to call up the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 130) making appropriations for certain expenses of the House of Representatives incident to the first session of the Sixty-second Congress.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I will not ask to omit the formal reading, as the joint resolution is short.

The Secretary read the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HEYBURN in the chair). The amendments of the committee will be stated in their order.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 1, after line 5, to insert:

SENATE.

To reimburse the official reporters of the proceedings and debates of the Senate for expenses incurred during the first session of the Sixty-second Congress for clerk hire and other extra clerical services, $3,695.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 2, to insert:

To pay J. H. Jones for extra services in the care of the Senate chronometer and for work in connection therewith, for the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 4, to insert:

The offices of assistant postmaster and mail carrier, at $2,088, and clerk, at $1,600, as provided for in the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1912, and for other purposes, approved March 4, 1911, be, and the same are hereby, abolished, and the following offices are hereby created in lieu thereof, to take effect July 14, 1911, namely: Chief clerk of the post office, at $1,800, and messenger at the card door, at $1,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 10, to insert:

WAR DEPARTMENT.

The Secretary of War is hereby directed to inquire, and report to Congress for its consideration, what sum or sums of money were actually expended by the State of Texas during the period of time between January 1, 1856, and March 5, 1861, in payment of State volunteers or rangers called into service by authority of the governor of Texas, in defense of the frontier of that State against Mexican marauders and Indian depredations, for which reimbursement has not heretofore been made out of the Treasury of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations just what this amendment is intended to do. I do not quite understand it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, at an early date the United States Government authorized the payment of State troops in Texas for service on the frontier to protect that frontier between this country and Mexico. Congress made an appropriation, and an account was rendered a few years ago, of the sum of three hundred and eighty-odd thousand dollars. The accounting was had, the authorization shown, the account was audited, and the sum appropriated in deficiency bills. That was the reason the committee consented to a further inquiry going into this joint resolution. After that settlement it seems that the military ledgers of the State were brought to notice, and it is stated by the officials of that State that there is yet due something like $180,000, I think. This amendment provides that the War Department may examine the books and papers so as to ascertain whether in reality this Government owes the State of Texas such amount, or any amount. The State of Texas claims that it has not only its ledgers and books to sustain the claim, but that it has signed vouchers for every dollar of the amount, and that it has the record of the regular authorization of this Government to that State. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] is in his place, and he will give further explanation of the matter.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator from Texas will permit me to finish my inquiry, I want to ask the Senator from Wyoming, chairman of the committee, whether this matter originally came as a claim from the State of Texas or arose through a voluntary disposition upon the part of the Federal Government to meet these expenses?

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, answering the inquiry of the Senator from Michigan, I will say that between 1859 and February, 1861, during the administration of Gov. Sam Houston, of Texas, a large amount of money, several hundred thousand dollars, was expended by the State to protect its frontier against Mexican invasion and Indian depredations. In 1905, on a deficiency appropriation bill, a paragraph like the present one was adopted, directing the Secretary of War to make inquiry into this expenditure and report to the Congress. In response to that provision of law, the Secretary of War replied that a certain amount of money had been expended, amounting to about $396,000, which was subsequently appropriated for by the United States. In that report the Secretary of War stated that, although in 1860 an appropriation of $300,000 was made by a resolution of the State legislature, about $198,000 of it had not been expended at all. Now, the governor of the State and other authorities have discovered by original vouchers, heretofore hidden in débris recovered from the fire which destroyed the State capitol in 1881, that instead of that money not having been expended $179,000 of this sum was, in fact, expended by the State, and there is on file in the comptroller's office at Austin the original vouchers showing the payment of the money for that purpose by the State of Texas. The remaining sum of about $3,600 was inadvertently omitted in 1905.

The object of this amendment is simply for the Federal authorities to make inquiry and submit to Congress for its consideration the facts in reference to this last suggestion of the governor of the State.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas will permit me, I should like to ask whether or not the service which is to be compensated for was such service as was rendered in the exercise of the police powers of the State of Texas or not?

Mr. CULBERSON. The service was for protecting the frontier against Cortina and his band of Mexicans and against Indians, who came in on the northern and eastern sides of Texas. The service was rendered to protect the State against invasion, which it was the duty of the United States primarily to do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. This did not grow out of any attempted enforcement of the police powers of the State of Texas?

Mr. CULBERSON. Not at all; it was for the protection of the frontier against outside invasion.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I do not care to make a point of order against the amendment, but this is rather an old claim to come in this form. To be sure we appropriate no money, but we lay the foundation for an appropriation; and if any further original entries are discovered hereafter, we may be called upon to make these payments for all time during the life of the Government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. WARREN. One moment. Has the Secretary concluded the statement of the amendments proposed by the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is one other committee amendment, which will now be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, after line 21, to insert:

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to use the funds provided in the appropriations for stationery and for contingent expenses of the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1912, for the purchase and distribution of supplies for the use of subordinate offices and Indian schools having appropriations available for the purchase of such supplies: Provided, That the said appropriations of the department shall be reimbursed from the appropriations for the offices and schools so supplied by the medium of transfer vouchers, which shall be recognized and allowed, when properly executed, by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, and such vouchers, bearing the approval of the Secretary of the Interior or one of his assistants, shall be accepted by the accounting officers of the Treasury as sufficient evidence that the supplies charged for have been or will be paid for from the said department appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 13, to insert:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

For payment to Samuel Robinson and William Madden, as messengers to CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, on night duty during the special session of the present Congress, for extra services rendered, $700 each; in all, $1,400.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WARREN. The committee have another amendment, which I desire to offer on their behalf.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment will be stated.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri rise to the last amendment?

Mr. REED. I rise to the amendment which was last read. I was on my feet when the Presiding Officer was announcing that if there was no objection to the amendment it would be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be regarded as open for consideration.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, before I give consent to increasing the pay roll here, I should like to know why it is to be increased. Almost every day we have a bill brought in to increase the expenditures of the Senate. One was reported, I think, this morning along that line. I should like to know something about these messengers, and, unless I am informed, I am going to object.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, has the Senator concluded?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the amendment to which the Senator alludes provides for the payment of the two messengers who take care of the copy for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the House and of the Senate. They are the two men who come to the Senator from Missouri and other Senators and bring the manuscript of their remarks to them at their houses or wherever they may be, and when they have finished with it these messengers carry it to the Printing Office and care for it until it is in the proper hands there. For many years at the end of each session of Congress they have received an amount equal to this. Their pay is small; it is per diem and by the hour; and if they were employed 8 hours every day for 313 days in the year they would receive, as I compute it hurriedly, only $1,001 each. They are not always employed regularly during the recess of Congress. Sometimes, as I am informed, there are long intervals when they receive very little. They are men who are thoroughly versed in their business; they conduce to the convenience of every Senator and every Member of the House of Representatives, and it has been thought heretofore no more than right to pay them this extra compensation, since they must work night and day—mostly at night—in all kinds of weather during sessions.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee are these men on salaries now?

Mr. WARREN. As I have said, they are on a per diem of, I think, 40 cents an hour.

Mr. REED. During what time?

Mr. WARREN. Whatever time the officer in charge of the Printing Office may order them to work.

Mr. REED. They get that anyway?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. REED. Now, this is a proposition to pay them something in addition to 40 cents an hour?

Mr. WARREN. It is.

Mr. REED. Well, I object to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. REED. I raise the question of the lack of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those in favor of adopting the amendment as reported will show their assent by saying "aye"——

Mr. REED. I have raised the question of no quorum. Is that suggestion to be entertained or not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a committee amendment, and an objection does not send it over.

Mr. REED. I have raised the question of the lack of a quorum of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bourne	Cullom	Lorimer	Pomerene
Bradley	Cummins	McCumber	Reed
Brandegee	Dillingham	McLean	Smith, Md.
Bristow	Dixon	Martin, Va.	Smith, Mich.
Brown	Gamble	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Bryan	Gore	Nixon	Stephenson
Burnham	Gronna	O'Gorman	Stone
Burton	Guggenheim	Oliver	Swanson
Chamberlain	Heyburn	Page	Taylor
Chilton	Johnson, Me.	Paynter	Townsend
Clapp	Jones	Penrose	Warren
Crane	Kenyon	Perkins	Watson
Culberson	Kern	Poindexter	Wetmore

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] will not press his objection to this item. We who have been in the service of the Government for a long time know that there are no more faithful employees of this Government than the two men named in this paragraph. No matter how stormy the night, or how dark or how late, these men are performing their duties for the convenience of Senators and the accuracy of the public records. For many years they have received this amount. They are in every way deserving of it. I do not know a service that is more important, or that is rewarded so scantily as the service performed by these two men, and I sincerely hope the Senator from Missouri will not press his objection to this item.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the last thing I should want to do would be to deprive any man of just compensation for his work; and when it comes to matters of economy, I am not in favor of beginning those economies with the men who are drawing the smallest stipends. The only reason, or the main reason, why I objected to this was that there is scarcely a day passes when there is not some bill brought in to increase pay or to employ new men. I think beyond all question, if these men are not receiving sufficient pay on their regular stipend, it ought to be increased rather than to pay them by slipping in an extra appropriation every session. I do not think that is the right system to proceed on; but it is manifestly a thing that has been acquiesced in for some time, and evidently the feeling of Senators here is that they want to make this donation, for that is what it is, and in view of that I shall not insist on a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, after line 16, to insert:

For folding speeches and pamphlets, at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota offers an amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert under the heading of "Senate," on page 2, after line 16, the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and the House borne on the annual and session rolls on the 1st day of July, 1911, including the Capitol police, the official reporters of the Senate and House, and W. A. Smith, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, for extra services during the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation then paid them by law, the same to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado offers an amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, after the amendment just agreed to, the following:

To pay to the employees of the Senate Office Buildings now carried on the maintenance roll of the Senate Office Building, for extra services during the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, a sum equal to one month's pay at the compensation now paid them, the same to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution making appropriations for certain expenses of the Senate and House of Representatives incident to the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, and for other purposes."

THE FREE LIST.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4413) to place upon the free list agricultural implements, cotton bagging, cotton ties, leather, boots and shoes, fence wire, meats, cereals, flour, bread, timber, lumber, sewing machines, salt, and other articles.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. WARREN. I assume that there is no Senator ready to proceed at this time, and I therefore move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withhold that motion, as I gave notice yesterday that I would address the Senate to-day upon Senate resolution No. 100 immediately after the final disposition of the special order.

Mr. WARREN. I was not aware of that notice. I withdraw the motion for adjournment.

Mr. PENROSE. Then let House bill 4413 be temporarily laid aside.

PENSACOLA NAVY YARD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Pursuant to the notice heretofore given by the Senator from Florida, the Chair lays before the Senate the following resolution.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 100, submitted by Mr. FLETCHER July 11, 1911, directing the Secretary of the Navy to report as to certain matters relative to the Pensacola and other navy yards.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, in his annual report for the year 1910 the Secretary of the Navy recommended to Congress that the navy yard at Pensacola, Fla., be abandoned and sold. Congress refused to comply with this recommendation. On July 1, 1911, more than one-half of the 200 workmen employed at this navy yard were discharged upon about two days' notice, and it is reliably stated that the stores located there are being packed for shipment, and that within the next few days the remaining workmen will be discharged and all work, practically, if not completely, abandoned.

Undoubtedly this procedure is in pursuance of orders issued by the Secretary of the Navy. The object of the pending resolution is to ascertain definitely and authoritatively exactly what orders he has issued and has in contemplation; generally, what work, if any, it is his purpose to allow to be done; and specifically, whether it is his intention to do indirectly that which Congress refused to give him authority to do directly.

It is well understood that the Secretary desires to close and abandon this yard and sell the land which the United States have used for navy-yard purposes since 1828.

The views of the present Secretary of the Navy are very different from those which have prevailed generally since the establishment of the yard, as shown by reports of the several former Secretaries of the Navy. In 1833 Secretary Woodbury made the following report:

The continuance of Pensacola as a naval station seems to me judicious. This opinion arises not only from its convenient position as to the whole Gulf of Mexico, but its proximity to the mouths of the Mississippi and Mobile Rivers, whose great and growing commerce is so amply entitled to the best protection. In the depth and size of its bay, in the excellent defenses at its mouth, in its healthy situation, in its easy access to all our vessels except of the two highest classes, Pensacola has no prominent rival in that neighborhood.

In 1866 Secretary Welles, in his report, had this to say:

The yards at Norfolk and at Pensacola are as essential to the Navy and the country as either of the yards at the North, and in the event of a foreign war we could better dispense with one of the yards north of the Chesapeake than with either of these. Our possession of them during the late conflict, even in their dilapidated condition, was of great value to the Union cause. After their recovery the vessels composing the several blockading squadrons were not detached and sent north for ordinary repairs, with loss of service during their absence of vessels and crews, but were retained on their stations. The repairs thus effected were made without many of the required facilities, but notwithstanding great disadvantages considerable saving ensued to the Government, and the blockade was thereby made more efficient. Upon the Pensacola yard, even in its present ruinous state, we must depend for repairs and supplies for any squadron we may employ to guard the ocean outlet of the great central valley of the Union and of our whole coast bordering on the Gulf. To neglect to put that yard in proper condition would be to neglect Iowa, Illinois, and the States north, as well as Louisiana and Mississippi.

In the event of a foreign war with the great maritime powers, our country would labor under serious disadvantages were we without a navy yard or naval station in the Gulf. A naval force of steamers—and all fighting vessels must hereafter be steamers—could not be maintained in the Gulf without frequent repairs and supplies. With no navy yard in the Gulf the disabled vessels would necessarily be withdrawn from their station and compelled to proceed to a northern yard for refitment. Besides the perils incident to a voyage under these circumstances, with an enemy on the coast, the services of the officers and crews, as well as of the vessel itself, would be lost during the time she might be absent in going to and returning from a northern yard. The rebels and the waste of war have devastated the Norfolk and Pensacola yards, but the best interest of the service and the obligations of the Government are not less imperative now, when peace and union are restored, to place them in proper condition. It is to be hoped, therefore, that liberal appropriations will be made for that purpose.

In 1869 Secretary of the Navy Robeson reported:

* * * The yard at Pensacola was so far destroyed during the war as to be now almost wholly useless, and we are without a depot on the Gulf where vessels can be refitted. The station, which includes the West Indies and the Gulf, is one of great and growing importance. In the present condition of things, a vessel on that station needing any repair is obliged to be sent to the navy yards of the North.

Again, in 1873, he reported:

I think it very important that the Pensacola Navy Yard, burnt during the rebellion, but with many of its improvements unharmed, should be in some degree rebuilt. In the event of complications in or near the Gulf of Mexico or West Indies, it would be a station of vast importance.

And again, in 1874:

An appropriation is also needed for the erection of suitable barracks for the marines of the station. It would be difficult to overstate the importance of this navy yard as a rendezvous and repairing yard for our vessels of war in the event of complications in or near the Gulf of Mexico, the West Indies, or the Spanish Main.

And again, in 1875:

While it is not deemed wise to place this yard in condition for building ships, yet it is considered eminently proper that it should possess all requisite facilities for docking and repairing the vessels of the North Atlantic Squadron. * * *

Secretary Thompson, in 1878, among other things, said:

It is an important question to decide whether the improvements of the yard shall be continued beyond what can now be done with the means at the control of the department. It is an important point on account of its location, and undoubtedly possesses great advantages because of its contiguity to the live oak, coal, and iron regions of the South, both for building and repairing vessels. In the event of hostile naval operations in the Gulf it would afford a safe place of rendezvous for our ships, where they could be repaired without having to be taken to the more northern yards. These are questions, however, exclusively for the consideration of Congress.

In 1880 Secretary Thompson reported as follows:

This is a very important yard, being the only one upon the Gulf, and the public interests will be advanced by liberal appropriations to restore it to the condition it was in before the war.

It is true that, in pursuance of an act of Congress of 1882, the navy-yard commission in 1883 recommended the abandonment of the present site; but it is also true that the same commission recommended the selection instead of a site within the lines of Pensacola Bay.

In his report of 1887 Secretary Whitney strongly urged the necessity of maintaining a navy yard in the Gulf of Mexico, and gave it as his opinion that Pensacola Bay combined more advantages for this purpose than any other harbor on the Gulf.

It is true also that another commission in 1889 recommended that the yard be closed and abandoned; upon the sole ground, however, that it would be exposed to attack by a hostile fleet.

But in submitting this report, Secretary Herbert said:

There should, however, be a navy yard at some point on the Gulf where vessels cruising in southern waters can be repaired.

Should the Caribbean Sea at any time be the theater of a naval war, the repairing of ships at points accessible to the Gulf of Mexico would be an absolute necessity.

In 1903, in response to a Senate resolution, Secretary Moody reported as follows:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the resolution of the Senate of the United States, dated November 19, requesting that the Secretary of the Navy inform the Senate "whether or not it is desirable in the interest of the Navy that the Government of the United States should construct and own a graving dock, of capacity sufficient to dock the largest battleships of the Navy, at some point on the coast of the United States on the Gulf of Mexico; and if, in his judgment, the same is desirable, to also inform the Senate at what port on said coast such dock should be located and the probable cost of the same when completed," and in reply to state that the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, to whom the above-mentioned resolution was referred, has submitted the following report, in which the department concurs:

"At the present time there is no dry dock of large capacity upon the Gulf of Mexico which is accessible at all times. The steel floating dry dock at New Orleans naval station has sufficient capacity to receive the largest battleships, but experience has shown that it can not be counted upon as being available at all times for such vessels because of limited depth of water.

"There is at present no other dry dock south of New York of such capacity, and none such is now authorized for any point south of Charleston, S. C. Under this present situation a continuous seven-tenths of the southern and eastern coasts of the United States is without a dry dock of sufficient size and at all times accessible for the docking of a large part of its Navy afloat.

"This is a situation which ought not to exist longer than is absolutely unavoidable. Congress has recognized the desirability of proper docking facilities upon the southern coasts by instituting inquiries through boards of officers as to the most eligible point for the same, which has strongly appreciated such need; and commanding officers of squadrons, in their reports to the Navy Department, have dwelt upon the advantages to be gained by such provisions, having felt their need when cruising in those and adjacent waters. The interests of our Government are rapidly increasing to the south of our own territory, and events are crowding in that part of the world which bid fair to require the continual presence of a considerable naval force. It has already proved inconvenient to repair to the north coast for docking facilities, and it might easily occur that their absence in southern waters would prove a calamity.

"The harbor of Pensacola Bay is the best upon the Gulf of Mexico (indeed, upon the entire southern coast) in which to establish a dry dock of the largest class. The entrance to the harbor is now of sufficient depth, the situation is favorable, and the expanse of water is fine and ample for the assembly of a squadron or fleet. The bureau recommends the graving type of dock. It is better suited to the docking of vessels, safer and more convenient, and should always be adopted, except under local conditions rendering the location or founding impracticable.

"Replying specifically to the inquiries in the resolution of the Senate of the 19th ultimo, the bureau would state that it is desirable to construct a graving dock large enough for the largest battleships of the Navy upon the Gulf of Mexico, and that the navy yard upon the Bay of Pensacola is the point where it should be located. Its probable cost would be $1,300,000."

While concurring in the view of the Bureau of Yards and Docks that the construction of such a dry dock is desirable, I must say, in addition, that many other public works not yet undertaken ought, in the larger interests of the Navy, be given precedence.

Without quoting further from reports of former Secretaries, it is safe to say that the only objection ever urged to Pensacola Bay prior to the present Secretary's report of 1910 has been that the present site might be too much exposed to attack by fleets at sea.

To this criticism, which, as has been shown, has not generally been considered to be tenable, the present Secretary adds an objection that a navy yard at Pensacola or elsewhere in the Gulf of Mexico is strategically unnecessary. This is an objection that has never been urged prior to his report of 1910. It has the merit of novelty, and that is the only merit it does have. It is well to consider this objection first, because if it is well founded it would make no difference how well equipped or fortified or otherwise adapted the site would be for navy-yard purposes.

In his report of 1910, the Secretary states that we have too many navy yards, and upon this statement bases his recommendation that all except three be abandoned and sold. However, he does not designate the three yards which, in his opinion, should be retained, although it is quite clear from his report that he considers the one at Charleston to be unnecessary. There are six first-class yards within the 900 miles of the extreme North Atlantic coast extending from Norfolk, Va., to Portsmouth, N. H. But when he comes to making selection from among these six, the Secretary fails to give us the benefit of his views. He complains in one part of his report that some of the Atlantic coast navy yards have not enough water for modern vessels. He does not and can not make this complaint against the navy yard at Pensacola; and yet the first and only yard which he definitely recommends should be abandoned and sold is the only one south of New York, according to his own report, which has ample water for approach to docks and in whose harbor an entire fleet could be accommodated. He seems to recognize that in time of war the port at Pensacola would be very valuable, for, on page 34 of his report, he says:

It may be confidently predicted that in time of war the cities of the Gulf coast will be, from their natural security, the chief sources of supplies and material, and the probable points from which our troops will embark either for the Isthmus for further transit or for service in the Caribbean, as may be required.

The Secretary has come to this conclusion, that the navy yard at Pensacola would not be necessary, quite suddenly. In his report of 1909 he said it would be unwise to abandon it until the Panama Canal should be completed. At the time of his report of 1909 he was doubtless impressed with the fact that the canal is nearer to Pensacola than to any other navy yard on American soil. Pensacola is 1,300 miles from Panama as against 2,200 miles from New York, approximately 1,600 miles from Norfolk, which latter is the most southern yard contemplated in the Secretary's present scheme.

We would have six navy yards at home to protect 900 miles of the North Atlantic, and no navy yards at home to protect 1,200 miles of the South Atlantic and the whole 1,600 miles of the Gulf coast. He may be right in concluding that we have too many navy yards and that three on the Atlantic and Gulf coast would be sufficient, but if so, it would seem that it would be wiser to place these yards at considerable distances apart instead of having them all congested within a few hundred miles of one part of the coast and leaving the greater part of the coast without a single navy yard.

When he advised against selling the navy yard at Pensacola in his report of 1909, the Secretary also probably had in mind that with the canal completed war ships could be sent from Pensacola to either the Atlantic or Pacific coast of either South America or North America more quickly than from any yard on the Atlantic. Indeed, it is quite apparent that if it should ever become necessary to have fleets on the west coast of South America, the most accessible point for all necessary equipment of ships either now in existence or contemplated would be this navy yard which he now proposes to abolish.

In 1909 he probably was impressed also with the fact that the coal and iron fields of Alabama and Tennessee are within easy reach of, and in direct communication with this port, and this fact, which had impressed all of his predecessors during the more than 80 years of existence of the Pensacola Navy Yard, on account of its accessibility both for material and workmen, must have seemed to him at that time to be of considerable importance. It is probable also that he had in mind in 1909 that at Pensacola the climate is warm enough in winter and cool enough in summer to permit work to be done continuously without undue exposure to either cold or heat.

Since the publication of his report of 1909 the Secretary seems to have been convinced that it is no longer necessary, viewed from a strategic standpoint, to have a navy yard on the Gulf coast. Suddenly he comes to the conclusion that it would be the part of wisdom to abolish old yards located at home, and which have heretofore served all purposes, and establish a new yard upon foreign soil, away from the advantages of easily securing skilled workmen and supplies for the yard and equipment and supplies for warships. The reason is found in the fact that he is impressed with the possibilities of Guantanamo. Guantanamo is 680 miles from the canal and 1,322 miles from Philadelphia, which he shows in his report of 1910 has not enough water for the largest warships. He fails to give the distance from Guantanamo to Pensacola, which is 1,050 miles—nearer than any other home port navy yard.

His reason for abandoning the yard at Pensacola and establishing one at Guantanamo is that in his opinion Guantanamo would be sufficient to protect the South Atlantic and the Gulf. He says that any attacking fleets must come through either the Yucatan Channel or the Straits of Florida, and that these attacking fleets would in all probability be met near Key West and the battle would be fought there. Even this prospective battle ground, it is submitted, can be commanded from Key West and Pensacola better than from Key West and Guantanamo. Pensacola is within 450 miles and Guantanamo is 600 miles away. Pensacola is easily accessible to all necessary equipments and supplies, being, as already shown, within easy reach of both, while, of course, Guantanamo is in a hot climate, inaccessible to supplies, equipment, and skilled workmen; and because it is upon American soil, the navy yard at Pensacola would not require an army to protect it, as would be the case with the navy yard at Guantanamo. It will be remembered that Spain thought it necessary to have an army to defend Santiago against our land forces. So in case of war with a great maritime power, one of the first steps that would naturally be taken by our Government would be to send troops away from home to protect the navy yard at Guantanamo against attack by the enemy, thus unnecessarily augmenting the inconvenience and expense incident thereto.

If the Secretary is correct, and it is quite probable that he is, in his statement that it would be practically impossible for hostile fleets to penetrate the Gulf of Mexico and reach Pensacola, then Pensacola has an additional double advantage over Guantanamo.

First. Injured ships could proceed for repairs in safety to Pensacola, whereas they would have to proceed to Guantanamo in the face of the enemy; and Second. After repairs were made at Pensacola they could return in safety to the battle, whereas they would probably be blockaded at Guantanamo and be unable to return at all.

It is probably true that we should have a navy yard or naval station at Guantanamo; but certainly that circumstance does not furnish sufficient reason for abandoning a yard already built and for depending solely upon it for the protection of 2,600 miles of seacoast, especially so when there is no necessity for it.

When the Secretary points out that the harbor at Pensacola is sufficiently deep to accommodate any battleships, and when his report further shows that of no other navy yard south of New York, including Guantanamo, can this be truthfully said, and when he further states that the Gulf of Mexico could never be successfully penetrated by an enemy's fleet, but is in a position of "natural security," and when it is further borne in mind that not a single advantage is possessed by any of the six first-class navy yards on the north Atlantic coast over the navy yard at Pensacola—when these facts are remembered—it does seem to me pertinent to inquire why, then, should this yard be selected for sacrifice, and why should the Secretary think it essential to have the only three navy yards to be retained situated within a few hundred miles of each other?

Imagine, now, an enemy's fleet approaching this prospective battle ground near Key West. If it should not be observed, without a navy yard on the Gulf, it could proceed unattacked into the Gulf, free to prey upon the commerce of all the great Mississippi Valley, and free, also, to attack every Gulf port from Tampa to Galveston. On the other hand, if the approach of an enemy's fleet should be discovered at or near Guantanamo, in the event the navy yard should be maintained at Pensacola, and fleets should use that as a home port, the notice of this approach could be quickly sent to Pensacola and our fleet at that point would have less distance to cover to get to the strategic point near Key West.

The site at Guantanamo was leased to the United States in treaty with Cuba—

To maintain the independence of the Island of Cuba and to protect the people thereof as well as for its own defense.

In conceding that it is proper to protect the 3,000,000 Cubans and a few hundred miles of Cuban coast, it seems to me, at the same time, we ought not to forget the 1,600 miles of the Gulf coast, the more than 10,000,000 people living in the States bordering upon it, and the immense commerce of the Mississippi Valley now finding outlet through these Gulf ports.

So therefore if it be conceded that it is proper to maintain a naval station at Guantanamo, it by no means follows that we ought to abandon the only navy yard in the Gulf of Mexico.

Coming, then, to the remaining criticism that the navy yard at Pensacola could probably be bombarded by an enemy's fleet in spite of the fortifications now at that place, it should be borne in mind that it is not contended that the fortifications can not be made effective. The Secretary himself could not take that position, because his argument is that the Gulf of Mexico is practically invulnerable to attack. But a commission has stated that the present site is too much exposed, and therefore this objection will now be considered.

As far back as 1833 Secretary Woodbury, as has already been shown, gave it as his opinion that the defenses at the entrance of the bay were excellent. This entrance can be fortified by Fort McRea on the north and by Fort Pickens on the south. Indeed, it is so fortified now. Fort Pickens is situated on Santa Rosa Island, which extends for miles to the south. In this day of modern fortifications enemies' fleets are rarely known to attack a protected harbor. In our War with Spain Santiago Harbor was protected by old out-of-date fortifications, much inferior to those now at Pensacola, and yet it will be remembered that the whole Atlantic Squadron blockading that harbor was careful to keep beyond possible range of the batteries. If the batteries at Pensacola are not now effective, certainly they can be made so as easily as they can be at Guantanamo. A comparison of the charts of the two ports will show that the Guantanamo yard would have no advantage in this respect over the Pensacola yard. Without fortifications ships can easily come within range from the sea of the yards at both places.

The Secretary says that a fleet of 35 battleships could be accommodated at Guantanamo, yet, as shown by quotations from the reports above, a much larger fleet could be accommodated at Pensacola.

In view of these undisputed facts, it is confidently claimed that neither of the supposed objections are sufficient to justify the recommendation of the Secretary that the Pensacola yard be abandoned and sold.

This much-cited report of 1910, on page 219, contains a statement of appropriations for yards and docks in convenient form. In 1905 Congress appropriated $1,000 for an elevator, and in 1910 appropriated $2,000 for the same purpose, and the report shows that none of the appropriations for 1905 or for 1910 have been used. Also an appropriation of $15,000 for remodeling a building and $5,000 to repair rifle range was made in 1909, but of this $20,000 only $63.42 has been used, according to this report.

While I do not question the Secretary's sincerity of belief as to the necessity for this navy yard, I do contend that he has no right to set up his judgment as to the use of appropriations against that of the Congress of the United States. It is perfectly proper for him to make arguments and suggestions and to appear before committees of Congress and submit his views, but after Congress has acted it is the duty of the Secretary of the Navy to apply the appropriations to the purposes specified.

According to his own report, he has failed to do this, and his purpose is quite evident. He has recommended that Congress close the yard. Congress has refused to follow his recommendation and made appropriations to continue the yard, and then he retaliates by refusing to make the improvements Congress thought necessary. From his own report he has apparently violated in spirit, if not in letter, the expressed wish of Congress.

And he has not done this under any misapprehension. In his report of 1909 he concedes that he has no right without legislative authority to close a navy yard. But the order as to which this resolution seeks information does, to all practical purposes, close this yard. Men are discharged and all work stopped; machinery is to be left idle; stores are to be packed and shipped away. There may be a watchman or two left to guard the property, but the distinction between this action and the closing of the yard is so fine as to make it a distinction without a difference.

If Congress desires to close this yard, it undoubtedly has the right to do it, and if it is not needed, it and all others not needed ought to be closed.

Heretofore this navy yard has been considered necessary. As recently as 1903 it was selected by the Secretary of the Navy as the point at which a graving dock on the Gulf of Mexico should be located. If it is to be maintained at all, it ought to be properly maintained. On the other hand, if it is not to be properly maintained, speaking for the people I am trying to help represent, I would infinitely prefer to see the yard abandoned and closed and the more than 2 miles of valuable water front be made available for some useful purpose. If the yard is to be abandoned in fact, let the name go with it.

But the action taken by the Secretary has not been authorized by the only body with power to act, and if Congress maintains its prerogative, such arbitrary action by the Secretary ought not to be tolerated or permitted to pass unchallenged.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution is not before the Senate. The unfinished business is before the Senate.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which will be read by title.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 100) as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate as promptly as possible what orders, if any, he has issued respecting the navy yard at Pensacola, Fla.; what work, incident to navy yards, has been done at said navy yard within the last two fiscal years; whether work can be done at said navy yard as economically as at other navy yards; and if not, why not; whether specific appropriations for elevator of March 3, 1905, amounting to $1,000, and for remodeling building of March 3, 1909, amounting to $15,000, have been expended as provided by said acts; and if not, why not; and that he further report whether it is his intention to abandon work at said navy yard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection myself to the resolution, but when it was before the Senate a few days ago there was objection at that time. I would suggest to the Senator from Florida that he give notice that he will bring the resolution up for the action of the Senate to-morrow immediately after the morning business.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, if there is any objection, I will do that; but I did not suppose there was any objection to the resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. There was an objection before. There are so few Senators present I believe it would be better if the Senator would give the notice so that Senators will be put on notice.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not understand that there was objection to the resolution. I have heard of no objection to it. I should like action now, because I will have another matter in hand to-morrow. I am engaged on the special committee of investigation and have to be out of the Senate. For that reason I wanted to get the matter disposed of to-day. I did not know there was any objection to the resolution. If the Senator knows of any objection to it, I will not press it; but I should like to have it disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like very well indeed to accommodate the Senator. I think Senators ought to be here. As they are not, I withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No objection is heard, and the resolution is before the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to.

LANDS IN MINNESOTA AND ARKANSAS.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3069) to amend section 1 of an act of Congress approved May 20, 1908, the same being chapter 181 of the acts of Congress for the year 1908.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 1 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," approved May 20, 1908, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That all lands in the States of Minnesota and Arkansas belonging to the United States, and all entered lands therein for which no final certificates have issued, are hereby made and declared to be subject to all the provisions of the laws of said States relating to the drainage of swamp or overflowed lands for agricultural purposes to the same extent and in the same manner in which lands of a like character held in private ownership are or may be subject to said laws: Provided, That the United States and all persons legally holding unpatented lands under entries made under the public-land laws of the United States are accorded all the rights, privileges, and benefits given by said laws to persons holding lands of a like character in private ownership."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend section 1 of an act entitled 'An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota,' approved May 20, 1908."

UNLAWFUL RESTRAINTS AND MONOPOLIES.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to enter a motion to discharge the Committee on Interstate Commerce from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2158) to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies. I suppose under the rule the motion will lie over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa enters the motion.

THE FREE LIST.

Mr. BRISTOW. I stated during the morning hour that I would offer amendments to the bill known as the free-list bill, which is now the unfinished business, I understand. I should like to give notice that I hope to have the amendments voted on to-morrow, so that we will not be voting on the last day upon amendments with no opportunity to explain them. I will ask for the disposition of the amendments to-morrow as rapidly as the debate closes on them.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 2 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, July 28, 1911, at 12 oclock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 27, 1911.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed be the name of the Lord our God, who lives and reigns in the hearts of men, inspiring to clearer visions, purer motives, broader sympathies, nobler life, and larger attainments. Keep us, we beseech Thee, as individuals and as a people, in the vanguard of the onward march toward the final triumph of good over evil, and glory and honor and praise be Thine forever. Amen.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order while the Chair counts. [After counting.] One hundred and nineteen Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and nineteen Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were reopened.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On July 21, 1911:

H. R. 12109. An act to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1911, and for other purposes.

On July 26, 1911:

H. R. 4412. An act to promote reciprocal trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, and for other purposes.

On July 27, 1911:

H. R. 12312. An act to amend paragraph 500 of the act approved August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes."

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 12812) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton, which was read a first and second time and, with the accompanying report (No. 65), ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the minority have until Saturday, July 29, 1911, to file their views.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will state that the gentleman from New York and myself have agreed on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the minority may have until Saturday next to file their views. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama yield for a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I notice the report which is presented, apparently, is quite a long one, and I would ask whether it is already in print?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I will state that I simply sent up to the desk the proof sheets of the report. I think it is in print. It can be obtained at the Ways and Means Committee room; that is, a few copies.

Mr. MANN. The purpose of asking the question was to see whether we would be likely to get the report to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, undoubtedly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman made no announcement as to when this bill would be called up.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will announce to the House that I expect to call up the bill for consideration under general debate immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow, and the report will be printed by that time. I think by this afternoon there will probably be copies of it ready.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT, PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs (S. Doc. No. 78):

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by section 86 of the act of Congress approved July 1, 1902, entitled "An act temporarily to provide for the administration of the affairs of civil government in the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes," I transmit herewith copies of the laws and resolutions enacted during the first session of the Second Philippine Legislature, and of certain laws enacted by the Philippine Commission.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 27, 1911.

PUBLICITY OF CAMPAIGN FUNDS.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the House for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, some days ago this House passed the bill (H. R. 2958) known as the publicity bill, which went to the Senate and came back to us some days since with various amendments. These amendments are very important, far-reaching, and more or less drastic. A good deal of discussion has occurred among individual Members of the House, and some upon the floor of the House, with reference to the provisions of the Senate amendments. Most of the discussions center around and have to do with Senate amendments 5 and 6. I take it that so far as Senate amendments 1, 2, 3, and 4 are concerned there is no objection to them.

My impression is there is but small objection to any of the amendments, but among those who are the most earnest advocates of the passage of a strict, full, comprehensive, drastic publicity measure, a bill which will accomplish the purposes intended and respond to the demand of the people, there is a well-defined opinion that the measure now pending should be perfected before it is enacted into law. After conference among the friends of the measure on both sides of the aisle, I am sure I am correct when I say it is generally conceded that the Senate amendments 5 and 6 ought to be amended. It is obvious that some of the language ought to be transposed and in some instances slightly enlarged; in no instance do I favor any change which will detract from the efficiency of the bill. Mr. Speaker, the purpose I have in taking the floor this morning is to ask that I may be permitted to file a paper here which presents to the House my views of the amendments which ought to be made either in the House or in conference. If this measure goes to conference I will likely be a member of the conference committee; hence, for the purpose of fully acquainting the House with views I entertain and of the particular amendments which I think should be made to perfect the bill before we act finally upon it, I have prepared and desire to submit, in a tentative way, amendments to Senate amendment No. 5 which I think should be placed in the bill, either in the House or in conference. It will be observed that Senate amendment No. 6, with some slight modifications, is transposed and made a part of Senate amendment No. 5, where it logically belongs.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proposed amendments to which I have referred, together with the entire section as it would read if thus perfected, may be printed in bill form for the convenience of the Members of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman if all that is incorporated in the paper which the gentleman holds in his hand?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to know whether there is any separate question to put to the House?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. No.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. That is not all.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I desire to have these proposed amendments printed in bill form so that Members of the House can obtain them in convenient form and that the section as it would be after amended as proposed be printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to have amendments proposed to Senate amendment No. 5, together with the section as proposed to be amended, printed in bill form. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the gentleman desires to have printed certain Senate amendments with certain amendments which the gentleman proposes as a tentative proposition. Why not have them printed in the RECORD and also in bill form?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Well, I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri modifies his request to include printing not only in bill form but also in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I quite understand——

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. I want to say there seems to be some slight misunderstanding——

Mr. CANNON (continuing). And I want to see if I do understand. As I understand, the Senate amendments have already been printed and the House has disagreed to the Senate amendments?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. No; the House has taken no action.

Mr. CANNON. The House has taken no action?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. It has not up to date.

Mr. CANNON. And, prior to taking action, the gentleman as a Member of the House and as a member of the committee desires unanimous consent to submit to the House and have them printed in the RECORD and also printed as a document his views as to what ought to be done?

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. That is substantially correct, Mr. Speaker; that they be printed in bill form.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

Amendments intended to be proposed by Mr. RUCKER of Missouri to Senate amendments 5 and 6 to the bill (H. R. 2958) to amend an act entitled "An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected," viz:

Amend Senate amendment 5, on page 4, line 19, by inserting after the words "primary election" the words "or nominating convention"; and on page 4, line 22, by inserting after the words "primary election" the words "or nominating convention"; and on page 4, line 25, by striking out the words "nomination or"; and on page 5, line 15, by inserting after the words "primary election" the words "or nominating convention"; and on page 5, line 16, by striking out the word "before" and inserting the word "by"; and on page 5, line 19, by inserting after the words "primary election" the words "or nominating convention"; and on page 6, line 14, by inserting after the word "election" where it first occurs the words "or nominating convention"; and on page 7, line 9, by striking out the period and inserting a colon; and on pages 7 and 8 by striking out all after line 9 on page 7 down to and including line 2 on page 8; and by inserting at and after the end of line 9, page 7, the following:

"Provided, That this section shall not be construed to require any candidate to include in such statements his necessary personal expenses, incurred for himself alone, for traveling and subsistence, for stationery and postage, and for telegraph and telephone service.

"No candidate for Senator of the United States or Representative in Congress shall expend or cause to be expended, in the aggregate, directly or indirectly, in procuring his nomination and election any sum in excess of the amount which he may lawfully expend under the laws of the State in which he resides; nor shall any such candidate promise any office or position to any person or to use his influence or to give his support to any person for any office or position for the purpose of procuring the support of such person, or of any person, in his candidacy; nor shall any such candidate for Senator of the United States, directly or indirectly, give, expend, or contribute any money or thing of value to assist in procuring the nomination or election of any member of the legislature of the State in which he resides, but any such candidate may, within the limitations and restrictions and subject to the requirements of this act, contribute to political committees having charge of campaign funds.

"Provided, however, That no candidate for Senator of the United States shall, in the aggregate, directly or indirectly, expend or promise any sum exceeding $10,000, and no candidate for Representative in Congress shall, in the aggregate, directly or indirectly, expend or promise any sum in excess of $5,000 in any campaign for his nomination and election.

"The statements herein required to be made and filed before the general election, or the election by the legislature at which such candidate seeks election, need not contain items of which publicity is given in a previous statement, but the statement required to be made and filed after said general election or election by the legislature shall, in addition to an itemized statement of all expenses not theretofore given publicity, contain a summary of all preceding statements.

"The statements required by any of the sections of this act shall give the date of receipt and expenditure of each item contained therein."

So that said section as amended will read as follows:

"SEC. 2. That section 8, as above amended, and sections 9 and 10 of said act be renumbered as sections 9, 10, and 11, and that a new section be inserted after section 7 of the said original act, to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. Every person who shall be a candidate for nomination at any primary election or nominating convention, or for election at any general election, as Representative in the Congress of the United States shall, not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day for holding such primary election or nominating convention, and not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day of the general election at which candidates for Representatives are to be elected, file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives at Washington, D. C., a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him, or by anyone for him with his knowledge, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who have furnished the same in whole or in part; and such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value disbursed or used by such candidate, or by his agents or representatives, so far as known or understood by such candidate to have been so disbursed or used, in any manner whatsoever, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such disbursements were made for the purpose of securing his nomination or election.

"Every person who shall be a candidate for nomination at any primary election or nominating convention, or for indorsement at any general election, or election by the legislature of any State, as Senator in the Congress of the United States, shall, not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day for holding such primary election or nominating convention, and not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day of the general election at which he is seeking indorsement, and not less 5 nor more than 10 days before the day upon which the first vote is to be taken in the two houses of the legislature before which he is a candidate for election as Senator, file with the Secretary of the Senate at Washington, D. C., a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him, or by anyone for him with his knowledge, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who have furnished the same in whole or in part; and such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value disbursed or used by such candidate, or by his agents or representatives, so far as known or understood by such candidate to have been so disbursed or used, in any manner whatsoever, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such disbursements were made for the purpose of securing his nomination or election.

"Every such candidate for nomination at any primary election or nominating convention, or for indorsement or election at any general election, or for election by the legislature of any State, shall, within 15 days after any such primary election, and within 15 days after any such general election, and within 15 days after the day upon which the legislature shall have elected a Senator, file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives or with the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him, or by anyone for him with his knowledge, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who have furnished the same in whole or in part; and such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value disbursed or used by such candidate, or by his agents or representatives, so far as known or understood by such candidate to have been disbursed or used, in any manner whatsoever, up to, on, or after the day of such primary election, general election, or election by the legislature, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such disbursements were made for the purpose of securing his nomination, indorsement, or election.

"Provided, That this section shall not be construed to require any candidate to include in such statement his necessary personal expenses, incurred for himself alone, for traveling and subsistence, for stationery and postage, and for telegraph and telephone service.

"No candidate for Senator of the United States or Representative in Congress shall expend or cause to be expended, in the aggregate, directly or indirectly, in procuring his nomination and election any sum in excess of the amount which he may lawfully expend under the laws of the State in which he resides; nor shall any such candidate promise any office or position to any person, or to use his influence or to give his support to any person, for any office or position for the purpose of procuring the support of such person or of any person in his candidacy; nor shall any such candidate for Senator of the United States, directly or indirectly, give, expend, or contribute any money or thing of value to assist in procuring the nomination or election of any member of the legislature of the State in which he resides, but any such candidate may, within the limitations and restrictions and subject to the requirements of this act, contribute to political committees having charge of campaign funds.

"Provided, however, That no candidate for Senator of the United States shall, in the aggregate, directly or indirectly, expend or promise any sum exceeding $10,000, and no candidate for Representative in Congress shall, in the aggregate, directly or indirectly, expend or promise any sum in excess of $5,000 in any campaign for his nomination and election.

"The statements herein required to be made and filed before the general election, or the election by the legislature at which such candidate seeks election, need not contain items of which publicity is given in a previous statement, but the statement required to be made and filed after said general election or election by the legislature shall, in addition to an itemized statement of all expenses not theretofore given publicity, contain a summary of all preceding statements.

"The statements required in any of the sections of this act shall give the date of receipt and expenditure of each item contained therein.

"Every such statement hereinbefore referred to shall be verified by the oath of the candidate, taken before an officer authorized to administer oaths under the law of the State in which he is a candidate, and shall be sworn to by the candidate in the district in which he is a candidate for Representative, or the State in which he is a candidate for Senator, in the Congress of the United States: Provided, That if at the time of such primary or general election or election by the State legislature said candidate shall be in attendance upon either House of Congress as a Member thereof he may at his election verify such statement before any officer authorized to administer oaths in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That the depositing of any such statement in a regular post office, directed to the Clerk of the House of Representatives or to the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, and duly stamped and registered within the time required herein, shall be deemed a sufficient filing of any such statement under any of the provisions of this act."

By Mr. CHILTON:

A bill (S. 3122) for the relief of Daniel Nihoof; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PERKINS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) for the appointment of a commission to be known as the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Commission; to the Committee on Industrial Expositions.

By Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (for Mr. MCLEAN):

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 44) to amend an act entitled "An act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of navigable rivers," approved March 1, 1911; to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

THE FREE LIST.

Mr. BAILEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4413) to place upon the free list agricultural implements, cotton bagging, cotton ties, leather, boots and shoes, fence wire, meats, cereals, flour, bread, timber, sewing machines, salt, and other articles, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CUMMINS (for Mr. CLAPP) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 122), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce is hereby authorized to employ an assistant clerk at a salary of $1,200 per annum.

ACCOMMODATIONS FOR WAR DEPARTMENT, ARMY OFFICERS, ETC.

Mr. WORKS. I submit a resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 123), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to inform the Senate what buildings, rooms, dwelling houses, and offices are rented, leased, or otherwise acquired in the city of San Francisco, Cal., for the use of the Army or War Department, the amount paid for each, for what purpose the same and each of them are used, and also to inform the Senate what provision is made by the Government or the War Department for residences, offices, and all other uses, for the officers of the Army and other persons employed in the Army and the War Department, in or on the Presidio or other Government-owned property in or near said city of San Francisco, and if homes and offices and other facilities for the use of such officers and employees on or in said Government-owned property are not provided, why the same have not been so provided.

Also to inform the Senate whether dwelling houses, rooms, offices, or other places are being rented or leased in any other city or cities in this country for the use of such officers or employees, and if so, what properties are so rented or leased, the price paid for each, and for what each is used.

Also to inform the Senate what is the total sum per annum now being paid by the Government for rented or leased property for the use of Army officers and employees of the Army and War Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the resolution go over in order that I may examine it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over on objection.

Mr. SMOOT subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to withdraw my objection to the consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS]. When I objected to its consideration I had a misapprehension as to the nature of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to inquire whether House joint resolution 14 for the admission of the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona into the Union as States will be subject to debate on August 7, the day fixed for a vote thereon?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to give notice that immediately following the routine morning business on that day I shall briefly address the Senate on that joint resolution.

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT TAFT.

Mr. PAGE. I have a copy of an address delivered by President Taft before the Marion (Ind.) Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, July 3, 1911. I move that the address be printed as a Senate document. (S. Doc. No. 79.)

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL MONETARY COMMISSION.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 854.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 854) to require the National Monetary Commission to make final report on or before December 4, 1911, and to repeal sections 17, 18, and 19 of the act entitled "An act to amend the national banking laws," approved May 30, 1908, the repeal to take effect December 5, 1911.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BURTON. Is that the Monetary Commission bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is.

Mr. BURTON. I want to be heard on that bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request is for unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BURTON. I ask that the bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

MESSENGERS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. BRISTOW. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate resolution No. 118, authorizing the employment of messengers by certain committees.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. GAMBLE. I do not have a copy of the original resolution before me, but I move, as an amendment, to strike out the words "Indian Affairs" where they appear in the resolution.

Mr. BRISTOW. That amendment is satisfactory to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest that the resolution be read.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I rose to ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection the resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution reported yesterday by Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Senate resolution 118.

Resolved, That each of the following-named committees is hereby authorized to employ a messenger at a salary of $1,200 per annum: Committees to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, Canadian Relations, Civil Service and Retrenchment, Coast Defenses, Conference of the Minority, Education and Labor, Expenditures in the Department of the Interior, Expenditures in the Navy Department, Expenditures in the Post Office Department, Expenditures in the Treasury Department, Expenditures in the War Department, Indian Affairs, Industrial Expositions, Interoceanic Canals, Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, Library, and Patents; that said salaries be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota moves to strike out the words "Indian Affairs," in lines 10 and 11 of the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I do not desire to incur the displeasure of any Member of this body, but there are some of us on this side who were elected last fall under a distinct pledge that we should be in favor of economy and retrenchment in the affairs of the Government. It was stated by a former distinguished Senator from Rhode Island during the last Congress that the expenses of the Government could be reduced, under business management, about $300,000,000 per annum, and it became a very live question in the campaign as to the extravagance which prevails in the various departments of the Government.

I understand that by this resolution a proposition is made very near the close of the session to appoint messengers for various committees, many of which have not met during the session, many of which, perhaps, will not meet during the next session.

There can be but one purpose in the resolution, and that purpose must be to provide places for men and not because the services of men are at all required.

I am opposed to this resolution. I am opposed to any resolution or bill that calls for the expenditure of money when such expenditure is not required by this body for the proper dispatch of its business. I am advised, sir——

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator from Indiana will yield, I will state that the resolution does not call for any additional expenditure of money. It does not appoint a single additional employee of the Senate. It reduces the number who are now employed and it reduces the expenditure.

It has been the practice heretofore to detail clerks from the office of the Sergeant at Arms to Senators to help them in their committee work. The resolution changes this system. When a Senator needs additional help in his committee he will apply to the Senate for that help instead of the Sergeant at Arms. All these details are to be abolished. There will be no details of officers of the Senate from the office of the Sergeant at Arms. The resolution simply provides that committees which have had employees heretofore on detail shall now receive them direct from the Senate. It is a matter of economy instead of expenditure, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. KERN. Do I understand the Senator from Kansas to say that the purpose of this resolution is not that messengers shall be furnished to these committees, but that messengers shall be furnished to render services to certain Senators who may be chairmen of those committees?

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, it is the same as a Senator's secretary or his clerk. These employees or clerks serve the committees of which Senators, of course, are chairmen.

Mr. KERN. Let us see. If it be true that the Committee on Canadian Relations, the Committee on Coast Defenses, or the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of the Interior have not met during this session, and probably will not meet during the next session——

Mr. BRISTOW. I am not advised as to that.

Mr. KERN. In other words, that those committees are merely useless appendages to this body, would it not be more businesslike, if the Senate desires to furnish the services of clerks or messengers to Senators, to say so by resolution, and not by this method of indirection? If it can be shown to me that the Committee on Canadian Relations needs a messenger from now on, or that the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of the Interior needs a messenger, then I shall be willing to vote for a resolution that will give to such committees the services of such messengers. I am not, however, willing by any sort of subterfuge like this to vote to certain Senators the services of clerks or messengers under the guise of having the appointment made for the service of a committee. I myself have the honor to serve on a committee known as the Committee on Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments. I do not know just what right one department of the Government has to dispose of the useless papers of another. I understand that in some of the executive departments they have a committee on employees. It might be well enough for that committee to look into the question as to the disposition of useless employees on the part of the Senate while the Senate is looking after the disposition of useless papers in those departments. I have referred to that as an illustration. That committee has not met. I understand it has a clerk, an assistant clerk, and a messenger. I do not know any services that have been performed. I know the committee has not met, and that many similar committees have never been called together, yet we are carrying on the pay rolls here the names of employees or attachés of these various committees that never meet—committees for which there is no use—the names of employees who render no service to the committees at all. It is simply a subterfuge, a false pretense.

We have a committee here on the Five Civilized Tribes. We might have a committee on the Lost Tribes of the House of Israel; we might have a committee on Prehistoric Man, or on the Relics of a Paleozoic Age, and all that sort of thing, and I doubt not that we should have it if it were necessary to furnish additional places for some hungry patriots.

I am opposed to the method which is now proposed as a substitute for a worse method in the past, of carrying on the pay roll of this body messengers of committees who perform no services. If their services are needed for some other purpose, then let that purpose be stated in a manly and an open way, and let the services be furnished, but let us not pay out to men here salaries for services which we know they do not perform—services for which there is no call and no need. I am opposed to this resolution or to any resolution which shall undertake to do by indirection that which the Senate will not undertake to do directly.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana is entirely mistaken about this being an attempt to do by indirection what it is not proposed to do by direction. The criticism which the Senator from Indiana makes might be made against the old system of details. This resolution proposes to abolish the details. It abolishes more employees than it reemploys; it reduces the number of employees of the Senate, the number of employees of committees, and reduces the expenditures of the Senate for that purpose. Why the Senator should object to this resolution I can not understand.

Mr. KERN. I ask the Senator the question if it is not true that in the case of a majority of the committees named in the resolution there has been no meeting of the committees during this session, and that there is no earthly need for a messenger or any other officer at this time to perform service for any such committee?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not agree with the Senator. I do not think that there are any useless or needless employees provided for in this resolution. If I thought there were, I would favor cutting them out.

Mr. KERN. If this is a reform of some evil that has previously existed, then that evil must indeed have been of glaring proportions.

Mr. BRISTOW. If the Senator from Indiana will pardon me, I will suggest that if this economical spirit had taken possession of him a few days ago, and he had voted against continuing an employee on the Senate rolls who does no work, and does not pretend to do any work, it would come much more fittingly than to object to Senators having help here when they need it in the discharge of their duties and when they ask for it.

Mr. KERN. I have no objection in the world to Senators having all the help they need. The Senator misunderstood or misapprehended what I said. I do have objection, however, to men being carried on the pay roll here as messengers to committees when those committees do not meet and when those messengers do not perform any service at all for which they are paid.

As a matter of sentiment, I voted the other day for the old negro referred to; perhaps I should not have done so. If I did wrong, I am sorry for it, but I probably would do the same thing again. But here, Mr. President, on yesterday this resolution was reported by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS]; the Senator from Montana [Mr. DIXON] made objection, and on the objection of the Senator from Montana the resolution went over. Later in the day I observe by the RECORD that the Senator from Montana offered this resolution:

> That the Committee on Conservation of National Resources be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ an assistant clerk at a salary of $1,200 per annum.
> And so forth.

Whereupon the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS], as chairman of the committee, reported favorably on that resolution, and it was agreed to.

Then on yesterday there were certain extra allowances made here for gentlemen who had agreed to accept, and had accepted, positions at certain fixed salaries. Then came this resolution, and the Senate seems to be threatened now with a sort of inundation of these resolutions as the closing days of the session approach. I am opposed to them.

I want to repeat that I am not opposed to any Senator and every Senator having all the assistance he needs in the discharge of his business, but I want him to get it in a direct, open way. I do not want to have it done under the cover of a messengership to the Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes, for instance, or the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, or the Committee on Arid Lands, or the Committee on Disposition of Useless Papers. I do not want him to have it done by indirection, and that is why I am opposed to this and to all similar resolutions.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator that his remarks would mislead the Senate into the belief that this resolution is providing for a number of additional employees. It does not do so. As I stated before, it reduces the number of employees and reduces the amount to be expended. It is not giving to a Senator or to a committee any clerical force that the Committee on Contingent Expenses does not think is needed.

Mr. KERN. It is a matter of indifference to me whether it is a reduction or not. The only question before my mind is, Are these committees in need of the services of these men? I feel quite sure that they are not, because the committees have not met.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I will say that, in the opinion of the Committee on Contingent Expenses, the committees do need this help and this service. If that committee did not believe that these committees needed the service, it would not have reported this resolution favorably.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Kansas states that this resolution is in the nature of a retrenchment resolution; that it proposes to accomplish that retrenchment by giving to the several committees certain employees, and that that will reduce the pay roll that already exists. I want to ask the Senator from Kansas at what place in this resolution there is any provision for discharging any of the present employees.

Mr. BRISTOW. Well, for the information of the Senator, I will say that the details from the Sergeant at Arms's office are all to be discontinued on August 1.

Mr. REED. By this resolution?

Mr. BRISTOW. No; not by this resolution, but by a resolution that was passed in a conference of the Republican Senators some weeks ago—six weeks ago.

Mr. REED. Then, I understand that the Senate is to have this sort of guaranty: You propose to have the Senate now create some 15 or 16 new positions, to do that now by action of the Senate, which is to base its action upon the statement that the Republican Members have had a secret meeting and agreed that at some time in some way they will cut off certain other employees.

Mr. President, I will go just as far as the Senator from Kansas, or any other Senator, in cutting off unnecessary men from the pay roll, but, so far as I am concerned, I do not intend to vote to make a dozen new jobs on the theory that a secret Republican caucus has been held which proposes to cut off certain other jobs by way of compensation.

Is the Senator from Kansas simply waiting to answer my interrogatory, or does he desire to proceed? If he does, I will, of course, yield the floor now, and say what I want to say later on.

Mr. BRISTOW. The Senator can proceed if he cares to do so. I was simply waiting until he was through.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have not had the time to go through this pay roll as I should like to do. I stated on yesterday, and I say now, that I do not believe in what we may term "picayunish economy," in making a great fuss and great disturbance about one position. I did not believe when I voted with the majority of this body to retain in the service a decrepit old man who had spent many, many years here that I was doing any wrong to the country or to my conscience; but I am surprised to find any man who denounced that as wrong standing here and undertaking to make it a precedent for a wholesale raid on the Treasury, or using it as a text from which to reprimand any Senator who dares to protest against the creation of new positions.

The fact is this—and we might just as well front it as men ought to front every question—there are a number of committees of the Senate that do no work; they are paper committees. If they meet at all, it is once or twice during a session. They have absolutely no need for a clerk or for a messenger. There are other committees that are busy and that undoubtedly need the services of a clerk. I have had the pleasure of visiting Senators in the committee rooms, where they hibernate, and of seeing a colored gentleman sitting outside the door; a colored gentleman who is there in the capacity of a guard or body servant, or something of that kind, and yet these Senators are chairmen of committees that exist only in theory and not in fact.

Then we have a large number of committees organized but doing no work, yet such a committee has a clerk, who does no work for it, but draws his pay with great regularity. This committee clerk is appointed by the chairman of the committee, and uses the clerk for his own office business and not for committee business. So the result is that a large number of Senators have the usual allowance of a clerk and a stenographer, and then of an additional stenographer, and I am not sure but some of them are fortunate enough to have three or four stenographers. If that were necessary because of their committee work, it would be a different proposition, but when it is not necessary it amounts to a discrimination between the Senators of this body and I believe in a waste of the public moneys, and I protest against it and shall continue to protest against it. If it is desired to give each Senator in this body an additional stenographer because in his capacity as a public servant he needs that additional help, I would not oppose that, for it would be distributed equitably and each Senator would get the benefit and each State would obtain the benefit. But when you create "paper committees," and when it is proposed to give to the chairman of such a "paper committee" a special privilege over other Senators, and to do it by this subterfuge, this indirect method, and when it is now proposed to add to that list and to do so because such is the will of a recent caucus held by the Members who occupy only one side of this Chamber, I protest against it as not only wrong, but as indecent.

To ask the Senate as a body to act upon something that has been determined upon in a Republican caucus is wrong and should not receive the sanction of your votes. I take it that if a Republican caucus or conference had been held upon the House wool bill that was pending here yesterday that caucus, by a majority vote, would have speedily killed the bill, but the Senate of the United States did not take that action, because there were some Republicans on the other side who were acting on their own judgment.

Mr. President, I think it is time to stop these raids. If we are going to right these matters, let us do it like men, by the appointment of a committee to go through the whole pay roll. I will make the prediction that, if you appoint a committee of that kind and it does its work effectively, you will save many tens of thousands of dollars to the people of the United States; and I would like to see it done, and done now.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. As I understand the report of the committee, that is exactly what has been done. The Senator is anxious for retrenchment; the Senator is fearful that extravagance is increasing. The report of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate is that this resolution will materially reduce the expenditures of the Senate. The Senator says we have no means of knowing whether or not it will effect such a reduction. I have. I have already had served upon me notice that on the 1st day of August one man, at least, will be taken from the committee of which I have the honor of being the chairman.

Mr. REED. May I ask the Senator how many men that committee now has?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It has no more than it needs.

Mr. REED. That is not answering. How many men has it?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It has four.

Mr. REED. Four?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes, sir; and it is a committee that meets every week of every session, and is a committee that is always at work.

I resent the idea that Members of this body have more help than they need to properly transact the public business. I do not believe that to be true. The Senator assumes in his argument that the chairmen of the committees which he calls paper committees have the clerks of those committees to do their individual work. They have no other clerks. Every Member of this body is provided with a secretary. A man who is chairman of a committee has no secretary save the clerk of that committee. I think the Senator is laboring under a misapprehension. I think this resolution not only reduces the pay roll of the Senate to a very considerable degree but reduces as well the number of employees. If I am incorrect in that, I should like to be informed by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. KERN. I desire to know what employee of the Senate has been discharged or will be discharged by reason of the adoption of this resolution?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am unable to state.

Mr. KERN. In what respect——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am not on the Committee on Contingent Expenses; but I am able to state that one employee of the Senate, who is detailed from the Sergeant at Arms' office, has been recalled from detail to a committee of which I have knowledge.

Mr. KERN. Will the Senator, while he is on that subject, tell me what service to a committee which does not meet is rendered by a messenger to that committee?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, I do not know. I suppose he may be employed to run errands, or I suppose he may be employed about the committee room.

Mr. KERN. By whom? By the chairman?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Naturally, by the chairman, if by anybody.

Mr. KERN. Very well. Then, if he renders personal service—that is to say, if he serves the chairman personally—would it not be more manly, more open, to have him detailed?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, he is not detailed for the personal service of the chairman in the sense the Senator indicates.

Mr. KERN. What other service is there if the committee does not meet? There is no other.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is service about the rooms when committees do not meet. There is service in the Committee on the Judiciary on days when the Committee on the Judiciary is not in session, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. KERN. Certainly; but the Committee on the Judiciary meets frequently. However, there is a number of committees named in this resolution that do not meet at all. If the Senator will inform me why the Senate should appoint and pay a messenger for such a committee——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator is getting rather personal. I will ask the Senator what employees are charged to the Senator from Indiana on the roll of the Senate?

Mr. KERN. There are no employees charged to me except a private secretary and a stenographer, and they are charged as such; not otherwise.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What difference does it make——

Mr. KERN. It makes all the difference in the world.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have no private secretary. What difference does it make whether the man who acts as my private secretary is classed as the clerk of a committee or the private secretary of a Senator?

Mr. KERN. It is the difference between direction and indirection.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not at all, because the private secretary of the Senator from Wyoming acts as the clerk of that committee and is the clerk of the committee, and the Senator from Wyoming proposes to use the clerk as his private secretary, as the rules of the Senate allow.

Mr. KERN. But what does the Senator from Wyoming say as to the messenger or clerk of a committee which does not meet at all and which possesses no function here?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It takes the place of the stenographer and the private secretary which the Senator has.

Mr. KERN. Why not call it that, then?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. If the Senator chooses, I have no objection to that. What I am speaking of is the complaint the Senator makes that here is an effort to increase the expense of this body.

Mr. KERN. I think it is an effort to increase the expenses of the body in this respect——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Certainly the Senator must have confidence in the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. KERN. I think the facts as to the service rendered or to be rendered by an employee should be stated.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. They have not acted along the line which I desired, but I have confidence that their desire is to carry on the business of the Senate in a manner as economically as it can be carried on without detriment to the public business, and I believe the pending resolution is in line with that idea.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], and also to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], that the complaint they are making against detailing men to committees of the Senate must apply to Democratic as well as Republican committees. There are details to minority committees assigned by the Democratic caucus.

Mr. KERN. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. SMOOT. The Republicans are not objecting as to how the Democratic caucus assigns their detailed employees. I have a list here of the men who are detailed by the minority side of the Chamber and of the committees to which they are assigned.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Wait until I conclude this statement. The Republican caucus decided it was wrong to allow employees to be longer detailed to Senators or majority committees, but wanted direct action by the Senate. The purpose of the resolution is to give every majority committee what help the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate thought proper or were entitled to. The Republican caucus has no right to say that the 14 or 15 men who are detailed by the Democratic caucus to the Democratic or minority committees should be abolished. The Republican caucus has not even tried to say that principle, as far as the Democratic caucus is concerned, should be avoided in the future. But the caucus decided that as far as the majority committees of the Senate are concerned it desires an action by the Senate in order that all may know just the number of employees each committee has and the amount paid by them.

Mr. President, I have a list here of all the details. There are 34 men who have been detailed to majority committees in the past. On the 1st day of August every one of those 34 men will cease to be employed as details to Senators. I have not counted the number of messengers provided for in this resolution, but I think there are about 11 or 12 of them. Some of the detailed employees no doubt will remain with the committees if this resolution passes, and instead of the 34 men who have been detailed and paid for in the past the number will be reduced to 16 or 17. If that can be designated a raid on the United States Treasury I think it is a kind which ought to be encouraged.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. KERN. Do I understand the Senator from Utah to say that by this arrangement there are 24 men to be discharged from the service of the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. They will have to be discharged from the service of the Senate or else some Senator must get a position elsewhere for them.

Mr. KERN. Will the Senator inform me how the pay roll of the Senate is to be reduced by the adoption of this resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. The money that has been appropriated for these men will not be paid. It will go back into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. KERN. What men?

Mr. SMOOT. The men who have been detailed in the past.

Mr. KERN. Are they to be discharged from the service of the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. They are to be discharged from the service if they are not taken care of in the way the resolution provides for or other places found for them.

Mr. KERN. What does the Senator mean by the phrase "if not taken care of"?

Mr. SMOOT. If they are not employed by the Senate. If the Senator wants to know the names, I have them here and can read them for his information.

Mr. KERN. I will ask the Senator if there is not a pamphlet printed for the benefit of Republican Senators—printed at the Government Printing Office and circulated exclusively among Republican Senators—giving a list of all of the employees of the Senate, the assignments, and the proposed scheme for the redistribution of patronage, and whether he does not hold that pamphlet in his hand?

Mr. SMOOT. That is absolutely true. Not only does it include the names of the Republican employees of the Senate, but it includes the names of the Democratic employees of the Senate detailed by the Democratic caucus of the Senate, and to which I have no objections.

Mr. KERN. Why not have that printed for the benefit of the Democratic as well as the Republican Senators?

Mr. SMOOT. The only purpose was to show each Senator what details he has had in the past, and that from August 1 of this year, as far as the Republican caucus details are concerned, there will be no more.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the enthusiasm of the Senators who oppose the adoption of the report of the committee is based largely on a misapprehension of the facts and a through misunderstanding of the purpose. It is not designed for the enlargement of the clerical force of Senators and committees, but it has for its purpose, and it has for its effect, the reduction not only of the number but of the salaries of many of them. It is distinctly in the interest of economy, an exhibition of which coming from the Republican side, I commend them for it.

It is an attempt to systematize and equalize the clerical force of Senators. Those older in commission, those belonging to the dominant side of the Chamber, secured for themselves and their committees a service which seemed disproportioned to their work, and it is a desire to equalize not only the number but the expense, which prompted the action reported to the Senate by this committee.

Many of the duties I might denominate as service to the chairman, because, as a matter of fact, in 7 cases out of 10 the clerical force assigned to the committee is for the personal service of the chairman, including such services as are required by the chairman in the discharge of the duties of the position, and such as may be incident to the discharge of his duties as a Senator. There are on the Republican side enough committees to furnish a chairmanship for every Member. There are, in addition to that, enough committees to furnish 10 of the Democrats oldest in commission with a chairmanship, which position carries with it three clerks. There is an additional number of 10, carrying with the position two clerks, recently assigned to the minority by the generosity of the Republican majority. They found that their numbers had been diminished sufficiently to justify them in dispensing with 10 committees; but instead of doing that they generously accorded them to 10 Democrats, with the understanding that they were to be satisfied with an increase of $240 for each clerk, with the privilege, perhaps, hereafter of being equalized if the necessity or justice of the case required.

The Republican caucus took up, as it properly should, and did not interfere with the Democratic side, as it properly could, the matter of readjusting the service to the several committees. The Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate thought that it was proper to begin a system that would equalize the clerical force of the Senate, so they started out by allowing, as they had no right to disallow, the private secretaries to the Senators and the clerks of the committees fixed by law, named by law, whose salaries are fixed by law, and are not subject to be altered by them. They dealt with the question of assignments from the Sergeant at Arms' office by preferring to call them assistant clerks. But as the item of appropriation contained in the appropriation bill designated them as messengers, there was no way to pay them as assistant clerks, and so we preserve in our official action the term "messenger."

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. KERN. Why not designate them, then, in the bill as assistant clerks?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. This is not a bill. It is a Senate resolution. It does not have the force and effect of law except as it regulates our own force. It does not contemplate the concurrence of the other House and can not have the effect of changing an appropriation made by law. If the Senator from Indiana will inform himself, he will have no difficulty in reaching the result that this is a commendable movement, made in the interest of economy and equality in the clerical force of many Senators occupying seats on this floor. It is distinctly in the interest of economy. We have reduced the number of assignments to the committees, something like a dozen, I think, and we have reduced the salaries of those who formerly drew $1,440 in many cases to $1,200.

Mr. KERN. By the pending resolution?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. KERN. Oh, no.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. There are several of them. There is, for instance, the Committee on Public Lands, where a certain sort of an expert on land laws is required in the dealings with the Land Office, relieving the chairman of a considerable amount of work of a technical character. We thought that was proper. The same thing is true of the Committee on Indian Affairs. The matter has not come in here at haphazard or without consideration. The whole committee considered it and considered it in a spirit of fairness. It is fair; it is right. We do not propose to make a raid anywhere.

So far as the action of the Republican caucus is concerned, I deem it a proposition in the interest of economy and right; and these agreements of the Senate, whether made by Republicans or by Democrats, are always carried out in good faith, as I have not the slightest doubt that this will be. The committee has proceeded with that understanding, just as every Senate has proceeded with that understanding for the last hundred years, and I have no doubt will proceed for the next hundred years. That is evidence enough it is going to be done; we accept it as an accomplished fact; and I entertain not the slightest doubt but that it will be carried out.

The appropriation act provides for 57 messengers without assigning them to any particular service. Custom has invested the Sergeant at Arms with the authority to assign those messengers to such service in the Senate as responsible agencies in the Senate seemed to make necessary. Sometimes he has not done it with wisdom and discretion. Sometimes he has allowed himself to be overpersuaded. Sometimes he has assigned them where work for the time being required it, but by reason of the flow of time and changes in the business of the Senate the committees have become unimportant. But such things are inevitable. What it is now sought to do is to equalize and reduce the clerical force to somewhere within the limit required for efficient service by the average Senator here. That is to say, it is measured somewhat by the length of the service here, the character of work that comes before his committee, and the character of the work that comes to him by reason of his membership on other committees.

These employees are not used exclusively by the individual Senator. It has come to be understood that these clerks are never selected by the committee, but they are selected by the chairman, and they are considered to be his personal force. After my distinguished friend, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN], has served a few years, he will be assigned to one of these committees, or, as I hope, when the next Congress assembles he will find himself on the majority side of the Chamber and will be entitled to the chairmanship of a first-class committee, and he will get the benefit of these extravagant allowances for clerkships.

The whole matter has been conducted with a high sense of fairness and liberality, and I do not think anybody on this side of the Chamber who thoroughly understands the situation can justly criticize anything that has been proposed. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and myself are the Democratic members of the Committee on Contingent Expenses. We went through the matter thoroughly and we agreed cordially with this report. We believe it ought to be adopted.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think that whether the committee went through this matter with "deliberation and liberality," as stated by the Senator from Arkansas, or not, I can at least agree with that part of his statement. I concede that the committee were inspired by the spirit of "liberality" to themselves. It is now plain that the Senator from Indiana was exactly right when he said that these employees are not working for the committee, but are in the service of the chairman of the committee, just as the secretary of any Senator is in his service. This is made perfectly plain by the statement of the Senator from Arkansas, that if they are so fortunate as to carry the next election the Democrats will have the pleasure the Republicans now enjoy of cutting up these privileges among themselves. That is not an argument which appeals to me, either as an official or individual. The fact that a Republican chairman to-day has four or five employees, or any other number in excess——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I correct the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. REED. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. In the case of the Committee on Finance, the Committee on Appropriations, and probably one or two more of the great committees of the Senate, the clerical force, including this alleged messenger, is limited to three.

Mr. REED. I still say that the fact that some Republican chairman of a committee which either meets or does not meet has four or five personal employees does not seem any the less obnoxious to me because some Democratic Senator may have them next year, nor would the possession of them by a Democratic Senator next year in any manner convince me that that was fair or proper treatment of the public or of the minority side.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. KERN. I will ask the Senator if he is aware that yesterday, very near the close of the session, a resolution was passed here authorizing the Committee on Finance to employ an additional clerk at an annual salary of $1,600 and an additional clerk at an annual salary of $1,440, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, and whether he knows why those additional clerks were provided for, so near the close of the session, at a time when the Finance Committee will possibly have no further meetings?

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. BRISTOW. I desire to state that those two clerks were allowed in lieu of four, and that there was a saving of just $3,040 in the expenditures of the Finance Committee by that resolution.

Mr. KERN. Will the Senator give me the names?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. REED. Certainly. I always yield.

Mr. KERN. I have asked the Senator repeatedly to give me the names of the positions or of any men who have been discharged from the service of the Senate.

Mr. BRISTOW. I do not have in mind the names of the men or the positions, but I make this statement as a fact, and I am not used to having a statement of fact which I make upon the floor of the Senate questioned.

Mr. KERN. I have no desire to do that, but this is a matter which has been shrouded in mystery so long as to employees of the Senate it should be cleared up some time. We only know that certain things have been done, but how we do not know. It is not a personal matter; I am not questioning the word of the Senator.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is unfortunate that the Senate has not had the wisdom of the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Missouri during past years to help it transact its business and to enable it to handle the business of the public as it should be handled. But, of course, since it did not during the years gone by, it is very fortunate to have it now, and we are trying to accommodate ourselves the best we can to their suggestions by reducing the number of employees and reducing salaries.

Mr. REED. If, then, the presence of the Senator from Indiana and the presence of the Senator from Missouri has had the result of introducing this economy which the Senator from Kansas boasts of, I take it the country will conclude we have been equally as useful as the Senator from Kansas.

I desire to say now to the Senator from Kansas that I imagine this poor old country of ours, that ran before Kansas was a State and ran before the Senator from Kansas rose like a sun of intelligence above the horizon of the intellectual light that had enveloped us, will still struggle on when the clouds and snadows gather over the Nation as it stands by his tomb weeping rivers of tears.

I do not propose, as far as I am concerned, to submit to any lectures because I want to know what is becoming of the public money. I do not intend that that Senator who has charged the highest members of his own party in many instances with having betrayed the public, and who made his disclosures with startling rapidity after he began to warm a chair in this Chamber, shall characterize me or the Senator from Indiana as mere upstarts because we venture to ask questions as to what is being done with the people's money.

I say that it is a strange thing in a public body that at the expense of the public a list of the employees of the Senate should be printed to be circulated, not among the Senators but among the members of one party; and I say that it is a strange way to reduce public expenses to bring in a resolution creating 16 new places to be filled and not at the same time abolishing the old places. When the resolution is thus introduced it is a remarkable philosophy which asks us to be content with the statement, "Well, we Republicans had a secret caucus and have agreed to cut out certain places, but we insist the resolution shall not so declare."

And when I say that I do not impugn the honor of Senators. I do not believe there is a Senator here, and I do not believe there is a representative of the committee here, who would deliberately misstate anything upon the floor of this body; but I do say that this is the public business, and if you are going to create 16 new positions by a resolution to take the place of 30 positions that are to be abolished, the thing to do is to do both at the same time and in the same bill. You should abolish the old positions when you create the new.

We seem to be in an extremely courteous mood here this morning. I ventured to ask the Senator from Wyoming how many employees his committee had, and he replied with that suavity of manner and that politeness of demeanor which always distinguish the born gentleman that it had as many as it needed and no more than it needed. Now, Mr. President, I intend to know how many men these committees have employed, and if I can not ascertain it by a question upon this floor, I will try in my poor, weak, inexperienced way to learn it from some other source.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. REED. Oh, certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator surely must be aware of the fact that I answered the question as to the number of employees of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. REED. Yes; and the RECORD will show that you answered it when I asked it the second time in a very pointed way.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator from Wyoming, after having answered the question fairly and squarely upon the record, and with no desire to evade, does not consider the fact that he declined to yield to further examination upon the same point as evidence that he has transgressed the rules of the Senate as to courteous treatment.

Mr. REED. Ah, Mr. President, it was the first question that I asked that was avoided. It was the second question that was answered.

Now, Mr. President, I have an amendment which I propose to offer to the resolution. It reads as follows:

Add at the end of the resolution as printed:

"The Sergeant at Arms shall not hereafter detail any person to serve said committees without express authority of the Senate."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri proposes an amendment to the resolution, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the resolution the following words:

The Sergeant at Arms shall not hereafter detail any person to serve said committees without express authority of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I commenced the remarks I made this morning by stating that I disliked to introduce any subject here by which I might possibly incur the displeasure of any Member of the Senate. I do not believe that any man who knows me well will believe that I intended a discourtesy to any Senator or to any committee, either, in anything I proposed or in anything I said.

It was suggested by my distinguished friend the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], for whom I have very profound personal regard, that I should inform myself better as to the workings of the administration of the Senate.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I should have said, if I did not say it, as to the matter that was involved in this particular inquiry——

Mr. KERN. Certainly; I understood the Senator.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. As members of the committee did.

Mr. KERN. I did not understand the Senator to mean any discourtesy at all.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I did not.

Mr. KERN. I was about to agree with the Senator from Arkansas by saying that from the moment I came here to the present time I have regretted constantly that I have been unable to inform myself as to the affairs of the Senate and as to the employees of the Senate, the method of their employment, and the tenure of their positions. The criticism, if it be a criticism, that the Senator offered to me as to my lack of knowledge I think is equally applicable to all the other new Senators in this body.

When I came here, Mr. President, I found a large number of committees the names of which embraced almost every conceivable subject beneath the sun. I inquired in my innocent way as to the purpose, for instance, of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, as to the purpose of the Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes. I even inquired of my old friend the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], who is chairman of that committee, the real purpose of the Committee on Woman Suffrage. I observed here in print the names of a score of such committees, and upon inquiry as to the purpose of the organization of those committees and the purpose of their continuance, I was informed by old Senators who had experience that they served no purpose in the world.

There has been an air of mystery pervading this whole matter of patronage since I came here. As was stated awhile ago, I saw by accident a secret circular printed at the Government Printing Office, circulated exclusively amongst Republican Senators, giving a list of the names of officers and employees of the Senate, giving the classification, giving the details, and giving the scheme for the proposed new distribution of the Senate patronage. After looking over that secret circular, which by accident fell into my hands, I made up my mind that there was a spoils system prevailing in this body which would not do credit to the ordinary city council or to the ordinary State legislatures throughout the country.

I observe, sir, that by this scheme, of which, I presume, this is a part, all the salaries of the Senate amount to $415,902. If I am not correct, some Senator who is in possession of that printed circular may correct me. I observe that the salaries of the Sergeant at Arms and the Secretary of the Senate amount to $13,840; that the Senate roll in the Secretary's office amounts to $37,150; that the Senate roll, whatever that is, in the Sergeant at Arms' office amounts to $13,534; that the long-service roll in the Secretary's office, whatever that is, amounts to $8,960; that the long-service roll in the Sergeant at Arms' office amounts to $14,888; that the pension roll in the Sergeant at Arms' office amounts to $2,880. Then follow what are called exemptions, by which I take it that the following items now are exempted from the spoils distribution that is provided for in this scheme. Exemptions: Secretary's office, $6,100; Sergeant at Arms' office, laborers, and so forth, $43,080; messengers detailed to the minority, $14,400; details to Republican Senators, $38,335. As the membership here is about as 50 to 41, I thought, when I read that, that in the matter of detail there was something of disproportion. Recommended by Democratic Senators, $3,600; making a total of exemptions of $105,515. Patronage, Secretary's office, $38,000; Sergeant at Arms' office, $180,000; making a total of $219,135. This $219,135 was divided by the civil-service reformers, who lead on the other side, into 50 parts, I think, or 51. That made $4,300 to every Senator.

The proposition is to so divide amongst the Republican Senators this $219,135 worth of spoils that each of such Senators shall receive $4,300 worth of patronage for distribution amongst his faithful followers. So the employees who were not charged to any Senator—that is to say, men who were appointed here by Senator Voorhees or who were recommended by Senator Voorhees 30 years ago, men who were recommended by Senator Fairbanks during his term of service, men who were recommended by my distinguished predecessor, Senator Beveridge, during his term—that all those men were to be discharged, not because they did not render good service but because they had, under this spoils system, no Senator behind them. In this distribution or in this scheme there was a statement——

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President——

Mr. KERN. I do not desire to be interrupted just now.

In this scheme, whether as it now exists or the scheme proposed in order to make things come out even, it became necessary to divide an employee into two or perhaps three parts—a kind of anatomical proposition—so that half a man would be charged to one Republican Senator and the other half—which half was not stated—would be charged to some other Republican Senator. This is the scheme of which I presume this resolution is a part; a scheme I say that is the spoils system run mad. This Senate some years ago aided in the enactment of a civil-service law under which other departments of the Government were to operate. Under that civil-service law merit and efficiency are supposed to be the test; but this Senate, having aided in the passage of that civil-service law for the guidance of other departments of the Government, is now proceeding under the scheme to which I have just alluded, to fall back into the old spoils system, and, as I have already designated it, the spoils system run mad.

I have in mind, sir, a man who is one of the most capable of the Capitol police force. He has been here 34 years. The Sergeant at Arms tells me he is one of the very best men on the pay roll. He is marked for decapitation; he has no other means of support; he is to go forth, not because he has not been faithful and efficient and given the greater number of the years of his life to the service of the Senate, but he is to go forth under the edict of a Republican caucus, which is carrying out, as I suggest, a spoils system which, in my judgment, is not creditable either to its authors or administrators.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. KERN. I do.

Mr. DIXON. I ask the Senator to yield only for a question. In connection with the question I wish to ask, I will first inquire, Has the Senator from Indiana considered the fact that the Democratic House of Representatives, when they organized a few weeks ago, discharged wholesale over 600 old employees over there? I noticed by one of the Washington papers the other day that not a single Republican employee of that House is left at this time.

Mr. KERN. I will answer the Senator.

Mr. DIXON. Is not this, as a matter of real fact, the policy pursued in every legislative body in this country, that the majority party controls the appointment of the ordinary employees? The Democratic House of Representatives discharged the old employees wholesale. I know that doorkeepers over there, who served that House when I was a Member of it years ago, and who had been there for many years, were discharged wholesale as soon as the Democratic majority assumed control. Suppose the Senate, after the next general election, should become Democratic. Would not the Senator from Indiana think it a matter of ordinary administration of affairs that the Democratic Senators should assume the apportionment of the employees of the Senate, except the specialized men, who have been here for years on certain work and who could not be dispensed with?

Mr. KERN. Is the Senator through?

Mr. DIXON. I should like the Senator from Indiana, in this connection, to discuss the recent action of the other House.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I should think very much less of myself than I do if I felt that I were actuated by partisan motives in making the suggestions I have made here this morning. If the House of Representatives has done wrong in the matter, if the spoils system prevails there, it would no more have my indorsement than would the spoils system here. I do not indorse wrong in my own party any more readily than I indorse wrong in the other party.

But let us see if there is a difference; and I am not going to apologize for my party, which is in control at the other end of the Capitol. In this body there are certain employees of the Sergeant at Arms. He gives bond; he is a responsible officer; he draws almost as much salary as does a Senator; his is a continuing office so long as the Republican Party remains in power. The Secretary of the Senate is a responsible officer; he gives bond——

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President——

Mr. KERN. I will answer the Senator's question fully before I am through.

The Secretary of the Senate draws a salary almost equal to that of a Senator; he is responsible for the large number of employees upon his pay roll. What I complain of in this scheme is that the majority here do not permit the Sergeant at Arms to name his assistants, to name the men for whom he is responsible under the law; it does not permit the Secretary of the Senate to name his men, for whom he is responsible and for whose acts he is chargeable by law, but all those appointees are put in a bushel basket of patronage, to be distributed at the will and whim of the majority Members here. That is what I complain of, and that is where the difference is, be it much or little.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield further?

Mr. KERN. Yes, sir.

Mr. DIXON. Would the Senator from Indiana apply the civil-service rule to the administration of legislative bodies in the matter of their employees? Suppose the Senate should become Democratic after next election; by that rule would the Senator from Indiana retain the Republican officials in a Democratic body? Would he retain the present Sergeant at Arms, a Republican official, in a Democratic body, which is charged with the administration of the rule of the majority political party in that legislative body? Would the Senator retain the present Secretary of the Senate and the present Sergeant at Arms of the Senate should the Democrats assume control?

Mr. KERN. In the case stated by the Senator, I think the executive officers of the Senate should be, as they always have been, of the same political faith as the majority of the Senate; but when the law provides that the Sergeant at Arms and the Secretary of the Senate, the executive officers of the Senate, shall name and provide employees for whom they are responsible, I think, then, that the civil-service regulations which apply to other departments ought to apply to the Senate, and that those officers should be permitted to name their own men.

Mr. DIXON. Just the same as the Democratic House, when it came into power a few weeks ago, discharged employees of the old Republican House and appointed de novo 500 employees over there.

Mr. KERN. I have already stated to the Senator that I had no thought of injecting politics into this discussion. It is a matter of no consequence, so far as my argument is concerned, what the Democratic House of Representatives has done or may not do. If it has done wrong, if it has gone counter to that which I advocate here, I am opposed to it. I hope I am not so blindly partisan as to denounce wrong in one party and not to denounce the same wrong in another party.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I am not willing to permit this discussion to close without having given to my very highly esteemed friend from Indiana [Mr. KERN] assurance of the fact that it was not my purpose in the slightest degree to intimate that he had taken an unfair view or that he was not informed about a matter as to which he had a right to suppose that he should be fully informed. I sought to contrast the information of an individual Senator with that of members of the committee who had the matter now pending under consideration and who had joined in the recommendation now embodied in this resolution.

Another circumstance I want to impress upon the Senate is that this resolution is distinctly in the interest of economy and publicity. A number of employees of Senators who are chairmen of committees have been carried as part of the force of the Sergeant at Arms' office under the designation of messengers. A custom that prevailed long before either the Senator from Indiana or myself became Members of this body justified the assignment by the Sergeant at Arms to the several committees, and in some instances to Senators, of a number of messengers provided for by a lump appropriation for 57 messengers and providing a salary of $1,440 for each.

The Republican Members of the Senate concluded to change that system by making such an entry upon the public records as would show just exactly what service each employee of the Senate was engaged in and at what expense. They were no longer to be blindly carried as part of the force of the Sergeant at Arms' office, but were to be carried as employees of the Senate. We could not accomplish that directly on this occasion for the reason that the appropriation out of which current expenses are paid was made last year and will not expire for nearly a year, and so we approximated as nearly as we might the accomplishment of that purpose.

When the matter was under consideration yesterday the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], addressed an interrogatory to the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS]. The Senator from Wyoming said:

> We have endeavored to put all the necessary annual clerks and employees under the regular appropriation law—that is to say, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act. Otherwise, when an appointment is made it goes on interminably, perhaps 1 year and perhaps 30, under the contingent fund.
> I wish to ask the Senator whether it is his intention to recommend to the Committee on Appropriations that these clerks be put upon the regular roll when the next appropriation bill comes in?

The answer of the Senator from New Jersey to that question was, "It is."

We are attempting to do now what will be done in plain terms in a statute when a new appropriation bill shall come to be prepared. Nothing would be accomplished by defeating this resolution, because it would remit us to the old system; it would increase the outlay for the same service, and would defeat the very commendable start that has been made toward systematizing and reducing the cost of the clerical force employed by the Senate.

So far as the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is concerned, I am satisfied that it will be entirely agreeable to the committee to have it adopted; but it is superfluous, in my judgment, for the reason that the very thing that it directs to be done will be done. The reason why the committee did not incorporate some such provision in this resolution was because we did not believe that we could change existing law by a simple resolution of the Senate.

The list of employees that has been exploited here as one of the secret archives of the Republican Party is a matter of public record in the office of Mr. Nixon, the financial clerk of the Senate, and anybody who desires to get a list of those who draw pay from the Senate can get a printed list by a simple application to the office of the financial clerk. It is required not only by the law, but by the Constitution, to be published from time to time, and it is published and, as I have stated, can be obtained.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. KERN. Is the Senator sure that the pamphlet to which I referred can be obtained?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. No, sir; I am not sure as to that. I spoke of the employees of the Senate. Every dollar that goes out of the Public Treasury must have behind it a receipt from somebody, and those who are diligent enough to look up such matters will find recorded somewhere that is accessible to ordinary investigation a record of that fact.

The question of the broader scheme of the distribution of patronage by the majority is one that is not involved in this discussion. We have nothing to do with that. That will become a live question some time later, I hope; but in the meantime we are dealing with certain enumerated clerkships, and we have dealt with them in a way that makes for fairness and equality in the distribution of the clerical force and for economy in the expenditure of the amount of money that is necessary to pay them. That is all that is involved here.

I hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] will be accepted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW]. I feel satisfied that it meets the views of the committee, but I want to suggest an amendment by striking out the words "conference of the minority" where they appear in line 6 of the resolution. That is evidently an inadvertence. It was not the intention of the committee to deal with any of the matters that related to this side of the Chamber, but to confine our recommendation to such resolution as had been proposed to carry out the plan arranged by the Senators on the other side. I will move that the words "conference of the minority," where they appear on line 6, be stricken out of the resolution, and I trust that the Senator from Kansas will accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Arkansas that it would not be in order now to offer a separate amendment, as the Senator from Missouri has an amendment pending. An amendment to another part of the resolution can not be offered until that is disposed of.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Very well. I will present it now, and offer it later.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have before me the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, and I hardly think it covers what he really intends. It reads as follows:

> The Sergeant at Arms shall not hereafter detail any person to serve said committees without express authority of the Senate.

That only applies to the committees named in the resolution. So I offer as an amendment to the amendment that which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah proposes an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment it is proposed to insert:

> That all details made by the Sergeant at Arms are hereby abolished, and no details shall hereafter be made.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That, Mr. President, is in violation of the plan of adjustment adopted by the other side, because it abolishes the assignments that have been made to 10 of the committees of which Democratic Senators are now chairmen. We have not sought to deal with that question at all; but the Senator from Missouri, in the amendment that he offers, provides that when these new places are created the old places shall be abolished as to those particular committees.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am fully aware of what the amendment seeks to accomplish. It is exactly as the Senator from Arkansas states—that all details shall be abolished. I realize that the amendment as offered by me abolishes all details, both as to committees of which Republicans are chairmen and committees of which Democrats are chairmen, but I have no doubt that if the Senator from Arkansas or any other Senator on the other side of the Chamber will offer a resolution providing for clerks to Democratic committees in place of the employees now under assignment to them, the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate will report it favorably and allow the present help to all the minority committees. From now on let every case be passed upon by the Senate. That is the effect of my amendment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The objection to the proposal of the Senator from Utah is that he takes up in reverse order, so far as this side of the Chamber is concerned, the disposition of this matter. The pending resolution deals with certain concrete propositions made in the form of a resolution offered on this floor and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. The propriety of making the change was first passed on by the committee, and the action taken resulted in nominally adding to the force of the committees mentioned. It was entirely proper that there should be an understanding of some kind, either on the face of the resolution or otherwise, that when these apparent additional employees were added to the clerical force of the committees there should be dropped off something to compensate for it.

Whenever a Democratic Senator or any Senator shall offer a resolution that similar treatment shall be had in the case of the Democratic chairmanships, it would be entirely proper for some Senator to offer such an amendment as the Senator from Missouri has offered to this resolution; but I think it is improper, and I think it is in violation of the plan of settlement that has been adopted, to offer it at this stage and to take the employees assigned to those committees out of the service at once. That can be done, and will be done, in its proper time, but I think when the Senator makes such a proposal at this time it is confounding things that ought not to be associated.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Indiana have criticized the present mode of detailing employees of the Senate, and perhaps, in an indirect way at least, made it appear that it only applied to majority committees of the Senate. I am opposed to details, and made a report to that effect as a member of the subcommittee. The committee did not take up the question of the detailed employees that the Democratic committees now enjoy, but if we are going to abolish details entirely upon this side by a resolution offered by a Democratic Senator, I think it is proper to abolish them all. I will say that I will support with all the enthusiasm that I can command a resolution, if it shall be introduced into the Senate at any time, that will give to the committees of the minority the number of employees they have now by detail.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to say that the Senator from Utah seems to forget that the only reason why the proposition is made to abolish details with regard to these particular committees is because they have asked for and have received additional help. Now, with the idea that all service shall be known to everybody, so that you can trace it and see who is responsible, it is well enough to abolish details where you have received these requests and complied with them, so that you can make compensation; but no Democratic chairman of any committee has asked for any additional help. Therefore to do away with the detail which constitutes his help now is to leave him without the help that he has had.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no disposition at all to rob any Democratic committee of help for one hour or one minute. Therefore I will ask leave to withdraw the amendment I have offered; but I certainly hope that some Democratic Senator will offer a resolution and ask that the employees now detailed to minority committees be provided for by resolution rather than by detail. In that view of the case, I think the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri is useless, and I hope the Senate will vote it down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah, without objection, withdraws his amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I do not think it would be fair to allow this discussion to close without calling attention to some facts that seem not to have been taken into consideration by those who have criticized the action of this committee.

It seems to have been assumed that the chairman of a committee had no reason for having clerical assistance because his committee did not meet. Senators upon further investigation and experience will learn that that is not the criterion. For instance, take the Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, to which committee, if my recollection is correct, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. KERN] referred. The chairman of that committee is a member of the most important committees of this body, and as a member of such committees he is continually engaged upon assigned duties from those committees which occupy his time and necessitate such assistance as could not possibly be contemplated under the chairmanship. He has no right to call upon the clerical force of the Committee on Foreign Relations, for instance. When matters are referred to him as a member of that committee he can not call upon the clerical force of the Committee on Foreign Relations to perform the detailed duty with which he is invested by that committee. He is a member of the Judiciary Committee, the Committee on Military Affairs, and the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Every member of a committee is continually engaged in the performance of assigned duties from the committees of which he is a member, and though the committee of which he is chairman may be seemingly unimportant or have no duties assigned to it, he must be provided with that clerical force which enables him to perform his duty as a member of all the committees of which he is a member.

I merely selected that committee. I may take the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, a chairmanship that probably might be deemed unimportant from the standpoint of the amount of business that is assigned or referred to it by the Senate. Yet that Senator is a member of the Committees on Commerce, on Foreign Relations, on Immigration, and other like important committees; and he must be equipped with an efficient clerical force to enable him to take up the assigned work that comes from those committees.

I could go through the list of committees. The Senator, upon my suggestion, may take up that question. From experience it is safe to say that every Senator who has been here long enough to have assigned duties from committees of which he is a member will bear me out in the statement that his duties are largely directed to the attention of the business of committees of which he is not the chairman.

I merely make this suggestion in order that it may not go out as a fact, because it is not a fact, that clerical assistance is given to Senators merely because of the work which the committee of which they are chairmen may necessitate. Such is not the case. In the assignment of committees among Senators it is endeavored to make such assignments so that every Member of this Senate shall be a member of committees that have real substantial work to perform, and it would be a grave mistake to take into consideration only the matters assigned to the committee of which he is the chairman.

I merely called attention to that in order that the impression may not go out that we have conceded here that because the committee of which a Senator is chairman did not have meetings or have matters referred to it that Senator was not under the necessity of having clerical assistance at least up to the standard he now has it. It is safe to say that no Senator who performs his duty—and all Senators do—has much idle time on his hands. I do not believe that there is any Member of this body who can not, if so inclined, find occupation in the performance of public service that will necessitate all of the assistance that he is given under existing conditions. Senators are just as much under obligation to perform the duties assigned to them by the committees of which they are members as though the matters were referred to the committee of which a Senator is chairman, and they have no other provision in the way of clerical assistance except that which comes to the committee of which a Senator is a chairman.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I hope very much the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] will not be adopted.

There are two reasons for my position in this regard—first, it shows the sincerity of purpose on the part of those who have been endeavoring to bring about a better system among the employees of the Senate under the Sergeant at Arms. As a member of the subcommittee which had something to do with introducing the new system, I feel that our desire to really reduce the expenses of the Senate ought not to be questioned in this way.

Second, it is wholly futile; it would not accomplish the purpose its author has in view. It declares that no detail shall be made to the committees named in the resolution. The adoption of that part of the report would not reduce the expenses of the Senate a penny. Certain employees of the Sergeant at Arms have been authorized by the appropriation act, and even if those employees were not detailed to the committees they would not necessarily be discharged from the service of the Sergeant at Arms. They might be detailed to other committees or they might not be detailed at all, and therefore the same employees would remain.

We have undertaken to see that the men who have been detailed heretofore shall not be hereafter detailed, so far as this side of the Chamber is concerned, and that those of them who are not reemployed by the Senate shall leave the service, or if they do not leave the service that they shall be employed otherwise within the limits of the law.

If, therefore, it was desired to accomplish what the Senator from Missouri has in mind, it would be necessary to say that the pay roll of the Senate, or of the Sergeant at Arms, shall, after the 1st day of August, or shall after this time, be reduced by the number of men who are in this resolution employed for the various committees named in it.

I hope the Senator from Missouri will believe, and that the Senator from Indiana will believe, that the plan which we have adopted will be carried out in good faith, and that hereafter there will be no detail from the office or force of the Sergeant at Arms to particular committees or particular Senators, so far as this side of the Chamber is concerned. We do intend to reduce the expenses and we believe that this is the better way in which to do it.

I spent a good deal of time in trying to ascertain just what the facts were with regard to the force employed in the office of the Sergeant at Arms and in the office of the Secretary. We gave the subject the very best thought of which we were capable. We went forward and made certain recommendations which would greatly reduce the expense of the Senate. We were not able to accomplish everything that we tried to accomplish. There were a good many places restored against our desire, but for that we were not in anywise responsible. The Senate is responsible for that.

However, so far as the amendment is concerned, I hope the Senate will disagree to it and will adopt the resolution. If the Republican Members of the Senate can not be trusted to carry out their agreement, their promise, and their plan, I am sure that a disregard of that promise or plan will be made public to the confusion of all of us who have entered into it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I feel sure that the debate on this subject will be instructive, whatever may be our action. The debate shows conclusively, it seems to me, that there ought to be a rearrangement, a readjustment of the committees of the Senate.

The statement has been made on the floor of the fact, of which I was unaware, that every Member of the majority is chairman of a committee, and that on the Democratic side there are 20 chairmanships, 10 of those having been recently turned over to the Democrats by the action of the majority party.

Mr. President, it is perfectly evident that we do not require 50 or 60 committees to transact the business of the Senate. We must be aware that a great many of these committees, by reason of changed conditions, have become obsolete and ought to be done away with.

The only question that remains is how the clerical assistance Senators have been able to receive from the committee appointments of clerks and messengers can be secured when these committees are done away with. We all realize that many of these committees have been retained simply because of the great increase in the business of Senators, not so much the business done upon the floor as business connected with the Government and required of them by their constituents. It is safe to say that the two Senators from each State are compelled to do as much in the way of public business outside of their work upon the Senate floor as the entire delegation in the House of the State which they represent.

Doubtless we have held on to a great many of these committees, with a view to furnishing the Senators who are chairmen of those committees with a proper clerical force, or, rather, we have been unwilling to do away with these committees because that doing away would deprive Senators of needed clerical assistance. It seems to me that we had better meet that question candidly by providing for each Senator who may not be chairman of a committee proper clerical assistance, consisting of a secretary, with adequate pay, not the inadequate pay which secretaries have hitherto received, but adequate pay, aggregating $2,500 per annum; of a stenographer, whose compensation should be at least $1,500 per annum; and of a messenger, at a moderate salary. The multiplication of committees has really resulted in injury, I think, to the administration of the business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Nevada suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business? The Secretary will state it.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4413) to place on the free list agricultural implements, cotton bagging, cotton ties, leather, boots and shoes, fence wire, meats, cereals, flour, bread, timber, lumber, sewing machines, salt, and other articles.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, with the understanding that it is only to be laid aside for the consideration of the pending resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Senator from Nevada will proceed.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is perfectly apparent we do not require the number of committees which we now have, and that they obstruct public business rather than aid it. Many of these committees have become obsolete by a change of conditions. Many of these committees overlap each other in jurisdiction and create confusion in legislation by reason of that fact. For instance, we have commerce divided into two parts, the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Interstate Commerce. Yet the jurisdiction of the United States is simply over interstate and foreign commerce. That would imply that the creation of the Committee on Interstate Commerce would leave in the hands of the Committee on Commerce only the consideration of matters relating to foreign commerce. Yet we know, as a matter of fact, that the Committee on Commerce has jurisdiction of our navigable rivers, our power over which rests entirely under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution.

These are instances of reform which can be made in the consolidation of the active committees. It seems to me the business of the Senate would be much better transacted if our committees were fewer and the membership larger. I hope that some time the appropriate committee will take this matter in hand, and without depriving Senators of the clerical assistance which they have now, the whole matter of committees will be so adjusted that we will have only the live committees in existence, and not obsolete committees.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to say by way of closing that the amendment does not cast any reflection upon the committee. It does not impugn the honor or the integrity of any man who has stated the plan to be that the employees whom we authorize by this resolution are to take the place of details now made by the Sergeant at Arms. It simply states that purpose in the resolution itself and makes it a matter of record.

Let me say to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], if I can have his attention, that I think there are good reasons for this amendment, which I believe will appeal to his sense of fairness. As a preliminary to stating those reasons let us for a moment glance at the present condition. What is it? It is conceded here that without any authority of law, without any action of the Senate, a custom has grown up by which the Sergeant at Arms details members of his force to permanently serve various committees. It amounts to this, then, that the only authority he can have is the authority which has come from some man on the committee who desires the additional service or from a caucus chairman who may have sanctioned the "detail," so that the details have been made without the knowledge of the Senate and without authority from the Senate.

Now it is proposed for the first time to ask and obtain express authority from the Senate, and we put that in the form of a resolution authorizing for the first time the employment of these men. If you do not add to that a clause saying that there shall be no other details, the old system will reinstate itself, and the same influences which heretofore led the Sergeant at Arms to make details will again lead him to make details; not, of course, as long as the distinguished Senators who have pledged their word here to-day are in control, but the moment they cease to control. The moment your recollection of what has transpired here to-day has been obliterated the system will spring up again.

That is one reason. There is a second reason. We all know how the importunities of men who desire to retain positions constantly operate upon all of us, how hard it is to say to a man who wants to hold position that you individually take the responsibility of saying the position shall be abolished, how hard it will be for the Sergeant at Arms to say to these employees, "Some of you must go." But if the Senate takes this action the answer the Sergeant at Arms will be authorized to make and can make to every employee, and the answer that every Senator can make to every man who clamors to retain his position, is that the Senate has ordered that there shall be no employees of the Sergeant at Arms sent to wait upon these several committees.

So, without impugning the honor of any man, I say this ought to be done in the interest of the public service. Let me say, finally, to the Senator from Iowa, that which I think I need not say, and to the Senator from Kansas, and to all other Senators, that I will take the word of any man who belongs to the Senate upon any question, public or private, so far as it concerns his own opinion or his own act. But this is a matter of public business, and I do maintain that to express plainly in the resolution that which the Senator from Kansas says it is the purpose of the committee to do, or the purpose of the controlling force on the Republican side to do, will do no harm. When it comes to applying a similar rule to the committees the Democrats have, I shall insist upon the same sort of a limitation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. I ask for a roll call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. REED. I raise the question of the lack of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bacon	Crane	McCumber	Simmons
Borah	Crawford	McLean	Smith, Mich.
Bourne	Cullom	Martin, Va.	Smith, S. C.
Bradley	Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Brandegee	Curtis	Nelson	Stephenson
Bristow	Foster	Nixon	Stone
Brown	Gamble	Overman	Swanson
Burnham	Gore	Owen	Taylor
Burton	Gronna	Page	Thornton
Chamberlain	Guggenheim	Paynter	Townsend
Chilton	Heyburn	Perkins	Watson
Clapp	Johnson, Me.	Poindexter	Wetmore
Clark, Wyo.	Kern	Pomerene	Williams
Clarke, Ark.	La Follette	Reed	Works

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators have answered the roll call. A quorum of the Senate is present. As many as second the demand of the Senator from Missouri for the yeas and nays will raise their hands.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I have an amendment pending. I move to amend the resolution, in line 6, by striking out the words "conference of the minority." The resolution deals only with clerkships on the Republican side of the Chamber.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STONE. The Chair is proceeding with a great deal of expedition. There was a request for the yeas and nays on the amendment of my colleague [Mr. REED]. Has that been decided?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was put before the absence of a quorum was suggested, and not a sufficient number of Senators seconded the request. After a quorum was ascertained to be present, the Chair again put the proposition, and again an insufficient number seconded the demand.

Mr. STONE. I am satisfied that some Senators did not hear the Chair when asked if there was a second to the demand for yeas and nays.

The VICE PRESIDENT. They might have misunderstood the Chair. The Chair can not compel Senators to hear.

Mr. STONE. I did not say that they misunderstood the Chair, but the attention of Senators was diverted for a moment. I believe it was understood that a yea-and-nay vote would be had on the amendment. I should like to have the Chair put it again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Chair will again put the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] for the yeas and nays on agreeing to his amendment. The Chair hears no objection.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. BOURNE. I ask that the amendment be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will again read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the resolution the following words:

The Sergeant at Arms shall not hereafter detail any person to serve said committees without express authority of the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Does the amendment confine the prohibition laid on the Sergeant at Arms to the committees for which we are now providing or does it apply to all the committees of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that is a question of construction.

Mr. BAILEY. Then I will ask the Chair to have the resolution read again and I will decide it for myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution as amended, and the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The SECRETARY. The resolution as amended is as follows:

Senate resolution 118.

Resolved, That each of the following-named committees is hereby authorized to employ a messenger at a salary of $1,200 per annum: Committees to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, Canadian Relations, Civil Service and Retrenchment, Coast Defenses, Education and Labor, Expenditures in the Department of the Interior, Expenditures in the Navy Department, Expenditures in the Post Office Department, Expenditures in the Treasury Department, Expenditures in the War Department, Industrial Expositions, Interoceanic Canals, Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, Library, and Patents; that said salaries be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate until otherwise provided for by law.

The SECRETARY. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri is to add the following:

The Sergeant at Arms shall not hereafter detail any person to serve said committees without express authority of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and called the name of Mr. BACON.

Mr. PAYNTER. Would it be in order to have read for information a short amendment, which I shall offer after the pending amendment is disposed of, because it would throw some light——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The roll call has been begun.

Mr. PAYNTER. I suppose it could be done by unanimous consent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the roll call must be completed before the amendment can be read.

Mr. PAYNTER. I shall offer it after the pending amendment is disposed of.

Mr. BACON. I submit that the roll call had not begun. There had been no response.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct. The Senator from Georgia had not responded. The Secretary will then read the amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. PAYNTER. I will offer it as an amendment to come in on line 12, after the word "Patents."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Patents," at the end of line 12, insert:

And that each of the committees, the chairmanship of which has been assigned to the minority, shall have a messenger at a salary of $1,200 per annum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the roll call on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Before the Secretary proceeds to call the roll, I want to call attention to the fact that the amendment offered by me to the resolution, in line 6, was not noted by the Secretary when he read the resolution for the information of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Arkansas was adopted, and the resolution should have been so read.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNHAM (when Mr. GALLINGER's name was called). My colleague [Mr. GALLINGER] is necessarily absent. He is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. PERCY]. As he is absent, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. RICHARDSON]. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. SMOOT (when Mr. SUTHERLAND's name was called). My colleague [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. If he were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BAILEY. I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. PAGE. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM] is unavoidably detained as a member of the Lorimer investigating committee, but he is paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. If my colleague were present and voting, he would vote "nay."

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to make the announcement that my colleague [Mr. JONES] is necessarily absent in attendance on the Lorimer investigating committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is unavoidably absent, and he is paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT].

Mr. WATSON. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER]. I find he is absent; and, having voted myself, I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. BACON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have voted. I desire to announce that, in so doing, I transferred the pair I have with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA].

Mr. MYERS. I am requested to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. DAVIS], who is out of the Chamber, is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 33, as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bacon	Kern	Overman	Stone
Chamberlain	La Follette	Owen	Swanson
Chilton	Martine, N. J.	Pomerene	Thornton
Gore	Myers	Reed
Johnson, Me.	O'Gorman	Shively

NAYS—33.

Borah	Crane	Heyburn	Smith, Mich.
Bourne	Crawford	McLean	Smoot
Bradley	Cullom	Martin, Va.	Stephenson
Brandegee	Cummins	Nelson	Townsend
Bristow	Curtis	Nixon	Wetmore
Brown	Dixon	Page	Works
Burnham	Gamble	Paynter
Burton	Gronna	Perkins
Clark, Wyo.	Guggenheim	Poindexter

NOT VOTING—39.

Bailey	Fletcher	Lodge	Simmons
Bankhead	Foster	Lorimer	Smith, Md.
Briggs	Frye	McCumber	Smith, S. C.
Bryan	Gallinger	Newlands	Sutherland
Clapp	Hitchcock	Oliver	Taylor
Clarke, Ark.	Johnston, Ala.	Penrose	Tillman
Culberson	Jones	Percy	Warren
Davis	Kenyon	Rayner	Watson
Dillingham	Lea	Richardson	Williams
du Pont	Lippitt	Root

So Mr. REED's amendment was rejected.

Mr. PAYNTER. In connection with the amendment I have offered, I desire to state that after having it read for information I was informed that some of the detailed messengers are now drawing $1,440 per annum. I have added a proviso that the amendment is not to affect the salaries which detailed messengers are now receiving.

Mr. President, this amendment is so manifestly just that, it seems to me, no Senator who is in favor of assigning messengers to committees should vote against it. Each of the committees of which Senators of the majority are chairmen will have a messenger, as 14 or 15 additional messengers are provided for in the pending resolution. There are 10 committees over which Senators of the minority preside, which have long enjoyed messengers with salaries, I think, most of them, of $1,440. There are only the 10 committees remaining of which members of the minority are chairmen, which will not have any messenger as provided under this resolution and previous resolutions. So I offer the amendment to make the distribution equal and just.

I have the honor of being chairman of the Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service. I think that committee is quite as important as the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of War, Expenditures in the Department of the Interior, or the Committee on Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments. So, it seems to me, the Senate ought to have no difficulty upon this question and should agree to the amendment and let each committee be treated exactly in the same way.

If messengers are needed by the committees designated in the resolution, they are equally needed by the other committees not provided for in the resolution. If it is to be a mere matter of patronage or of favor to Senators who belong to the majority and who are chairmen of the 14 or 15 committees mentioned in the resolution, then the resolution should not pass at all. If messengers are needed by these committees, and if messengers are needed by the 10 committees presided over by members of the minority, then the committees to which the assignment is not provided for in the resolution need them equally with the other committees. I therefore think that this amendment ought to be agreed to.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I raise the point of order that the amendment is not in order. It proposes an increase of $12,000 to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate. It is in violation of the rule which, after providing for the creation of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to consist of 5 Senators, says:

To which shall be referred all resolutions directing the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate or creating a charge upon the same.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky has never been considered by that committee, and by a statute of the United States is not in order at this time.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, I do not understand that that rule would prevent an amendment to the pending resolution——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It creates a charge on the contingent fund.

Mr. PAYNTER. Because by this resolution—I do not remember the exact number, but I will say 15—committees are provided with messengers to be assigned to them; it also prescribes what their compensation shall be, and how it shall be paid.

What is the difference between assigning messengers to those committees and assigning messengers to other committees and paying them in the same way? I maintain that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, every item in the resolution pending was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate by a separate resolution. Every such item has been referred to the committee and has been considered by it. The amount charged against that particular fund has been defined. It may be increased or it may be enlarged provided new items of charge are not incorporated, but it would be a rule susceptible of evasion if a simple and proper matter could be referred to that committee, and then on the floor unlimited additions might be made to it without the consideration that an investigation by the committee would afford. I think the amendment proposing to add 10 new messengers at a cost of $12,000 is a substantial charge against the fund and ought to be considered in all of its bearings.

There is another objection. We are dealing only with the Republican side of the Chamber on this occasion. That amendment refers to the Democratic side.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That has not anything to do with the parliamentary status.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Of course that has no weight in a parliamentary sense.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is inclined to the opinion that the amendment can not be entertained, and unless the Senator from Kentucky desires to call something further to the attenion of the Chair, the Chair will so rule.

Mr. PAYNTER. I, of course, do not want to argue against the judgment of the Chair. I have not studied the question at all; but I see nothing in the language to which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] has called the attention of the Chair and of the Senate which would suggest such a construction.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's amendment proposes a charge upon the contingent fund in excess of the statutory limitation, beyond which the Senate can not go without a reference to the committee, and it involves a matter which has not been considered by the committee. That is the impression of the Chair.

Mr. PAYNTER. I desire to make this suggestion: The resolution provides for messengers to certain committees. If there were a statute, I take it, that provided for these messengers, not by detail, but for the messengers themselves, then the objection to that would come with equal force as the objection has to my amendment, because, if there is no law providing for permanent messengers to the committees named, then it is a change of the existing law, just as it is to assign them to these other committees.

The Committee to Audit and Control Contingent Expenses had before it the question of assigning messengers to committees, notwithstanding only certain committees were specified in the resolution. This being true, then, it seems to me, the Chair should hold that the question involved was before the committee. When it decided that the committees named in the resolution should have messengers it determined, in effect, that the 10 committees—not heretofore provided with messengers—presided over by Senators of the minority should not have messengers. The Senate should be permitted to determine this question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that when the Senate adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

THE FREE LIST.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4413) to place on the free list agricultural implements, cotton bagging, cotton ties, leather, boots and shoes, fence wire, meats, cereals, flour, bread, timber, lumber, sewing machines, salt, and other articles.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to give notice that on Monday, July 31, at the close of the routine morning business, I shall address the Senate on the pending free-list bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, it is my intention at the proper time to offer to the free-list bill the amendment which I send to the desk. I should like to have it read by the Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Nevada.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill the following:

That the Tariff Board is hereby authorized, upon the complaint of any importer or upon its own initiative, to inquire as to whether the importations of any dutiable article have been for the year preceding such inquiry less than one-tenth of the total production of similar articles in the United States; and if it shall appear that such importations do not equal one-tenth of the production of similar articles in the United States, such board shall report the fact to the President of the United States, and thereupon the duty on such article shall be reduced at the rate of 10 per cent per annum until the importations thereof shall for one year equal one-tenth of the production of similar articles in the United States, whereupon any further reduction of such duty hereunder shall cease and the subject matter shall be reported to Congress for its action. But if, after such reduction has ceased, the importations of any dutiable article shall diminish so as to bring such importations below one-tenth of the consumption of similar articles for the period of one year, such annual reduction shall be resumed until the importations thereof shall equal one-tenth of the total annual production of similar articles in the United States, whereupon any further reduction of such duty shall cease, and report thereof shall be made to Congress for its action. The President of the United States shall from time to time make proclamation of such reductions.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to gradually reduce the prohibitory duties of the tariff. We all know that there are many duties imposed not for the purpose of revenue, but simply for the purpose of protection, and that such duties operate in such a way as to exclude foreign competition and to give domestic producers the monopoly of the American market, thus creating the opportunity for them by organizing combinations back of the tariff wall to control the price and to make the domestic price equal to the foreign price plus the duty. I imagine that every member of the Democratic Party will be in sympathy with a general amendment to the tariff act which will correct these abuses, and which, without bringing a flood of foreign importations into this country, will gradually reduce the prohibitory duties to a point where they will be turned into revenue producers.

I have been somewhat embarrassed in framing this amendment by the consideration of the fact that it will be necessary to ascertain in the first place what are the prohibitory duties; and inasmuch as it is impossible for Congress now to take up this subject in all its details and to act upon it, it is necessary to refer to the executive department the ascertainment of the facts and then to declare in the law the legal result. The amendment which I offer utilizes the Tariff Board for the ascertainment of the fact as to whether the importations of any dutiable article equal one-tenth of the total domestic production of similar articles. If those importations do equal one-tenth, then the duty is a revenue duty and the amendment which I have offered does not reach it at all; but if the importations do not equal one-tenth, then the duty is either a prohibitory duty or it is not productive of the amount of revenue which it should produce. My amendment therefore provides for the ascertainment by the Tariff Board whether or not the importations of any dutiable article equal one-tenth of the total domestic production. That fact being ascertained, then the amendment declares that such duties shall be reduced at the rate of 10 per cent per annum until the importations for one year equal one-tenth of the domestic production during the same period, and then that the reduction shall cease and the matter shall be referred to Congress for further action.

I am aware that objection may be made to this by members of my own party on two grounds. One is that it is a recognition of the Tariff Board, to which the majority of the Democratic Party, in Congress at least, thus far seem to be opposed; and the other is, that it is a recognition of protection. As to the latter, I will say that it is not a recognition or indorsement of the principle of protection, but it is a recognition of the fact of protection. The purpose is to change the purely protective duty into a revenue duty, and when it becomes a revenue duty, at that moment the reduction shall cease until the further action of Congress. I do not see how for a moment it can be contended that that is a recognition or an indorsement by the Democratic Party of the principle of protection; but recognizing the fact that all the industries of the country are upon stilts as the result of the protective system, and being on stilts it will not do to knock the stilts entirely from under the domestic industries and throw them upon the ground in the utter confusion of readjustment that will follow, the confessed purpose of the amendment is to feel our way down gradually from a prohibitory and protective duty to a revenue duty, without seriously disturbing production or the business of our country. When that point is reached, reduction does not necessarily cease, but the question is relegated to Congress for its final action by report of the executive department.

Such gradual reduction of the tariff is called for and demanded by the Democratic platform. The great Democratic convention which met at Denver recognized the fact that radical reduction of the tariff might be disastrous to the industries of the country, and would be prejudicial not only to the country itself, but also to the future of the Democratic Party, which would be charged with wrecking the country. Therefore, as a matter of patriotic consideration and of party prudence, it called in its platform for a gradual reduction of the protective duties of the tariff to a revenue basis.

There are two ways of accomplishing this. One is by a short amendment, such as I have introduced, and the other is by a laborious inquiry by Congress itself, with the aid of its committees and experts, into the question of fact as to whether any of these duties are prohibitory and as to what duties fail to yield revenue. That would necessarily be a long and exhaustive process. I contend that the work of a body like this, of great character and dignity, composed of men who act in a large way, is best performed by calling to its aid a board of experts, who, acting under a rule fixed by Congress and acting as its servant, will ascertain the facts upon which the law will declare a particular result, and that the best way to make a law is not to waste the intellect and the energy and the time of Members of Congress in exhaustive inquiries conducted in our deliberative proceedings, but that the best method is to submit the ascertainment of facts to a board of experts.

Mr. President, so far as the creation of the Tariff Board was concerned, it is true that there was no distinct legislation by Congress stating its jurisdiction, except with reference to the ascertainment of facts under the maximum and minimum clause of the tariff. After a long struggle in Congress upon the Payne-Aldrich bill, the friends of the Tariff Board felt that they had realized a substantial achievement in the amendment put upon that bill in the Senate and sent to conference. That amendment was substantially changed in conference; and when the two leading Senators who took part in that conference, the former Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. Aldrich, and the former Senator from Maine, Mr. Hale, were interrogated regarding it, the former Senator from Rhode Island declared that the conference report gave the Tariff Board a larger jurisdiction, whilst the former Senator from Maine declared that the purpose of the conference committee was to restrict the Tariff Board and to practically deprive it of the jurisdiction which the Senate had sought to give it by reason of its amendment.

However, as the result of the President's insistence, appropriations were secured for the Tariff Board, enabling it to enter upon larger and more extended inquiries, and at the last session of Congess a measure passed both the House and the Senate organizing a nonpartisan Tariff Board. That provision as amended in the Senate, however, was lost as the result of a filibuster in the House of Representatives; and yet, as a matter of fact, both Houses declared unequivocally in favor of a nonpartisan, independent Tariff Board of experts, with full powers of investigation. So, acting upon this declared purpose of Congress, though not taking finally the form of law, the President recommended an enlargement of the appropriation for the Tariff Board with a view to having it make extended inquiries. Congress gave an enlarged appropriation, and I believe in the ensuing year still further increased it.

The Tariff Board, however, has only within the last six or eight months, I believe, entered upon work outside of that contemplated in the maximum and minimum clause of the tariff, and it is not to be wondered at that they have been unable to present full reports upon the various schedules of the tariff. The board did present a report upon wood pulp and print paper, and we have the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] that that report showed no duty whatever was required, even from the protective standpoint, and that therefore even protectionists would be warranted in advocating a total abolition of the duty.

I took it, therefore, as an indication that this board, composed partly of Republicans and partly of Democrats, had acted fairly upon the facts, and I was quite disturbed to find in the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin yesterday an indication that he had some doubt in that regard. I have no disposition to defend the Tariff Board or any particular body of men, but I should regard it as particularly unfortunate at this stage of the contention for a Tariff Board if in their first report there were grounds for grave suspicion as to the fairness or thoroughness of their inquiry, and I ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether he is prepared now to make a statement as to this matter?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Well advised as to my facts, I said yesterday what I had to say and all I have to say upon that subject for the present. I think I was reasonably explicit in my remarks upon yesterday, if the Senator has taken pains to read them, and I do not think that anybody can fall into error regarding what may be termed "my criticism." I may on some other day, by a resolution of inquiry or otherwise, as I shall judge to be in the public interest, go more fully into the subject, but for the present I prefer to have the matter stand just where I left it on yesterday.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I did not read the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin in the RECORD. I referred entirely to a newspaper report which I saw this morning, indicating that he had some doubt as to the fairness or the accuracy of the report to which I have referred. I do not question, of course, the right of the Senator to choose his own time as to presenting fully the matters to which he refers. My question was—and it was a perfectly courteous question—as to whether he is prepared now to enter into any further statement. I do not question his right, of course.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will say, Mr. President, that I am prepared now to enter much more fully into the subject, but I said on yesterday exactly what, in my judgment, the interests of the public and the future work of the board demanded. With all deference to the wishes of my friend I do not care at this time to add anything to what I then said.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Nor do I question at all the right of the Senator to choose the time, being prepared, as to when he will make his statement. I was simply solicitous that this matter should so far as practicable be cleared up now, because I am urging an amendment which will call upon that board for the exercise of its powers, and if there is any reason gravely to suspect the fairness or accuracy of that board I certainly should not press that amendment. I am at a loss to know to what expert body the ascertainment of the facts as to whether the importations of any given article equal one-tenth of the total domestic production of such article shall be referred, unless it be the Tariff Board, and I should be sorry to have such a matter referred to such a board unless it has the full confidence of Congress.

I am not the champion of the personnel of that particular board. I am, as the Senator from Wisconsin has been, a firm friend of the proposal that a board of experts should be organized, with a view to ascertaining facts regarding the tariff and with a view to making recommendations to Congress. In the absence of any statement which would indicate that the Tariff Board is not fair or accurate, I am justified in believing that it is, and I believe that all the more readily because I know something of the organization of that board.

I know members of my own party frequently object to my advocacy of a Tariff Board upon the ground that such a board will necessarily be partisan, and many of them go so far as to doubt the fairness of any board that can be organized with reference to the consideration of such a question as the tariff, which has a political character. I do not myself share in that doubt. Our experience with the Interstate Commerce Commission has shown that whenever you create a nonpartisan board, composed of both Democrats and Republicans, and impose upon them a function which is quasi judicial in character, such men can be relied upon to sift the facts thoroughly and to declare the facts.

I have too much respect for Americans who are of sufficient intelligence and character to be appointed upon such a commission to believe that when Congress imposes upon it a nonpartisan character and creates it as an independent tribunal, with quasi-judicial functions, that as Americans they will fail to act judicially upon the matter and to act with fairness and justice.

Mr. President, so far as this particular board is concerned, as I have already stated, I have been disposed to place great faith in it, because I personally know some of its members. The chairman of that board is a professor of political economy at Yale, the son of a chief justice of Maine, a gentleman of education and character. I believe that such a man, with such an environment and such traditions will act fairly upon this question. I have but slight knowledge of the two other Republican members of the board. As to the two Democratic members of that board, one is Mr. Howard, of Georgia, with whom I served for many years in the House of Representatives. I do not think that during the long term of service of Mr. Howard in the House there was a man who surpassed him in the estimate of his associates in character and in integrity. He was so eminently of the judicial faculty that in the party conferences the final word was almost always his. He was listened to with a respect that was accorded to but few because of the eminently judicial character of his ability, his ability to see both sides, his ability to judge fairly between contending factions, and the entire reasonableness and justice of his conclusions.

Another member of that board is Prof. Page, of the University of Virginia, a member of an old family, most honorably connected in every way with the history of that State, selected as the professor of economics in that great university. I can not but believe that such a man will act fairly and justly in the quasi judicial duties imposed upon him as the result of the organization of that board and sought to be imposed upon him by this amendment.

So, Mr. President, I am inclined to leave this amendment just as it stands and to provide that these reductions shall be made upon the ascertainment of the facts by the Tariff Board. If, however, my Democratic associates or others object to the utilization of the board for that purpose, I will be content to provide that the facts shall be ascertained by the President of the United States with such expert aid as he shall bring to his assistance, thus imposing upon the Executive, as we have often done in legislation before, the ascertainment of a fact and then declaring the legal result, after that fact is ascertained, in the law itself. We did this in the maximum and minimum clause of the tariff act, for there the President is empowered to impose the maximum tariff upon foreign countries on the ascertainment of certain facts, and the Tariff Board was created for the purpose of aiding him in ascertaining those facts. Our statutes are full of laws in which this power is exercised, and it does away with the laborious inquiry by Congress itself in the ascertainment of particular facts.

Mr. President, if this amendment goes into effect, the result will be the practical abolition of every prohibitive and purely protective duty, and the establishment in the place of such duties of a revenue duty. Of course, we all know that the revenue duty carries with it a certain degree of incidental protection, which in itself will prevent the impairment or the destruction of the industries affected, and give Congress the opportunity, when the reduction under this amendment cease, of inquiring into the matter further and determining whether further reductions shall take place or that the article itself shall be put upon the free list.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 28, 1911.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, we thank Thee for that influence which is ever drawing us to Thee, that the Holy of Holies is ever open to Thy children, where they may receive light to guide and strength to uphold and sustain them in right thinking and clean living. So we come in faith and confidence, praying for light to guide and strength to sustain us, that we may be faithful servants unto Thee this day. Be graciously near to the Members of this House who are sick and afflicted, especially unto him whose life seems to be slowly ebbing away. Restore them, we beseech Thee, to us and their loved ones in health and strength, and Thine be the praise, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House. I understood the Speaker to announce that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BELL of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of no quorum. [After counting.] There are 135 Members present—not a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER The gentleman from Alabama moves a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Clerk will call the roll, and the House will be in order.

The SPEAKER. The doors will be reopened, and the Clerk will read the Journal.

The doors were reopened.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday, July 27, 1911, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 11019. An act to reduce the duties on wool and manufactures of wool; and

H. J. Res. 130. Joint resolution making appropriations for certain expenses of the House of Representatives incident to the first session of the Sixty-second Congress.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3052. An act granting leave of absence to certain homesteaders;

S. 3069. An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," approved May 20, 1908; and

S. J. Res. 34. Joint resolution providing for additional lands for Colorado under the provisions of the Carey Act.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions (S. Res. 117):

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of the Hon. GEORGE W. KIPP, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to take order for superintending the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

And that in compliance with the foregoing the Vice President had appointed as said committee Mr. PENROSE, Mr. OLIVER, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey, and Mr. POMERENE.

SENATE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills and a joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3052. An act granting leave of absence to certain homesteaders; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3069. An act to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act to authorize the drainage of certain lands in the State of Minnesota," approved May 20, 1908; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. J. Res. 34. Joint resolution providing for additional lands for Colorado under the provisions of the Carey Act; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—SAMUEL MAILHOIT.

Mr. THAYER, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Samuel Mailhoit, Sixty-first Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12812) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton. And, pending that motion, I first desire to ask unanimous consent that there may be printed 5,000 copies of the report, including the views of the minority, 1,000 copies to go to the Committee on Ways and Means, 1,000 copies to the document room, and 3,000 copies to the folding room, for Members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider H. R. 12812, a bill to reduce the tariff on cotton goods; and, pending that, he asks unanimous consent that 5,000 copies of the report of the majority, together with the views of the minority, be printed, 1,000 copies to go to the committee, 1,000 to the document room, and 3,000 to the folding room. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman mean to print the appendix, too?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. MANN. It is a very long document.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am aware of the fact that it is a long document, but when the gentleman realizes that this House has authorized the expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars to accumulate information for the President on the tariff question, it seems to me that a few hundred dollars may well be spent in presenting to the House the information that the committee has gathered together for its benefit.

Mr. MANN. That has already been presented to the House. That has nothing to do with this question. Has the gentleman had an estimate made as to the cost of this?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I have not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is familiar with the law which prohibits either House to order printing in more than a certain amount without an estimate of the cost. It strikes me this would come within that prohibition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all. The request is for unanimous consent. This has been done repeatedly. I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that when the Payne bill came before this House, if I recollect right, 10,000 copies of the Payne report and bill were printed for the benefit of the House. There is nothing unusual in this request.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. My recollection is that the law distinctly provides that when the cost is over a certain amount there must be a report as to the estimate of the cost first.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think the gentleman is right about the law. The limitation in the law, I think, is $500, and the only cost for the reprint of this report will be the paper. The type has been set and the forms are made up. For the number that I ask to have printed I am satisfied there will not be $500 worth of additional paper required.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken in thinking that the only cost is the paper. The composition will not cost anything, but the press work and binding will; and although I may be mistaken, I am inclined to think the cost will be more than 10 cents a volume.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. I am not sure. I do not state that with any degree of certainty.

Mr. MANN. It is so easy to have an estimate of the cost of these things, that as a rule it ought to be done.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, pending the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole, I desire to know whether I can enter into an agreement with the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] in reference to the debate on this bill, about closing the debate and the control of the time? The suggestion I have to make is that general debate on this bill close on the calendar day of next Wednesday when the House adjourns, and that the time be equally divided between the two sides, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to control the time on that side and myself to control the time on this side.

Mr. PAYNE. I will say to the gentleman that from present indications I think we may well get through with the debate by the adjournment of the House on Wednesday next. That will give us five days. I do not know what may come up. I have not had a very large demand for time so far, although there has been some.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire whether the House at this time can dispense with Calendar Wednesday next Wednesday?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am satisfied that the House can not dispense with Calendar Wednesday next Wednesday, as it requires a two-thirds vote, unless gentlemen on that side of the House desire to go on with the debate on that day.

Mr. MANN. If the House can not dispense with Calendar Wednesday next Wednesday, it would be an anomalous thing to agree to close general debate at the close of Wednesday's session.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That would practically close the debate at the end of Tuesday's session, I suppose.

Mr. MANN. For that reason, for the present, I shall object. I have no objection to an arrangement for the control of the time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama whether he wishes to divide the time? I am not very anxious for a task of that kind, but I will assume it if it is necessary.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, then I ask unanimous consent that the time in this debate be equally divided between the two sides of the House, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be equally divided, he to control one half and the gentleman from New York the other half. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state to the House that I shall endeavor, if we can not agree on the time, to close this debate in 10 hours on a side, and if it is necessary I may move the previous question at the end of that time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to go into Committee of the Whole.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CULLOP in the chair.

Mr. CULLOP took the chair amid applause.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12812, to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton, and the Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the Ways and Means Committee, in presenting this bill to the House, reduces the duties on cotton goods covered by Schedule I of the Payne Tariff Act from 48.12 per cent to 27.06 per cent. This does not include all the cotton goods that come in at the customhouse, as shown by the Treasury statistics.

The revenue derived in 1910 from duties on importations of goods largely cotton, now carried by Schedule J (flax, hemp, and jute, and manufactures thereof), and carpets and carpeting in Schedule K, amounted to $24,687,284, distributed by items as follows:

Laces	$23,250,201
Cotton wearing apparel of lace	1,146,009
Collars and cuffs of cotton	1,493
Corsets of lace	3,976
Waterproof cloth	50,795
Carpets and carpeting	3,857
Handkerchiefs of lace	230,953

Possibly the item of cotton laces, embroideries, and so forth, should be transferred to Schedule I; these articles were in Schedule I of the act of 1883, but were transferred to Schedule J by the act of 1890, and have since been continued in that schedule.

So I desire the Members of the House to understand that the revision of the tariff now presented to them relates to the cotton goods found in Schedule I and the articles that the Payne bill carried into Schedule J, which we have brought back to where they properly belong and placed in Schedule I.

The items actually transferred by the proposed bill from Schedule J to Schedule I are: Collars and cuffs of cotton, waterproof cloth, and bandings, cords, ribbons, tapes, webs, and webbing, and though they may be important in some respects, they are not so in regard to the revenue that they produce.

As I stated, we have reduced the average tariff under this schedule from 48 per cent to 27 per cent. That looks like a very considerable reduction. I have heard it said since this bill was published in the newspapers that it is a radical cut, that the reduction from 48 per cent to 27 per cent is too radical a treatment.

As I have stated before on this floor, I am anxious, if we have the power to do so, to reduce every schedule in the tariff bill to a strictly revenue basis. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But in reaching that point I am not disposed to be radical. I am inclined to recognize existing conditions. When you propose to lower a house there are two ways in which you can do it. It can be done by cutting the underpinning from beneath it with an ax and dropping it down, or you can lower it with a jackscrew. And though I am heartily in favor of lowering the house, I prefer the jackscrew method. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HILL. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will yield.

Mr. HILL. I would like to ask how the gentleman is going to lower the house without taking out the underpinning?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You can put the jackscrew under it and then take out the underpinning.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. This jackscrew method means that you will not do it all at one time. Does the gentleman propose shortly to have another lowering of the schedule of the cotton manufactures?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not. I will state to the gentleman that if we enact this bill, and it is on a revenue basis—it may be at a high point on the revenue basis—I do not think that we ought to hastily or unduly agitate the country again with continued revisions; but I do say that, if we can put it on a revenue basis and adopt that principle, probably in years to come the country will realize the value of our work and in the future improve upon it.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but as far as the gentleman proposes to go, to use the illustration which he gave, he proposes to knock the underpinning out with an ax, and not by the jackscrew method.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised that my friend from Illinois should say that, but it grows out of the fact that he has not informed himself in reference to the conditions under which this revision is written, and if the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. MANN. But I am trying to obtain information now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think I can demonstrate to him that this is a very conservative bill, and not at all radical in its features.

Mr. MANN. I was referring to the gentleman's illustration. The gentleman proposes, as far as he goes, or as far as he says he proposes to go, to do it now, not by the jackscrew method, but by the ax method.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, not at all. I might lower the house with the jackscrew method to-day, and 10 years from now some distinguished gentleman on this side of the House will probably improve upon my work.

Mr. WEEKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if, in his opinion, this revision places Schedule I on a revenue basis?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I believe it does. I believe in the main it does.

Mr. WEEKS. And that it eliminates protection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My view, as stated in this House before, as to the difference between a protective tariff and a revenue tariff is that a revenue tariff can never enter the domain of protecting profits, but must act from that point downward. A protective bill begins to protect small profits, and goes up, as the Payne bill did, until it protects enormous profits. [Applause on the Democratic side.] With that definition in view, I believe that this bill is along the line of a revenue tariff.

Mr. WEEKS. Then the conclusion might be drawn by the country at large that if this is called a revenue basis there will not likely be a further revision of Schedule I, even if the Democratic Party were in full control?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that this bill was presented to a Democratic caucus, representative of Democratic constituencies and of Democratic principles, and that it was practically agreed to without opposition. If it becomes a law, I take it that until it has stayed upon the statute books and been fairly tried for a number of years there will be no effort on the part of this side of the House to make a revision of Schedule I as enacted by this bill. Of course, if it goes upon the statute books and rates which we to-day think are competitive should turn out to be prohibitive, and we find that we have made a mistake, those rates would naturally be changed; but if this bill is enacted into law, if the Senate of the United States passes it, as it probably will, and the President of the United States signs it, as it is his duty to do, I do not apprehend a change in it very soon.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I understood the language of the gentleman from Alabama to be that this bill is upon a "strictly" revenue basis. That was the word he used—"strictly." Is that correct?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, if I use the word "strictly," I will not confine myself to that definition. I say that I believe the rates in this bill are purely revenue rates.

Mr. COOPER. Purely. Well, that means strictly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman can define it as he desires.

Mr. COOPER. Does it not? I will ask the gentleman from Alabama if it is a purely revenue bill, if it is not then a strictly revenue bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will ask me a question connected with this bill I will be very glad to discuss it, but I have no desire to quibble about the English language with him.

Mr. COOPER. I am talking about the gentleman's language. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman another question. A tariff arranged upon a purely or strictly revenue basis is so arranged as to get the greatest possible amount of revenue, is is not, upon the articles mentioned in the schedule?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I think the gentleman is wrong about that. If I were to define a revenue bill, I would say that a revenue tariff levies the lowest rates that will produce the revenue which the exigencies of the Government require.

Mr. COOPER. Exactly. Well, the lowest rate will involve, necessarily, an increased amount of importations, will it not?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not always.

Mr. COOPER. Most of the time. In order to increase the revenues, if the rates are lowered, there must be an increase in the importations.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly; I do not contest that with the gentleman, and I am coming to that point right now.

Mr. HINDS. May I ask the gentleman—will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will yield for a question.

Mr. HINDS. The gentleman says that this cotton bill is framed solely to the end of the revenue in view?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think the gentleman can doubt that proposition.

Mr. HINDS. Therefore, does the gentleman say also that it leaves out entirely the principle of protection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Absolutely, so far as my knowledge is concerned. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HINDS. It follows absolutely the principle laid down by Robert J. Walker in 1846, and which Richard Cobden, head of the free-trade movement in England, declared was one of the greatest enunciations of free-trade principles. It seems that the gentleman subscribes to that?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I do not subscribe to the gentleman's speech. I think that the Walker tariff was strictly a revenue and not a free-trade tariff.

Mr. HINDS. The gentleman does not agree with Mr. Cobden in that?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly I do not agree with Mr. Cobden in that. As I have stated on the floor of this House many a time before, I am not a free trader, and I believe the only constitutional power and the only right of Congress to levy a tax is for revenue, and revenue alone. [Applause on the Democratic side.] If some incidental protection happened to grow out of it, that would not be the purpose for which the bill is written.

Mr. HINDS. Then the gentleman, if I understand him, is a free trader for revenue and a protectionist by accident? [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, the gentleman evidently does not understand my position. I attempted to make it clear to him, and as I can not do so, I will ask him to let me proceed.

Mr. HINDS. I only wished to know whether we were having in this bill free trade by system or protection by accident. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I am sorry that the gentleman, who has been for so many years under the shadow of the protection system, can not realize the difference between the levying of a tax of 27 per cent for revenue and the putting of articles on the free list.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask to be allowed to proceed, as I do not wish to take up too much of the time of the House. This bill is not a radical reduction in the sense that it adversely affects the great cotton industry of the United States. It is a radical reduction in the taxes of the American people, because it reduced the taxes levied at the customhouse from 48 per cent to 27 per cent, or nearly one-half. But is it radical in the sense that it will work injury to the manufacturing interests of this country engaged in cotton goods production? Is it radical in the sense that it will injure labor employed in the mills of this country? If not, if it is conservative so far as it affects the industrial interests of the country and yet is radical in its reduction at the customhouse, then I think we have been most successful in presenting this bill to the Congress. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, in reducing the tariff, wherein do you say that such reduction hurts the manufacturers of cotton goods of America? Wherein does it injure them if you lower the tariff at the customhouse? No gentleman on that side answers the question, so I will attempt to answer it for you.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; not for us.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, when I have made my answer, if you are ready to deny it, I will give you the opportunity to do so.

Mr. MANN. Speak for yourself, John; speak for yourself. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand, the Republican Party opposes reductions in the interest of the protected manufacturer; not that you care anything about the cost of the goods at the customhouse, but because you say lowering the tariff allows more goods to be imported into the United States, prevents American mills from making those goods, and displaces American labor.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. That is a fact, too.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is not that the position that the Republican Party takes, I will ask my friend from Illinois?

Mr. MANN. That is true in part.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is as I understand it. Now, if this bill does not close American mills or throw American labor out of employment, will not the gentleman from Illinois agree with me that it is a consummation to be desired—to reduce the taxes if we can get the revenue at the lower rates?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman desire an answer?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I do.

Mr. MANN. I am very free to say that if this bill or the wool bill or any other tariff bill can be passed lowering the rate of duty, so far as the protection is concerned, without affecting American industries, I would be in favor of it. I hope that one of these bills that the gentleman proposes will be put upon the statute book in some way and thus let us have an illustration; and if it does not close any American establishment and does not paralyze industry, I hope the gentleman will succeed in enacting his bills. But if it does close establishments and paralyze industries, the gentleman will not have much chance to pass his bills hereafter. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I join sincerely in the good wishes the gentleman proclaims for us. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I hope that these bills will receive the President's approval.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that they will receive his approval on the basis that he is talking about.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think this one will.

Mr. MANN. Well, the other bill will not. It is a long time in the future to look forward to.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. HILL. The first paragraph shows an average under this bill of 14.11 and under the Wilson bill of 37.85. That is a cut of about 60 per cent from the Wilson bill. The second paragraph shows a 15 per cent average under this bill and 53.21 under the Wilson bill, which also shows a reduction of nearly 75 per cent.

Now, then, the question I want to ask—and I ask it in good faith, in perfect good faith, in view of the remarks the gentleman has just made—is, Does he believe that the committee can recommend a reduction of from 60 to 75 per cent on these first two paragraphs below the Wilson bill and still not injure American labor and put American factories out of business?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do, most emphatically; and I will give the gentleman further answer when I come to those paragraphs.

What I wished to call to the attention of the House was the question as to whether the reduction made in this bill is going to injure American industry. Now, the gentleman from Illinois and I agree that if that is done it must be done through additional importations coming in at the customhouse under this schedule——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman desire to ask a question?

Mr. MANN. Yes. It must be through increased importations or a reduction in the cost of production in this country, which would mean a reduction of wages. That is what we are afraid of.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the reduction came, due to a large flood of importations, yes. But I will not raise that question with the gentleman. I want to call his attention to this fact: That the cotton imports under the Payne tariff bill in the year 1910 were, in round figures, $28,417,000. The estimated imports under the proposed bill that I hold in my hand are $39,163,000. In other words, the increase of imports brought by this bill, as figured by the statistician, amounts to something in excess of $10,745,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then I would like to ask the gentleman this question——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask my friend to let me finish this argument, if he will. In other words, if the figures of the statisticians are correct, the increased importations under this bill will amount to $10,745,000 in round figures. Possibly they may amount to a little more than that, but, based upon the history of the past, in all probability that will be the amount of the increased imports that will come in under this bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the gentleman my question now?

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then, if this proposed legislation becomes a law, you are going to buy for the American consumer $10,745,000 of cotton goods made in Europe that are now made in American mills by American laboring men.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I differ slightly with the gentleman. We are going to buy $10,745,000 worth of goods in addition to those we buy now; but if the gentleman will be patient with me I think I can show him that those goods are not made by American workmen or laborers to-day.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman refers to the figures of the statistician. Will the gentleman tell us who the statistician is and how he arrives at these figures?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The statistician is Mr. Parsons, who is acting with the Ways and Means Committee. On the wool bill he acted with Mr. McCoy, of the Treasury Department. He ascertained these figures and this estimate by comparison with the Wilson bill, the Dingley bill, and the McKinley bill in the same way that the estimates were made for the wool bill.

An estimate was made of the probable imports—and duties therefrom—of each of the groups of articles provided for in the bill, which include all the articles provided for in the present Schedule I, together with those transferred from the present Schedule J and included under paragraphs 5, 7, and 13 of the bill. In making the estimates the domestic consumption of each group of the manufactures of cotton was computed—separately in all cases in which separate statistics were available, and otherwise in combination—from the census statistics, including advance statistics from the census of manufactures of 1910, and from the statistics of imports entered for consumption and exports (Bureau of Statistics, Department of Commerce and Labor). Attention was given to the changing proportion of imports to consumption under the high tariff of 1890, as shown in the imports of 1892; the lower Wilson tariff of 1894, as shown in the imports of 1896; and the high tariff of 1909, as shown in the imports of 1910; with consideration, also, of the average imports for a series of years under the tariffs of 1890, 1894, and 1897. The percentages of imports to consumption were studied in connection with former and present industrial conditions and the results applied to the estimated domestic consumption of 1912, which is taken as the first year under the proposed new rates, as the bill H. R. 12812 is to take effect on January 1, 1912. The probable domestic consumption of 1912 was estimated from advance census statistics of 1910, assuming the like continuance from 1910 to 1912 of the progress in recent years in each group of manufactures under consideration.

It is, of course, impossible to forecast future imports and revenue accurately, and many factors have to be carefully considered in making an estimate, but it is believed that the estimates above referred to of probable imports and duties under the bill H. R. 12812 are fair and conservative.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to pursue the subject, but unfortunately I do not happen to know who Mr. Parsons is.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He is one of the employees of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. MANN. I understand that; but as to his being a statistician——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Parsons was engaged in similar and statistical work in Washington when the Wilson bill was written a number of years ago. It is the line of business that he follows. I believe that he was with the Reform Club of New York.

Mr. MANN. What is he in the world?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He is a statistician; but I do not care to be interrupted in my argument on that question. If the gentleman is not disposed to take these figures, why——

Mr. MANN. I would be much more disposed to take them if I could be informed that a gentleman with information made them. I do not know. I never heard the name of Mr. Parsons before.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that when we made the estimates on the wool bill Mr. Parsons made his estimate and Mr. McCoy, of the Treasury Department, made his estimate, and in the main they conformed. So I suppose the Treasury official knew what he was figuring on, as far as anybody can in these matters.

Mr. PAYNE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. This gentleman, Mr. Parsons, lives in New York, does he not?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. He has until recently. He is living in Washington right now.

Mr. PAYNE. He is a member of the Tariff Reform League, of which our old friend, Mr. DeWitt Warner, was the chairman years ago?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think so.

Mr. PAYNE. And he is the representative of that league, is he not?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, I do not think that at all. I do not understand that he is its representative.

Mr. PAYNE. Does he not hold the same tariff views that Mr. Warner held—that is, free trade?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know anything about that, I will say to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. Did he perform the principal work in the drafting of the bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all.

Mr. PAYNE. Did he not make a draft of this bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No. I will say to the gentleman from New York that the form of this bill in the main follows the language of the Payne bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I am not talking about the language. I am talking about the duties.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, the gentleman means the rates.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman is mistaken. I have heard that gentlemen on that side allowed their statistician to prepare the Payne bill for them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. I did not understand the gentleman's remark.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say that the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee sat around the table in the consultation room and fixed the rates themselves.

Mr. PAYNE. After the draft of the bill was presented to them by Mr. Parsons?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all.

Mr. PAYNE. I saw in the newspapers that the committee was to put in several weeks of work. I knew that they were to meet at the committee room, and I took a look in occasionally, and although I looked in a number of times I never was able to find the committee there going through the bill, though I heard they were expected to meet there.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am sorry that the gentleman's eyesight is failing him, because the committee was in session after the statistics had been gathered and the rough form of the language of the bill had been prepared. They were some 10 days agreeing to the rates.

Mr. PAYNE. If my eyesight is failing, my hearing must be failing also, because I could not hear them there going through the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My friend from New York is so accustomed to a free-for-all fight when a tariff committee meets that he can not understand how a Democratic committee can write a tariff bill and agree upon it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman that when a tariff bill is made by the Republican Party everybody has views and expresses them. I judge from what the gentleman said that when the Democratic committee make up a tariff bill nobody has views upon it or expresses them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from New York that the people had views in the last election, and this committee is endeavoring to carry out those views. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman thinks the people had views and he is endeavoring to carry them out, and is banking on the idea that when that reduction is made, whether it is intelligent or otherwise, whether it protects or destroys industries, the people will say, "Oh well, it is a revision of the tariff downward and carries out our views." The gentleman must not fool himself. But, Mr. Chairman, what I rose for——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the gentleman from New York not to make a speech in my time; I am ready to yield for a question.

Mr. PAYNE. I am asking a question. The gentleman says the experts or statisticians, Mr. Parsons, and the clerk of the committee, figured these rates, and therefore their figures must be accepted. On what basis did they figure it; on what basis did they say that when the duty was reduced from 48 per cent to 27½ per cent the increase of importations would only amount to 25 per cent on the basis of 1910, while, if you go back to the Dingley bill, you will find the importations larger than what they would be under this proposed law?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the gentleman not to make a speech in my time.

Mr. PAYNE. I am trying to ask a question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman wants to give this side of the House a little fatherly advice, to which I have no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to give that side of the House a little light, incidentally; I acknowledge that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from New York what I have said before, that the way of estimating this revenue conforms in general to that used by the Treasury expert, Mr. McCoy, when he estimated the revenues for the wool bill; and on that basis these figures were worked out. Now, I can not stop longer to answer the gentleman's question, because I want to get back to my argument; but if the gentleman will turn to pages 31 to 44 of the report of the Ways and Means Committee, he will find, in addition to what I have already submitted, further information as to the method of securing the results shown in the estimates of imports and duties.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to ask if the Treasury basis was not taken at the suggestion of the committee, and the Treasury simply did the mechanical work of making the figures?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman is mistaken in that.

Mr. PAYNE. I think the gentleman's recollection is at fault.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; the gentleman is mistaken. We furnished the Treasury expert with the rates that we proposed as a change. He arrived at his conclusions by his own method.

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; but did not he take that basis of the Wilson bill, as you suggest now?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not on my suggestion.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman referred to page 44 of the report as the basis, but I find nothing on that page.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will look at the conclusion of the last paragraph of each chapter from pages 31 to 46 of the report he will find a statement of the committee in reference to revenue for each group.

Mr. MANN. But that does not give the basis of the statistics.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, there is given in each paragraph the estimate of revenue and how it is arrived at. As I said to the gentleman, I can not state the figures, because I did not make them. I have given the method that the statisticians used, which was through a comparison of the Wilson bill with the Dingley bill and the McKinley bill, and it was upon that basis, with the comparison of those bills, that they figured this revenue. I did not make the estimate. As a matter of fact, I believe that the revenue will probably be two or three million dollars in advance of what the statisticians make it. There will be approximately the same amount of importations, but I think the estimate of revenue is conservative and that it will be a few millions more.

Mr. MANN. I thought probably there was some basis used by the statistician which had been given to the committee, and if that is the case, why would it not be proper to give it to the House?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry if I can not make the gentleman understand that I did not make the actual figures. The imports under the Wilson bill at lower rates of duty were compared with like imports under the McKinley bill at higher rates, and the relative increases of imports following reductions of duties were computed. From these figures estimates were made of probable percentages of imports to domestic consumption, which percentages were then checked with reference to present business conditions. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that is the method that they pursued. I did not make the actual calculations myself, and therefore I am unable to tell the gentleman exactly how the figures were made.

Mr. MANN. I did not assume that the gentleman made the figures, but I did assume that possibly the gentleman who did make the figures furnished to the gentleman who has the floor a statement as to how he arrived at the figures and when.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, I have already stated to the gentleman how he arrived at the figures. At one time the statistician presented to me——

Mr. MANN. I may be unusually dull, but I have not been able to catch it from what the gentleman said.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The statistician presented his estimates to me. I have not them before me here. I do not know whether they are still in the committee room. If they are, I will be glad to furnish them to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will; but I started to make a speech, and I have not even reached my first premise.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course I am willing to help the gentleman all I can. [Laughter.] I want to know from the gentleman whether his statisticians took into account the immense falling off in the purchasing power of the people, which we experienced under the Wilson bill, expecting the same falling off during the same number of years under this proposed bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. O Mr. Chairman, how could my friend miss considering what the effect of hard times would be on the country when, under the operation of the Payne bill, hard times are already staring the country in the face?

Mr. PAYNE. The Payne bill stimulated the industries of the country for the first year of its experience, but what you are doing now is closing the factories in spite of the Payne bill or any other bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I will demonstrate what I have in mind to my friend in a minute. I would like to get on with my speech, however.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will for a question.

Mr. WEEKS. Was any Treasury official consulted in making up these figures?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not in reference to the cotton schedule, but they were in reference to the wool schedule. As I stated, the experts of the committee simply pursued the same general method in making these estimates that were pursued by the Treasury official on the wool schedule. With that as a basis there was no necessity for sending for the expert again, as the same method should produce the same result.

Mr. WEEKS. Has the committee made any inquiry from others who are familiar with the cotton business regarding the probable importations?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I will say to the gentleman that I have not inquired of the manufacturers as to how much the reduction of rate will bring about importations because I find, with a few exceptions, that they insist, if there is a reduction at all, that it means ruin to business. But I have inquired from the statistical bureaus of this Government, and if the gentleman will allow me to proceed I will be glad to give him that information. Mr. Chairman, I stated that so far as this bill affects the industrial interests of this country, it is a conservative bill. My reasons for stating that are these: In the year 1910 the domestic consumption of manufactures of cotton provided for under this bill, which, of course, does not include laces, lace curtains, and embroideries, amounted to $790,187,000.

In 1900 the American consumption amounted to $410,101,000. This American consumption is determined from the statistics of the Bureau of the Census, which show the amount of American production, to which is added the amount of imports coming into this country and from which is deducted the exports going out. It shows that during the last census decade the increased consumption of cotton goods by the American people amounted to $380,086,000.

Mr. MANN. What were the figures of the gentleman for 1910?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The figures for 1910, or rather the domestic consumption, was $790,187,000.

Mr. MANN. Of cotton goods?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The cotton-goods consumption of the American people.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman on the other side, my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN], is interrupting the debate even without getting recognition from the Chair. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. CANNON. Let it be recorded.

Mr. MANN. I am, at least, not inserting applause after my questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. Does the gentleman from Alabama now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. MANN. Where does the gentleman get his figures?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that he will find these figures——

Mr. MANN. The cotton consumption for 1905, I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I say to the gentleman that if he will refer to the appendix to this report he will find that we took the census statistics which were furnished us by the Census Bureau for the year 1910, which I do not believe have yet been generally published.

Mr. MANN. I supposed that. The cotton consumption for 1905 was only $443,000,000, and the gentleman gave such a very large amount——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will show the gentleman where he makes his mistake. It is in this, that the cotton consumption, as published, does not include hosiery and knit goods, which are classed under a separate head. On the basis of the cotton material they contained, it is estimated that 87 per cent is cotton goods; and as hosiery and knit goods are in this bill, we added this 87 per cent to the figures given by the Census Bureau, which brings the result I have read.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. While the gentleman is on that point, I call his attention to page 6 of his report, in which the statement is made that—

> The United States now consumes approximately two-thirds of its cotton crop, which is about equally divided between the mills of the Northern and Southern States—and then reference is made to schedules on page 484, which are evidently taken from the census report, and which indicate that the United States consumes about one-third of the world's consumption and that the American production of cotton is about two-thirds of the world's production. I attract the gentleman's attention to that, because it is a very important matter.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that his question, of course, does not relate to what I am discussing. I can not stop now to answer it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It may be a typographical error.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It has no relation to the subject that I am discussing.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. HILL. I want to invite the attention of the gentleman to the apparent discrepancy mentioned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, where it says "two-thirds of the cotton crop is used abroad."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There may be a typographical error or a discrepancy about whether cotton to a certain amount is used in America or used abroad; but that is not the question I am discussing, and I will ask the gentleman to wait until I get to that point.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well. For the present I will not pursue it further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to be interrupted further.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to be allowed to proceed without further interruption, because it is impossible to make an argument and permit interruptions on points that do not bear on the subject.

As I was stating, the increase in the domestic consumption of cotton manufactures in the last 10 years, according to the census, amounted to $380,086,000. That is 92.68 per cent of the domestic consumption in 1910. In other words, the consumption of cotton manufactures by the American people has increased nearly a hundredfold in the last 10 years.

Now, is it not fair to assume that this increase will continue in the future? It seems to me that if we reduce the cost of goods at the customhouse, certainly it would be an invitation to the American people to consume more goods because they could get them more cheaply. So assuming that the increased consumption will continue, by 1912 the consumption of cotton goods in America will amount to $936,000,000. The estimated imports for 1912 under this bill, which does not take effect until January 1 of that year, is $39,000,000. These estimated imports would be only 4.18 per cent of the estimated consumption of cotton manufactures by the American people at that time. In other words, if this bill becomes a law and the total amount of goods that we say should come in comes into the country as a result of lowering the taxes at the customhouse, the total importation would amount to only 4⅛ per cent of the American consumption.

Now, do you consider that great competition, that the American manufacturer shall have 95⅞ per cent of the American market and the foreigner 4⅛ per cent? Is that destroying American industry and throwing American labor out of employment? But, mark you, we are not responsible for all of that competition. The increase of estimated imports of 1912 over imports of 1910 is $10,746,000, or 1.15 per cent of the estimated consumption of 1912. In other words, the total amount of additional goods that we allow to come into this country is only 1.15 per cent of the consumption of the American people. Does any gentleman on that side say that to increase importations a little over 1 per cent is to destroy American industry? But suppose you double our estimate, and double the revenue from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000. You would have only 2 per cent of additional competition. Do you expect that to destroy the industry?

The increase in domestic consumption, $380,000,000 in 10 years, is at an average rate of $38,000,000 per year. Hence the estimated imports are only about $1,000,000 more than the annual increase in domestic consumption.

What does that mean? It means that if the mills simply remain stationary in the amount of their production, producing only their full capacity for 1910, a thing which they are not doing to-day, and if their present capacity is not increased nor more mills built, then in one year, under the increase that we have added to the bill, the increased consumption will just about equal the entire importation of foreign goods into this country. Does that look like closing down industries or destroying business? The increase in imports involved in the estimated imports for the year 1912 is $10,746,000 for two years, or $5,373,000 per year. We are estimating for 1912, and we give the figures here for 1910. So we divide the amount of increase, and what does it show this annual increase in imports to be? It is only 14.14 per cent of the annual increase in domestic consumption, or sixty-eight one-hundredths of 1 per cent of the consumption of 1910. Less than 1 per cent of the American consumption of goods for 1910 is all that this bill will bring in the way of increased competition with American manufacturers for one year.

Mark this: In 1900, under your own, or the Dingley, law, the imports were 5.14 per cent and the exports were 5.86 per cent of the domestic consumption of that year. In other words, you were exporting a little more cotton goods to foreign markets than you were importing. But in the year 1910 we find that the drastic restrictions of the extremely high rates, intensified by the Payne law, have cut the imports down to 3.83 per cent, and it seems to have had a corresponding effect on the export trade, because we find that the exports were only 3.83 per cent of the domestic consumption of that year.

Now, to what conclusion does this lead us? The percentage of the estimated imports to consumption in 1912 under our bill is 4.18 per cent. Under your Dingley bill the imports amounted to 5.14 per cent. In 1900 you allowed 5.14 per cent of the American consumption to come in as imports. Did you destroy the industry? Did you close up the mills? Did you throw labor out of employment? But that is more competition than we produce by this reduction of duty.

Mr. HILL. Is not the gentleman's argument fatally weak in this respect, that in one case he compares the different rates under two systems, both of which are protective, whereas now he is comparing a protective system, under which mills can run, with a purely revenue system, under which they can not run?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My figures which I have given you do not relate to the tariff at all.

Mr. HILL. No; but they relate to imports, which will be affected very much by the tariff.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I mean the statistics of the Bureau of the Census, showing what the manufacturers produced, and of the Bureau of Statistics showing what the imports are.

Mr. HILL. Is it not true they were making a comparison in one case between two systems that are protective in their rates, and in this case the gentleman is making comparisons between a protective rate and a rate from which he says protection has been absolutely eliminated?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What difference does that make?

Mr. HILL. All the difference in the world.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It depends on the imports. The imports are what I am talking about.

Mr. HILL. Of course. And would not the imports be enormously greater, so that it would be impossible for the mills to run under the system?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the mills will not be shut down under the system, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] agrees with me that they will not be shut down unless the imports come in and shut them down; and I say that, according to the estimates of the statistician, the additional imports will only be a little over $10,000,000, or less than 1 per cent. Now, suppose I have made a mistake. If you double it, it will only be 2 per cent. Is that going to endanger your manufacturing interests seriously?

Mr. HILL. I do not agree with the statistician.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If we double the imports, we would double the revenue, and if the gentleman's theory is correct this bill will produce all the revenue the Government needs before we get through.

As I stated before I was interrupted, the imports under the Payne bill only amounted to 3.83 per cent, and the percentage of estimated imports to consumption in 1912 is 4.18 per cent under our bill. That is, ninety-six one-hundredths of 1 per cent less than the corresponding percentage for 1900, and only thirty-five one-hundredths of 1 per cent more than the corresponding percentage for 1910.

We let in under this bill thirty-five one-hundredths of 1 per cent more goods than you do under your bill to-day. Now, you expect that to destroy the American mills, to destroy American industries?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. For a question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does not that imply that just that per cent of cotton manufactures is made in foreign countries rather than in the United States?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I stated in my argument, the American consumption will within three months catch up with that increased importation. It would only be necessary for the mills not to shut down nor to discharge labor nor to increase their capacity for three months, and the increased consumption of cotton goods, as shown by the statistical rates, would catch up with the increased imports and affect the mills in no way.

If you bring in double the amount of imports that this report says would come in, we would catch up in six months by merely waiting for the increased American consumption. If you multiplied it by four, we would catch up in a year, not through the mills lying idle but simply by not increasing their productive capacity. Multiplying the quantity of imports by four would produce forty millions of revenue.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. As against the figures the gentleman has just presented, I present the statement that the mills in his own section have not been successful in the last two years and that the business is stagnant.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have heard that from those gentlemen; but you must understand that they are doing business under the inquitous Payne bill, which you wrote on the statute book, and not under our bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In the gentleman's own State during the last five years of the Dingley bill the factory establishments increased 81 per cent, from 1,800 in 1904 to 3,400 in 1909.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not responsible for the Republican panic. I recognize that not only cotton mills but woolen mills and iron and steel factories are at a low ebb in this country, that labor is out of employment and the wheels of industry are standing still, but you can not point to this bill—not yet on the statute book—and you can not point to this side of the House as being responsible for it. You have been in control of this Government for 16 years, and if political conditions and the enactment of laws have brought about that result the responsibility rests at your door and not ours. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But was not all well until the Democratic victory brought fear into the mercantile world?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, my friend from Pennsylvania is exceedingly humorous sometimes. You would not expect it, but it lies imbedded in his heart and appears on the surface on rare occasions. [Laughter.] Now, the gentleman says that the fear of a Democratic House and the fear of the legislation of a Democratic House, with a Republican Senate and a Republican President, have thrown the people of the United States into a panic. Ah, may the shades of all the great Presidents rest on the White House to-day with that accusation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will acknowledge that there has been very clever and wise leadership on the other side of the House up to the present time, but will the gentleman be serious with me for a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On the question of the production of cotton which I raised a moment ago, and referring to the report submitted by the gentleman, is it not true that in the Southern States there is produced fully two-thirds of all the world's production of cotton, and that there is a virtual monopoly of cotton in the United States?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The census figures show that the Southern States produced about 60 per cent of the world's mill supply of cotton in 1910.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, is it not a fact that the bulk of all cotton is manufactured in foreign countries to-day, and that while there is no duty on raw cotton, either imported or exported, there is still an advantage to foreign countries in obtaining cotton free from the United States to compete with the higher priced overhead charges and the higher priced wages paid in the cotton factories in the United States?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think that has very little to do with it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think it has all to do with it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will answer the gentleman's first question. So far as the cotton itself is concerned, the foreign buyer certainly gets it no cheaper than the American buyer. He also has to pay the transportation charges abroad, and to that extent is at a disadvantage. Now, as to what effect this has on the world's production, I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] that I am not in favor of putting manufactures of cotton on the free list. I am in favor of levying a revenue tariff, as we do in this bill; but if we should put cotton manufactures on the free list it could not very greatly increase importations for a number of years, if at all, and there is a reason for it. The world's production of raw cotton for mill consumption in 1910 was 19,171,000 bales of 500 pounds each. The cotton mills of the world consumed that year only 18,321,000 bales.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Of which the United States produced how much?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The United States in 1910 produced 11,483,000 bales net weight. I am referring now to the world's supply. In 1910 the world produced 19,171,000 bales of raw cotton and the mills consumed 18,321,000 bales. In other words, the production in that year was only 850,000 bales more than the quantity consumed by the mills that year. According to census figures, the world's production for the two years of 1909 and 1910 amounted to 35,947,000 bales, net weight, and the quantity of cotton consumed in the mills of the world during the same period was 36,940,000 bales; or, in other words, the mill requirements drew on the reserve stocks during these years to the extent of about 1,000,000 bales. Evidently the requirements for cotton are fully equal to the supply.

I am speaking not of the productive possibilities of the United States or of the world, because under normal weather conditions and with the improved agricultural methods now being generally promulgated the future possibilities of our own country in cotton production are difficult to forecast, but I am using the actual results of the last few years, which are responsible for the prevailing high prices of raw cotton. Under these actual conditions which have prevailed in the years cited I want to ask if you build more mills in the immediate future, can you feel that you are going to get the cotton to manufacture? We produce in this country 60 per cent of the world's supply. The price of cotton since I have been a Member of this House has increased from 4 or 5 cents to 15 or 16 cents and at one time it sold as high as 20 cents a pound. That is an enormous increase in the price to the farmer, brought about by the demand catching up with the supply, and yet the farmer has not been able to materially increase this supply. He can not get it out of the ground—he has been unable to produce it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has he not restricted it in some instances?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, there have been efforts in the past to make combinations, but when cotton goes to 15 cents a pound, nothing will restrict its production except nature itself, and in recent years nature has restricted the production of the cotton crop. If you build new mills you can not get cotton to go into them. Therefore, you can not make the people of Asia and Europe and Africa go naked because you want to pour a flood of cotton goods into this country. There is but a restricted amount of goods that you can manufacture. Those people must be clothed, and cotton cloth, because it is the cheapest, is the cloth with which it is done.

As I said before, if you put everything in this schedule on the free list, you could not very greatly increase the importations compared with the American consumption, expressed in percentages, because you can not get the cotton with which to make the goods without depriving the people of Asia, Africa, and Europe of cotton goods. So that all this hue and cry to the effect that lowering the tariff is going to destroy the American industry is merely a scarecrow erected by the manufacturing interests of this country, because at times they want to use this high, protective-tariff wall to exact unreasonable profits from the consumers. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has indulged me, and I thank him. He himself raised the question of transportation, and it is one of the serious questions. He spoke of transportation charges that had to be paid by those foreign countries which take southern cotton. Is it not a fact that it is cheaper to transport cotton over the ocean by way of Savannah than to transport it into Rhode Island or Massachusetts by rail?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And to that extent is not the American manufacturer at a disadvantage?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will turn to page 442 of the report, he will find the ocean freight-rate figures, and he will see that there is not much difference in the ocean rate from Savannah to Liverpool and from Savannah to New York or Boston. In the main it is in favor of the American cotton mills.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman, but there is one more question I want him to answer before I quit. Would it not be better, especially in view of our difference of opinion in regard to the establishment of factories in the United States, if we actually levied an export duty on cotton with a view of protecting the people of the United States and of building factories here so that we might manufacture for all the world, instead of having the rest of the world manufacture and ship their goods to us?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to my friend that of course he is well aware that the Constitution of the United States prohibits us from levying export taxes. This side of the House really believes in the Constitution and is not in favor of destroying it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am merely presenting it as a matter of policy in the protection of our own people.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has cited many statistics, many of them for 1910, some of which I supposed are obtained from the Census Bureau in advance of the publication. Are they all included in the report?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They are included in the report.

Mr. MANN. If they are in the report, I will examine the report and find the figures. I am very much obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is one other point upon which I wish to touch before I close and that is the question as to whether the labor of this country is seriously affected by a tariff reduction. In the main, the best way to decide that is by referring to actual pieces of goods and the labor cost—but before I do that I want to call to your attention the amount of wages that the Census Bureau shows in this cotton-goods industry. The wages for 1909, as reported in 1910 in the cotton-goods industry amounts to $129,768,000, in round figures. The value of the product, as shown in the same report, is $616,297,000. Now, dividing the wages into the value of the product, we find the average wage paid to the cotton-goods industry is $349 per workman or workwoman. In other words, the wages, according to this census report, are 21 per cent of the value of the total product. The gentleman will find the figures to which I refer on page 6 of the report. The figures are for 1909, the census of 1910.

Mr. MANN. What were the figures on wages?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The exact figures?

Mr. MANN. The census of 1910—what were the figures on wages?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The amount of wages was $129,768,000. That is the total wages.

Mr. MANN. Does that include salaries?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They do not include salaries.

Mr. MANN. What does it include as to the industries? Of course I have a report from the Census Office estimating the wages and salaries for 1910 at $192,000,000. There is quite a discrepancy between that and the gentleman's figures.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman they cover simply cotton goods as classed by the census. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois these figures embrace some goods not included in Schedule I and exclude others which are in this schedule.

Mr. MANN. That does not include hosiery and knit goods?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; it does not.

Now, that is the average wage that the cotton-mill employee gets out of it, and I want to call attention to another fact: The cotton industry during these 10 years enjoyed great prosperity, until my friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] passed his bill two years ago—one of the most remarkable eras of development and prosperity that the cotton mills ever experienced. But did they give labor any of that profit? I have seen it claimed by employers of labor in cotton mills that they have increased the wages, but somehow or other the census figures do not bear them out. The census of 1880 showed that labor got 21.9 per cent of the value of the product, or nearly 22 per cent. The census of 1890 showed that labor got 24.6 per cent. The census of 1900 showed that labor got 25.6 per cent of the value of the product. But the census of 1910 showed that labor got only 21 per cent of the value of the product. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Would not that be due to the cost of the goods, and the price of the goods, due to the high price of cotton?

Mr. MANN. And the grade of goods?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, it would depend upon the price of the goods. But I am talking about the percentage they get.

Mr. HILL. It is a question whether it is $1 or $2. The ad valorem for wages would be reduced as the cost went up.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no, my friend. You say what per cent they get of the value of the product when you talk about protection, and I am telling you how much of the cost value of these goods goes to labor, and the census report shows an absolute reduction so far as that report is concerned.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks the percentage of the cost of goods that goes to labor is the determining factor in the wage paid to labor?

Mr. HILL. Certainly not.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to say it is admitted to be a factor.

Mr. WEEKS. Has it anything to do with it, as a matter of fact?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Absolutely. It is a guide. When you find a great industry is paying a certain per cent of the cost of production to its labor it goes to show whether the wages are increasing or diminishing.

Mr. WEEKS. But does not the gentleman recognize the fact that improved methods would reduce the cost of production and thus show a less percentage paid in wages?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That may enter into it to some extent, I agree. But I am not through with that proposition. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to a few selected items of goods, plain goods that everybody uses, in connection with this labor question. Mr. D. A. Tompkins, of Charlotte, N. C., a manufacturer of cotton goods, submitted this proposition, which I will read to the committee: Plain sheeting, 36 inches wide, 6.15 yards to the pound—on that the cost of production, the material cost—that is, cotton—would be 2.86 cents.

The labor cost amounted to 0.73 of a cent and the general cost is 0.71 of a cent. What did that amount to? The total cost of that yard of cloth amounted to 4.3 cents. Of that the material cost, the cotton, amounted to 66.5 per cent. The labor cost amounted to only 17 per cent, and the general cost 16.5 per cent.

Now, I have stated the source of my information—a cotton manufacturer. What protection do they get under the Dingley bill? On that piece of cloth, worth 4⅓ cents, you gave them a protection of 2½ cents under the Dingley bill. On that same piece of cloth you gave them the same 2½ cents protection under the Payne bill. What did that amount to? It amounted to 58 per cent of the general cost, though 66 per cent of the general cost was cotton, and the foreign manufacturer had to pay as much for the cotton as the American manufacturer did. The general cost was only 16 per cent of it. Yet you gave the American manufacturer a protective tariff, levied on the American people, of 58 per cent. That tariff amounted to 342 per cent of the labor cost. In the name of labor you levy this tariff, and then put a tax amounting to 342 per cent of the labor cost on this yard of sheeting, when the labor cost in the sheeting only amounted to 17 per cent, and the balance of the profit that you extract from the American people you put in your pockets. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You do not put it in the pockets of labor.

I will now call your attention to another piece of cloth and show you its cost.

Mr. WEEKS. May I ask the gentleman a question there?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. WEEKS. What was the number of the goods which the gentleman has just referred to?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Plain sheeting, 36 inches wide, 6.15 yards to the pound. I will say that the figures were transmitted to me on May 30, 1911, by Mr. D. A. Tompkins, a cotton manufacturer of Charlotte, N. C.

Mr. WEEKS. In this case I suppose the cotton manufacturer's figures are to be credited?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no reason to doubt it. Mr. Tompkins does not agree with me, for he belongs to your school of protective tariff, but he would not mislead us on the figures.

Mr. PAGE. I think that side of the House ought to take the figures of Mr. Tompkins. He stands with them on this question of the tariff.

Mr. MANN. That is one southern man who shows his good sense, anyhow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to call the attention of gentlemen on that side to this piece of blue and white checked gingham, 27 inches wide, 6.33 yards to the pound. It is the gingham that poor people wear—the people who earn their daily bread by daily toil. I take this statement as to the cost of production from the American Wool and Cotton Reporter, which, I believe, agrees with that side of the House on the tariff. The cost of the material in that yard of gingham amounts to 4.95 cents, or 70 per cent of the total cost of the product. The labor cost is 1$\frac{7}{10}$ cents, and is only 16 per cent of the total cost of the product. The general cost is 1.02 cents.

Mr. SIMS. What is the tariff on that?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The tariff under the Dingley bill was 3.75 cents per square yard.

Mr. SIMS. And what is it under the Payne bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Under the Payne tariff it is the same. That tariff amounts to 53 per cent of the total cost of production, notwithstanding the fact that 70 per cent of the cost of production is the cost of the yarn, and the labor cost is only 16 per cent. There you have 53 per cent tax on the goods and only 16 per cent of the total cost is for labor. If all of that tariff went to labor, it would amount to 341 per cent of the labor cost. Three hundred and forty-one per cent of the labor cost you tax the American people in the name of labor and then give them 16 per cent of it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Did Mr. Tompkins furnish information as to what this cloth was sold for by him?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not have it. I have not given the selling figures; I have given the manufacturing cost figures.

Mr. MANN. I noticed that the gentleman did not give the selling figures, and I thought it very strange that the information was furnished as to the cost without information at the same time as to the selling price.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, you gentlemen are fearing the cost abroad.

Mr. MANN. I am trying to get information.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course the productive cost is that with which we should make this comparison. I know you gentlemen like to figure your profits in when you levy a tariff, but if you want to know what share labor is, you want to figure it on the cost of production, and that is what I have given you.

Mr. MANN. I asked the gentleman a simple question, and he has not answered it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, yes, I did; I said I did not have the selling price of this cloth.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to say that the last piece of cloth—not the sheeting Mr. Tompkins sent me, but the gingham, the cost of which came from the American Wool and Cotton Reporter—I want to say that the price at which it sells was furnished me. It was 8 cents per yard to the jobber. The price to the consumer was 10 cents per yard, as shown by the report.

Mr. MANN. How much profit did that show for the manufacturer?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Illinois is able to make the estimate. These figures have nothing to do with my argument. The cost of production, as shown here, amounted to 7.07 cents. He sold it to the jobber for 8 cents per yard.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman said some time ago that the profit the American consumer had to pay was a certain amount, which was three or four times the labor cost, because of the tariff, but under the figures the gentleman has given it does not seem to bear out that assertion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I have said a number of times to gentlemen on that side of the House, when the industry to-day is in the throes of failure produced by the Payne tariff bill, the figures may not do so. You passed a bill here that raised the taxes so high that the American people quit buying, and the merchant was overstocked with high-priced cotton goods a year ago or more. He could not dispose of them, and now he refuses to buy. Of course the prices to-day are at the bottom. I do not contend that they are not. You want this tariff to levy an enormous profit on the American consumer in years like 1907, when they did get high prices from everybody.

Mr. MANN. I understand that the gentleman, when he submits his figures, selects those that are favorable to his side of the case, but pays no attention to those that bear on the other side.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Nothing at all in what I have said would justify that remark.

Mr. MANN. Then I withdraw the remark. The gentleman however, repudiates or does not take into consideration the selling price as any basis at all. He offers the figures, and then says they should not be observed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not blame the gentleman from Illinois for dodging this labor argument.

Mr. MANN. I am not dodging it; I am getting at it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman from Illinois knows that the only basis on which his party has stayed in power with this high protective tariff is an appeal to the labor vote of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And it has never been warranted, has never been justified, by what you have done.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will find out whether it is false or true. If the gentleman from Alabama ever has his chance, the labor people will understand that he would destroy the wages of labor in this country. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. By increasing the amount of imports coming into this country thirty-five one-hundredths of 1 per cent of the Amercan consumption you would destroy labor! [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. The gentleman hangs an effigy himself and then shoots at it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the gentleman to allow me to proceed.

Mr. HILL. I would like to inquire as to the piece of cloth that the gentleman has shown and which he says sold at 8 cents and which cost 7.7 cents according to the figures he has given. That leaves three-tenths of a cent of profit to the manufacturer.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was speaking of the manufacturer's cost.

Mr. HILL. Eight cents is the manufacturer's selling price?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I said the manufacturer's cost of this piece of blue gingham was 7 cents and seven one-hundredths of a cent.

Mr. HILL. Oh, I understood the gentleman to say 7.7 cents.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; it is 7 cents and seven-tenths of a mill.

Mr. HILL. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman is correct, and I have no doubt of it, the tariff on a yard of cloth is 330 per cent greater than the total labor cost of the yard of cloth. That being true, what use is there in waiting for a Tariff Board or anybody else to ascertain the difference in the cost of labor here and abroad, before we lower such a tariff as that?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Why, I say to my friend that there are some gentlemen who could not possibly see it, even if the Tariff Board should happen to report in our favor.

Mr. SIMS. Then there is no use of waiting for such a report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. KENDALL. What elements enter into the general cost that the gentleman refers to?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can not answer the gentleman's question. These figures are not mine, and I gave my authority. One was from Mr. Tompkins and the other was from the American Wool and Cotton Reporter, both Republican sources, and both connected with the manufacturing interests, and I presume their figures are correct.

I have here a piece of madras shirting. In these madras goods is where you got in your mercerized joker. In this particular piece the Payne rate and the Dingley rate happen to be the same. This is an Austrian madras shirting, 34 inches wide. The material cost amounts to 7.57 cents, which is 63 per cent of the total cost. That is for the material. The labor cost is 2¼ cents, which is 19½ per cent of the total cost. The general cost is 2.06 cents, which is 17.2 per cent of the total cost. The total manufacturer's cost is 11.96 cents or, in round figures, say, 12 cents.

Now, what did you tax that? You taxed it 4¾ cents under the Dingley bill and 4¾ cents under the Payne bill, and what did it amount to? It amounted to 40 per cent of the total mill cost or 204 per cent of your labor cost in that particular piece of goods. There it is. In the name of labor you have levied a 40 per cent tax that is 204 per cent of the total labor cost in that piece of goods, and yet we cut your tax in two. Cutting it in two, there would still be 100 per cent under our bill—100 per cent of the labor cost levied. With this bill levying a tax of 100 per cent of the labor cost, do you think the laboring man at the mills is going to be seriously injured if the manufacturer wants it there to protect labor, as he says he does? That is the whole proposition.

I have a number of other illustrations of this kind which I will put in the RECORD, with the consent of the House, but I will not now take up the time of the House to present them.

The following analyses of the manufacturing cost of cotton cloth, finished, have been secured from the sources stated in each instance and are believed to be representative and reliable. The cost figures are given for running yards in widths as made, while the duties are on the basis of square yards:

Plain sheeting, 36 inches wide, 6.15 yards per pound—unbleached.

[Submitted by Mr. D. A. Tompkins, under date of May 30, 1911.]

	Cents.	Per cent of total cost.
Material cost (cotton)	2.86	66.5
Labor cost	.73	17.0
General cost	.71	16.5
Total	4.30	100.0

Dingley duty, $0.025 per square yard.
Payne duty, $0.025 per square yard.
Payne duty, 58 per cent of total cost.
Payne duty, 342 per cent of labor cost.

Colored stripe voile (plain weave), 26¼ inches wide, 10.6¼ yards per pound.

[American Wool and Cotton Reporter, June 29, 1911, p. 992.]

	Cents.	Per cent of total cost.
Material cost (yarn)	5.92	65.5
Labor cost	1.78	19.7
General cost	1.34	14.8

Dingley duty, $0.0475 per square yard.
Payne duty, $0.0475 per square yard.
Payne duty, 40 per cent of total cost.
Payne duty, 204 per cent of labor cost.

There is case after case of actual goods where the tax you levy varies from 180 to 390 per cent of the labor cost under your bill. There is one other fact to which I desire to call attention before I close. I said that there were certain articles that you transferred from Schedule I to Schedule J. Gentlemen criticize us for making mistakes. I hope that the Ways and Means Committee made a mistake when they made this transfer. Under the Dingley bill banding, belting, binding, cords, ribbons, tapes, webs, and webbing were in Schedule I, taxed at 45 per cent. The Payne report did not say anything about transferring them, but I find that those articles were transferred to Schedule J and showed up there by the change of classification with 60 per cent tax instead of 45. We have now simply transferred them back to Schedule I, where they belong, and put 25 per cent tax on them instead of either the 60 or 45 per cent tax.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. MANN. They are under paragraph 349 of the Payne law?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; and they are in paragraph 13 of this bill.

Mr. MANN. But it does not include the other items under paragraph 349 in this bill, such as laces.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No. Laces were in that paragraph under the Dingley bill. The Payne bill did not transfer it. We simply bring back those articles which were transferred to Schedule J for the purpose of raising the rate on them.

Mr. MANN. Then, as I understand the gentleman, he takes out of paragraph 349 of the Payne bill those articles which were first put in the paragraph out of old Schedule I.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is right. I do not know why it was done. I presume they were those articles which are mainly composed of cotton and rubber, and as the Payne law was largely increasing the tax on rubber goods, I presume those articles were transferred to Schedule J, so that they would be correspondingly increased in accordance with the tax levied.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. In not making any provision in this bill for cotton laces, embroideries, and things of that kind at the same time that you transferred part of these items out of paragraph 349, was it the gentleman's idea to take up this schedule by itself later?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that laces and embroideries in that schedule are composed of both flax and cotton. I am rather inclined to think the better classification would be under Schedule I, but as they are made of both linen and cotton, they are now in Schedule J, and the committee concluded to leave them there until we reach that schedule. I simply want to say this in conclusion: The total value of cotton goods that are consumed by the American people, including laces, to which I did not refer in the figures I gave awhile ago, amounts to $839,000,000. The claim is, as I understand your position—and if I am wrong, correct me—that you levy a tax at the customhouse to protect the labor and necessarily to maintain the price of the goods. In other words, I understand your position is that to levy a tax at the customhouse is to increase the price of the goods in the home market. If I am mistaken about that, I will be glad for some gentleman on that side to deny it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is contended that encouragement in the way of duties levied at the customhouse increases domestic production, which creates competition, which reduces prices in the United States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If it did not put up the price, why do you object to foreign competition that might put down the price? According to your theory, do you not levy those taxes at the customhouse for the purpose of preventing foreign competition, so that you can put up the price?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That certainly is not my understanding of the purpose of levying the tax at the customhouse, and I speak in behalf of an industrial district.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then the gentleman denies that levying a tax at the customhouse affects the price? The gentleman has been asking me questions all day. Now let him answer that question. Do you deny this proposition, that levying taxes at the customhouse does affect the price in the American market?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It would if we had no competition here and there was an absolute monopoly of the American market. But there are numerous establishments manufacturing cotton goods, and there are numerous establishments manufacturing woolen goods, and the protection at the customhouse encourages not only a higher wage rate here, but competition that results in reducing prices.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How do you get a higher wage here if you do not get a higher price? Do you pay a higher wage on a lower price?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. We could give you hosiery at a lower price to-day if you gave us more protection. That would induce competition between home manufacturers, which would reduce prices.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, I will say to the gentleman everybody will recognize that your tariff policy has bankrupted the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No; the Treasury reports do not indicate it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to have the gentleman answer me that one question. Does the tariff that you levy at the customhouse affect the price of the goods in the American market? Does it, or does it not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It may in some instances.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In the main, does it?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It helps us to keep up a higher standard both of wages and production in the United States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will not the gentleman, or some other gentleman, answer me this question: Does the tariff affect the price?

Mr. HILL. I will. I will answer the question in the Yankee way by asking another question. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will not yield to my friend from Connecticut for that purpose. [Laughter.]

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman think——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I decline to yield, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from Connecticut who will ask me a question when I am trying to get the gentleman from Pennsylvania to answer one. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes. I would like the gentleman from a mill town in Pennsylvania to tell me whether the tariff affects the price of the American goods or not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To the consumer?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The price of the American goods. Leave out the word "consumer."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have in my hand a most historical document, the report of the gentleman's committee, one of the most valuable contributions to the history of this country. [Laughter.] On page 5, in describing the trend of cotton development in the United States, it says:

Before the Revolutionary War, England discouraged the manufacture of cotton in the colonies, because it was prejudicial to home manufactures; but now the colonists were free not only to grow cotton, but to manufacture it as well, and they were not slow to avail themselves of the opportunity. The embargo act of 1808 quickened the industry, while the War of 1812, which practically cut off all foreign supplies, still further stimulated it, so that at that early date the industry was firmly established.

That is, before the Revolutionary War, when they were encouraging the development of cotton in this country, they protected themselves against foreign manufacture. We are simply adhering to the rule which the gentleman described so eloquently in his report.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then the gentleman does say that it affects the price?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I say, it does to this extent, that it affects it for the welfare of the people; that it raises the standard of living; and that competition will follow always, when we are able to manufacture in this country in more factories than one—when they are not controlled by one combination.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman has answered my question. It took him some time to get around to it, but I knew when he did he would admit that a tax levied at the custom-house affects the price, and falls on the backs of the American people.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would much rather have the prices of goods high than to have the wages of labor low.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In conclusion, I want simply to say that under the Payne bill you levy an average of 56 per cent. Now, if only one-half of that 56 per cent of tariff that you levy is effective, and if half of that tariff is not effective, do you not think you had better agree with us and cut that tariff in half? But if not more than half of your present tariff is effective in protecting American labor and American industry, what is the burden you have laid on the American people? Twenty-five per cent of the American consumption, $839,000,000, amounts to $209,810,000. What is the result? In order that you may get, on the entire schedules affecting cotton goods, a revenue of $38,000,000, which of course includes Schedule I and part of Schedule J, you have placed a burden on the American people of at least $209,810,000 for the benefit of the American manufacturer, which he does not return in the way of increased wages to American labor. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CULLOP). Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman object to discussing the schedules for a short time and giving the reasons for the changes in the schedules? I ask this for information. Of course, the schedules under the Payne law appear to me to be quite complicated.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman desires me to discuss that proposition, I will do so. The changes in this bill conform in the main to that section of the Payne bill, except that we have transferred these articles and that we levy an ad valorem instead of a specific rate. Now, as to cotton cloth, we change the classification entirely.

Mr. MANN. That is what I am asking about.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will explain that if the gentleman desires. In the Payne bill the classification is the most complicated in the entire tariff system. It is divided into a classification according to count of threads first, for goods having not exceeding 50 threads to the square inch, then for goods having between 50 and 100 threads to the square inch, and so on, between 100 and 150, between 150 and 200, from 200 to 300, and, finally, for cloth exceeding 300 threads to the square inch—6 classifications. Then each of these classes is subdivided into three—for unbleached goods, bleached goods, and goods that are dyed, colored, stained, painted, or printed. Then there are further subclassifications according to weight and value, and on top of that there is a special provision for mercerization; so that the ordinary citizen can not read the bill and determine how much the taxes are, because they change so much, and because it is all an effort to make a practicable set of specific rates.

We change the classification entirely to an ad valorem rate, and that ad valorem rate rises and falls with the value of the goods. We found that what would be a revenue rate on high-class goods would be a prohibitive rate on certain classes of heavy, coarse goods. When we found that one general, uniform rate on cotton cloth would not accomplish what we desired—revenue rates all the way through the schedule—we determined on a classification of our own. The number of cotton yarn in cotton goods is a fact uniformly known to the trade for 100 years or more. No. 1 cotton yarn is 840 yards in length to the pound. As you increase the number of the yarn, multiply the increased number by 840, which results in the number of yards per pound. For instance, in a pound of No. 400 yarn you get 336,000 yards, or 190 miles long. So that is a fixed fact.

In the examination of the imports and exports there seemed to be a dividing line along about the class that carried from 100 to 150 threads to the square inch, and as these cloths mainly used yarns below No. 100, we fixed the classification there.

We found that there was another distinction according to the unit value of goods and the amount imported in cloths running from 150 to 200 threads to the square inch, and if we fixed our second classification in thread, not on the number to the square inch, but on cloths containing no thread in excess of 100 and above No. 50, we would fall into the second classification.

And then if we provide that all cloth which is made of yarn above 100 shall be in the third classification, we get in that class all the high-grade goods. I have also a comparison of fabrics with regard to the number of threads to the square inch and the number of the yarn, prepared for the Ways and Means Committee by the Bureau of Standards, which I will print in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman give some one illustration, so that we may have some idea on the subject?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say, if I understand the gentleman's question, that this is a statement sent me by the Bureau of Standards. They state, for example, that cotton duck is made with yarn ranging from 6s to 18s; canton flannels and sheeting, from 8s to 24s. Fine damasks are made with yarn from 24s to 40s; piqué from 24s to 80s; lawns from 30s to 70s; and Swiss muslin from 60s to 140s. There are a number of others in the statement which I will print in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman give us a statement as to the number of threads under this bill and the number of threads under the Payne law? Can he give us some statement showing how they run?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. According to the Bureau of Standards, No. 1 yarn would make cloth in which there would be 14 threads to the inch; No. 5 yarn would show 31 to the inch; No. 10 yarn, 44; No. 15 yarn, 54; No. 45 yarn, 94; No. 80 yarn, 125; No. 100 yarn, 140; No. 120 yarn, 153; No. 145 yarn, 169; No. 200 yarn, 198. These, as I understand from the bureau, are not absolute, but only approximations to the actual results.

This new classification of cloth, I will say to the gentleman, is not a difficult one. The Bureau of Standards has stated that the number of the thread can be easily ascertained by an ordinary expert. More than that, I hold in my hand an advertisement of a machine now used to determine automatically the number of threads by taking a piece of yarn and running the index of the machine out on one side of the balance, hanging the yarn over another on the other side, and moving along until it balances, when you are shown the number of the yarn.

Mr. MANN. That is a machine they now use in ascertaining the number of threads.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; the only thing is that the threads run in much the same classes, and our classification is merely to determine in what class they come by the highest number of the threads found in the cloth.

Mr. MANN. I wondered what the reason was why you change from the method of counting the number of threads to the inch and fixing it on the number of the thread.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Because after discussing the question in the committee, consulting the Bureau of Standards, and talking with men in the cotton business, we concluded that it was a much simpler classification than the other.

Mr. MANN. Was that the opinion of the Bureau of Standards?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes. Their letter shows the practicability of this method.

Mr. MANN. I think that they are very high authority myself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The letter of the Bureau of Standards will appear in the RECORD:

BUREAU OF STANDARDS,
July 18, 1911.

Hon. O. W. UNDERWOOD,
Chairman Committee on Ways and Means,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Complying with the telephone request of Mr. Roper, clerk of your committee, I am pleased to confirm herewith the information furnished him over the telephone by Mr. Douty, of this bureau, in response to questions relative to the analysis of cotton yarns and fabrics:

"1. Can a textile analyst determine the count of the yarn used in the manufacture of a cotton fabric; and if so, with what accuracy can it be determined?"

An analyst can readily determine the count of yarns used in the manufacture of any fabrics. The accuracy with which this can be done depends upon whether the count is to be given for the yarn in the finished condition or in its gray condition previous to weaving. If the count in the finished condition is desired, it can be determined accurately within one-half count for warp yarns and one count for the weft or filling yarns. If it is desired in the gray condition previous to weaving, the possible accuracy will depend largely upon the nature of the fabrics. Fabrics having very slight amounts of loading or finishing materials upon them can be analyzed with an accuracy of one count for the warp yarns and two counts for the weft yarns. Fabrics having large amounts of loading or finishing materials which have to be extracted before they are returned to the gray condition can be analyzed with an accuracy of two counts in the warp yarns and from three to four counts in the weft yarns. The difference in the degree of accuracy attainable in the determination of the counts of the warp and weft yarns is not due to the variation in the method of observation, but to the wider variation and the lack of uniformity in the yarns used as filler or weft yarns.

The lower accuracy attainable in the determination of the counts of the yarn in its original or unwoven condition is due to the difficulty in extracting completely the loading or finishing materials without altering or injuring the nature of the fibers in the yarn. The determination must also be corrected for the "take up" of the yarn in the process of weaving. This introduces another possible source of error. In any case the accuracy attainable is much greater than that demanded by the weaver from the spinner furnishing the yarn for a given fabric. A variation of four counts either way from a specified count is usually accepted in the trade.

"2. Is the process of analysis to determine the yarn counts a difficult one, and does it require a high degree of skill?"

It is not a difficult operation, and can soon be acquired by anyone having a fair knowledge of laboratory operations and sufficient experience to have acquired a fair amount of manipulative skill. To be reliable, it must be performed carefully and under uniform conditions of humidity and temperature, and the results should always be accompanied with a statement of the relative air humidity and temperature at which they were obtained.

"3. Of what does the operation consist, and what apparatus is necessary to perform it?"

The determination is usually made by cutting from the fabric by means of a die or templet a square having its sides coincident with the yarns.

On very uniform fine fabrics a square 1 inch on the side is frequently used, but this is in general considered too small to give very accurate results. The Bureau of Standards used 4 inches square, and upon coarse and uneven fabrics prefers even larger pieces.

After the test piece is cut out the warp and weft yarns are carefully unraveled from the fabric until a definite length is obtained; their combined weights are determined upon an analytical balance, capable of weighing to a tenth of a milligram and, if the count is desired in the English system, the number of hanks (1 hank=7 lays of 80 turns, of 1⅛ yards each=840 yards), which will weigh 1 pound, is computed from these values.

In the metric system the yarn count for cotton is the number of 1,000-meter hanks required to weigh one-half kilogram, or 500 grams.

If the count for the gray yarn is desired, it is necessary to boil the fabric in a solution suitable to remove the loading and finishing material, without injuring, and proceed as above, correcting the results for the change in length due to the "take up" of the yarn in the process of weaving, which, of course, depends upon the nature of the weave.

"4. Would it be difficult to secure the services of men who would be capable of making yarn-count determinations?"

There should be no difficulty in securing reliable assistants, capable, with proper instructions for a short period, to make accurate yarn-count determinations. Graduates from the Lowell Textile School or the Philadelphia Textile School should be available at moderate cost.

"5. Would it be possible to carry on the work at any of the custom-houses?"

It would. The ports of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia have men qualified to make the determination. Any other ports receiving a sufficient number of importations to require the entire services of one analyst could be easily provided with properly qualified assistants. Ports of entry receiving an insufficient number of importations to require the services of an analyst continuously could easily be provided for by requiring the collector to take the requisite samples and forward them to the Bureau of Standards for analysis. The Bureau of Standards is already equipped and has a trained personnel qualified to do the work.

If desired, the Bureau of Standards would undertake to develop standards and forms necessary to secure uniformity in all the custom-houses, supervise the apparatus used to assure its accuracy, and make check tests in the same manner that it is now doing for sugar importations.

"6. Will you furnish a list of ordinary fabrics which are manufactured from yarns within the following ranges of yarn counts:

"(a) 1s to 50s.
"(c) 102s to 200s.
"(b) 52s to 100s.

The limits which you have indicated include so many fabrics which would fall within two classes that it is much clearer to indicate limits of the most common counts used in ordinary commercial fabrics as follows. Those, of course, are only approximations.

Ducks	6s to 18s
Denims, jeans, ticking	8s to 20s
Canton flannel, sheetings	8s to 24s

Any further assistance which we can render you will be gladly supplied.

We shall be glad to have members of the Ways and Means Committee visit our textile laboratories, where we can show the apparatus used and explain more in detail the methods of making analyses and tests.

Respectfully,

E. B. ROSA, Acting Director.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the questions which the gentleman from Alabama asked the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] as to the effect of the tariff on the increased cost of products. I would like to ask if the committee expect the reduction in the price of cotton goods will be gauged by the reduction of rates of duty in this bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not understand the question.

Mr. HILL. Will the future price of manufactured cotton goods be reduced from the present price according to the change in the rates of duty which the committee have provided?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to my friend from Connecticut that you could not, in the main, reduce the present price of cotton goods in this country, brought about by the panic conditions of to-day, without destroying the industry. I am not contending that under these very low prices, when the American manufacturer is overstocked with goods and has to sell at cost, that this bill can be fairly tested.

Mr. HILL. Then the gentleman does not contend——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, wait a minute. Let me answer the question. What I contend is that when we get back to normal conditions, and possibly it may require the election of a Democratic President to bring the country back to those conditions [applause on the Democratic side], when we get back to normal conditions and the manufacturers of the country have an opportunity to really make some profits, then this bill will produce the results we predict for it.

Mr. HILL. As I shook my head affirmatively when the gentleman suggested the election of a Democratic President, I am even willing to concede the impossible to get an answer to my question. The gentleman used a piece of cloth in illustration on which the profit was 10½ per cent to the manufacturer. Does he expect a reduction of 25 per cent by reason of the establishment of this rate of duty? Does he expect a reduction in cost of the products of the cotton manufacturers of the United States proportionate to the changes in duty which his committee has recommended?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that he must not make his own estimates and then put them into my mouth.

Mr. HILL. I will leave out the estimate, and I will ask this plain question——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I gave you the manufacturer's cost.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman expect a reduction in that cost or in the present selling price of manufactured cotton goods in case the bill which he has recommended goes into effect cutting the duty 25 per cent ad valorem?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly not in this low-priced class of goods, or goods that are being forced on the market at panic prices to-day. Our purpose in offering this bill is this: I know there is a great reduction in the cotton goods to-day, due to panic conditions, but when we return to normal times you can not use the enormous tariff tax that you have to-day to exact unjust and enormous profits from the American people as you have been doing for years.

Mr. HILL. Taking the question as a whole, and the effect of the reduction of duties by cutting them in two, is the result of that to be a reduction in the cost or in the selling price of manufactured cotton? Now, I have a right to an answer to a fair question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly; and you shall have it. It will be in a number of goods.

Mr. HILL. It will be a reduction——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, wait a minute. I have the floor, and I must answer the question.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman yielded the floor to me in order that I might ask him a question; but it does not make any difference. I would like to have an answer.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. For instance, take your mercerized goods, on which two years ago, by reason of this tax, you increased the cost to the consumer 25 per cent. We will bring that down.

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Because you erected a wall that forced it up.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman declined to let the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] go into details in his questions, and I am asking him a plain, square, business question, which the cotton industry of this country wants to have answered by this committee. Will the effect of cutting these duties in two be to reduce proportionately, not in a particular case, but by and large, the prices of the products of the cotton industry in this country?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To cut the cotton industry half in two?

Mr. HILL. To cut the duty in two.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You want to know whether that will cut——

Mr. HILL. I asked, Will it affect proportionately the selling price? Will it have that effect if this bill becomes a law?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, let me see if I get the gentleman's question right. We cut the duty half in two——

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And you want to know whether the effect will be to cut the selling price in two?

Mr. HILL. No; will it have the effect of cutting the selling price 25 per cent? There is a vast difference between cutting the price in two and cutting the percentage of duty in two. If the reduction is made of 25 per cent on the duty, will it reduce the selling price 25 per cent?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the selling price of goods is governed by the law of supply and demand.

Mr. HILL. Under a protective tariff as well as under a revenue tariff.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. To the extent that the protective tariff will let the natural law of supply and demand operate. Of course, a protective tariff can dam up the supply. Now, to the extent that goods will come to this country, I stated in my argument it will affect the price of the highly protected goods that you have shut out, and it may affect the price materially.

Mr. HILL. Proportionately to the rate reduced?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not always. I did not say proportionately to the rate reduced. The gentleman knows that.

Mr. HILL. Does it not work one way as it does the other——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I said in proportion to the supply and demand or the increased importations of goods, and not in proportion to the rate.

Mr. HILL. I understand from the gentleman it will have the effect of lowering the price by reducing the rate of duty?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It will in a great many cases; in some cases it will not.

Mr. HILL. Let me supplement that question by this: Will it affect the cost of the cotton out of which it is made, or the labor which makes it, or the general expenses under which the two are put together? The gentleman gave us the cost of his samples. Which part of that cost will it affect?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will tell the gentleman——

Mr. HILL. It has got to hit somewhere.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will wait—the place it will affect goods will not be where the prices are very low, due to panic conditions of to-day, but when good times return it will prevent your stockholders from putting the enormous profits, which they would not give to the labor, into their pockets, as they have in the last few years. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HILL. That is a fair answer; but when the gentleman says "your stockholders," I desire to say there is not a cotton mill in my district, so that does not apply to me.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I meant on that side of the House.

Mr. HILL. I want to ask the gentleman fairly: Did the committee consider where the reduction would come, which he says would affect the price in the future, whether it would come on the cotton, or on the labor, or in a reduction in the general expenses?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have just explained to the gentleman. And now, Mr. Chairman, I want to yield the floor, having had it for three hours. In my judgment the reduction will come on the swollen profits when we return to prosperity. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HILL. I am talking about the cost of the goods. Mr. Chairman, I will say that if the gentleman does not give me an opportunity to answer him now I will take the opportunity to answer him later.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question right now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. What is that?

Mr. PAYNE. It is about an interruption that I made a few moments ago, where the gentleman from Alabama made a gross error.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will correct the manuscript. I have been on my feet now for three hours. I will correct any error I may find in the manuscript when it reaches me.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York was on his feet seven hours on one occasion two years ago, and the gentleman from Alabama is much younger than he. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman made a statement that is absolutely untrue—a statement that was cheered by that side of the House. I want to ask him to strike that out.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If there is anything that is not correct, of course I would like to correct it.

Mr. PAYNE. In the colloquy I referred to this language occurs:

> Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman is mistaken. I have heard that gentlemen on that side allowed their statistician to prepare the Payne bill for them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]
>
> Mr. PAYNE. I did not understand the gentleman's remark.
> Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say that the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee sat around the table in the consultation room and fixed the rates themselves.

Now, of course the gentleman realizes that this is very unfair to me, and gives the opportunity for misguided persons at some time in the future to repeat that story. There is not a word of truth in it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Allow me to say to the gentleman that I saw him come in here when the Payne bill was under consideration and say that he had been misled by experts in making the report. I do not mean to imply that the statisticians wrote all the papers, but did not the gentleman come in here, after the Payne bill had been reported, carrying a provision in reference to mercerization?

Mr. PAYNE. In reference to what?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In reference to mercerization of goods? And did he not come back here and tell the House that he had been deceived by the men who wrote that report?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes. I was deceived by a Member of the House, who was engaged in the manufacture of cotton goods, and who was an expert on the subject, and that gentleman was mistaken. But that gentleman did not make the bill or the rates. We put a duty of a cent a yard on mercerized goods. Afterwards I found out in regard to it that we should not have put on any such duty, and then the bill was in conference, and the Senate had agreed to a cent a yard.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Did not the gentleman say at that time that he had made this tax or imposed this duty on mercerization at the suggestion of some expert that he had before his committee?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, I think the gentleman has gotten onto the question of the tariff on the yarn. It was put in there, not in the House, but in the Senate, and on the conference report the gentleman explained it fully, and the gentleman from Alabama will find that the gentleman from New York did not do it on the suggestion of the expert, but that he himself discovered it on cross-examination of the experts, and cut down the duty proposed by them to the Senate, not proposed to the gentlemen in the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Let me ask the gentleman this question: When this transfer was made of bands and binding and belts out of rubber goods from Schedule I to Schedule J, did not the gentleman from New York make the transfer?

Mr. PAYNE. I think that matter was dealt with on a Senate amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; the gentleman is mistaken. That change or transfer was made in the House bill. I want to know if the gentleman made the transfer or whether the experts on the committee made it?

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman never said the experts on the committee made it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then the gentleman was himself responsible for the transfer?

Mr. PAYNE. On the evidence presented, yes. The gentleman from New York acted on evidence, not like the gentleman from Alabama, who acts without evidence. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PAYNE. I yield, Mr. Chairman, an hour to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS] is recognized for an hour.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, the tariff question is now, ever has been, and ever will be—until Congress proceeds to establish the various schedules along scientific lines, based upon the reports of an able, unbiased, unprejudiced, and nonpartisan Tariff Board—simply a question of "you tickle me and I'll tickle you." From the very foundation of this great Government down to the present time a close study of the history of the tariff reveals that, as a whole, it represents the wants of the people of the various sections of the United States only in so far as the Representatives of the various localities are able to give and take in its final completion.

A decent respect for the great statesmen whose leadership has marked the advancement of this Nation impels me to state that, with no disrespect for their personality, their honor, or their patriotism, do I take issue with their legislation, but with the methods by which this legislation was attained—the faults and frailties of a "system"—in which, to beat the game, the special interests "have played both ends against the middle." [Applause.] Many of the gentlemen of the Southern States wax eloquent over free trade and tariff for revenue only, and denounce most venomously the very thoughts of a tariff for protection, and plead with briny tears for free wool and a general reduction of the tariff on everything produced elsewhere than in the South, but throw up their hands in holy horror when it is even suggested that some of the staple products of the South, as well as lemons and other citrus fruit, be placed upon the free list. Why, my friends, a wail goes up from Florida to California, from Democrats and Republicans alike, that shakes this very building when such a suggestion is even offered. Some of the Representatives of the New England States will plead just as zealously for free wool and free hides, but when it comes to removing or reducing the tariff on manufactured goods, such as are important to the life of their respective localities, they will walk up and down the aisles of this House and shout of the disaster that will surely follow such action.

The lumbermen from the East, the West, the North, and the South, regardless of party affiliations, suddenly become protectionists when you mention to them the lumber schedule. They will stand for free trade or a tariff for revenue only on any product, raw or manufactured, just as long as you protect their individual interests. The shoe man will cheerfully swallow free hides, but he can not "stomach" free shoes. The fishman will vote for free beef and free seines, but he will not stand for free cod. The machine man is willing to vote for free oil, but he will not stand for free machinery; and so it is and will continue to be just so long as the present system of tariff "tinkering" is in vogue. For my part I am a protectionist, and firmly believe that the principles of protection are symbolic with progress and prosperity, but at the same time I can not close my eyes to the fact that in our rapid strides as a commercial and industrial Nation we have signally failed to maintain a just and equitable system of tariff legislation. The principles of a protective tariff are all right, but in our wholesale system of revision the question of "give and take" has been worked to such an extent that the more powerful influences have secured for themselves protection at the expense of their less fortunate brethren. Many industries in our country have been protected from infancy and they have prospered, until now they have become giants in strength and more powerful—in some respects, at least—than the Government that created them. I am a firm believer in competition, whether domestic or foreign, but believe that foreign competition should only begin where our domestic competition ends. The present high cost of living, to some extent, may be directly traced to the stifling of competition under the protective policy which has been carried on according to political preferment. A tariff should be based upon reason and logic, rather than upon a haphazard, "go-as-you-please" proposition of "you protect my industries and I'll protect yours." The tariff should be based upon the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad. It should be so devised as not only to protect us against foreign competition, but to protect us against home "robbery."

The tariff in principle is intended and calculated to mean higher wages for the laboring men of this country. Without it it simply means the bringing into competition of our workingmen at the prices they receive with the competition of foreign workingmen at the prices they receive, and it does not take much of a philosopher to tell how disastrous to our workingmen the result would be. I have heard in this Chamber men closely affiliated with labor organizations claim that a protective tariff does not benefit the workingmen at all and never has protected them. I take issue with anyone who takes that position. It does not stand to reason that our manufacturers can by paying higher wages to their employees compete with foreign manufacturers who pay less. If we want to open up our industries in competition with the established industries of foreign countries we must expect in the final analysis for the price of labor to seek its level. It certainly will not be contended by any reasonable man that such action will increase wages. If it were not for the demands of the people of this Nation for higher wages and a higher standard of living than are enjoyed abroad, we might then seriously consider free trade or tariff for revenue only. I am frank to admit that the people of this Government are becoming restless, and well they might, because in the scale of civilization they hold a high place and are beginning to think and act for themselves. It was this restless, unsatisfied, and independent spirit that made itself manifest at the recent election and resulted in a complete change in the political complexion of this House. They knew that something was wrong, and while they had no reason for believing that the Democratic Party would better the general condition of things, or remedy the defects, they certainly gave a rebuke to the "tariff makers" in whose hands the guidance of national affairs had rested for many years. Is it any wonder that the people, the common people, "the men behind the guns," the people who do things in times of peace as well as in times of war, should become restless when they see on all sides of them the inequalities of existence—rich men becoming richer day by day, wealthy men becoming wealthier day by day, and the poor man, be he producer or consumer, becoming poorer day by day.

When firms are becoming companies, and companies becoming corporations and associations, and corporations and associations are becoming monopolies and trusts, and competition, the very life of business and so essential to progress, becoming throttled and stifled under unlawful combinations in restraint of trade, while the cost of living soars skyward; when millionaires and multimillionaires are building palaces, furnishing them with the finest tapestries of foreign manufacture, decorating their walls with the costliest paintings of foreign artists, building theaters in their mansions for foreign operas, and purchasing outright in the open market dukes and other high-titled "bipeds" for their daughters, while men, women, and children by the thousands, crowded together in tenement houses and hovels in our great congested centers, piteously beg and cry for coal, bread, and raiment during the cold, chill spells of winter, and plead for food and ice water during the scorching summer season; when millionaire women, dressed in foreign-made custumes worth thousands upon thousands of dollars and adorned by jewels of costly make, give "pink teas" to foreign-bred poodle dogs, and squander thousands of dollars for their entertainment and comfort; when thousands of children of tender years, without proper sustenance, are toiling their young lives away in the workshops, bake ovens, and "sweatshops" of our great manufacturing establishments for starvation wages, and in the meantime neglecting the educational opportunities the Government affords. [Applause.] When each incoming ship is laden with the pauper labor of foreign lands to take the places of our own workingmen on the farms and in the mines, mills, and factories at still cheaper wages. And watch, if you will, this foreign element on "pay day" stand in line for hours at the banks and post offices, climbing all over each other in their efforts to send their money home. The trouble is that many of our great monopolies ask protection from foreign competition ostensibly that they may be able to pay higher wages to the workingmen, and then, after obtaining protection, import foreign laborers by "hook and crook" and bring them into competition with our own laborers on our own shores. [Applause.]

In other words, they "double shoot the turn." It is these inequalities, fellow Members of this House, which make the American people restless. Our wholesale tariff revision has resulted in such protection to the favored few as has made possible unlawful combinations of all sorts of commercial and industrial enterprises in restraint of trade. We are a commercially mad Nation. We have grown with such rapidity and to such proportions that we have not stopped to contemplate the havoc and ruin that is being wrought along our paths of progress. A protective tariff is all right; without it conditions would be worse than they are at the present time; but as a sane, enlightened, and progressive people, we must stop long enough to contemplate the madness of our folly. Let us deal with the tariff fairly, impartially, and from a nonpartisan standpoint, and have in mind only the question of the greatest good to the greatest number. This can be done, and done in such a way as not to check our material advancement. Let us pass laws or, rather, enforce the laws that are now upon our statute books, and bring into our business life once more and for all time to come competition in our industrial and commercial life. Let our flag be emblematic of our Nation's greatness. There is nothing in the flag itself. It is a mere piece of cloth, bearing on it certain stars, stripes, and colors; but there is much in what it represents. It is emblematic of our Nation's history, a Nation conceived in the purest thoughts of our forefathers, who came to these shores from a foreign country to escape the tyranny of a foreign Government conceived in the royal rights of kings. Let us with unfaltering faith pledge our time and talents to the institution of that form of government for which it stands. Let us equalize and systematize the burdens of taxation that we may jointly enjoy and experience the objects for which we are taxed. I would not favor the taking away of any of the good things of life from the more fortunate, but rather would I add unto the less fortunate the good things they have not. I repeat, sirs, our principles of government concerning the tariff are the ones that have made this Nation great; are the ones that have built up within our own lands industries that challenge the admiration of foreign powers; are the ones that have crossed the seas and awakened the spirit of progress in foreign lands, whose people have long been held in servile bondage; are the ones that have made America the Mecca for the oppressed of all nations.

But, let us now that we have builded well and become safely intrenched, under these principles, not permit the exaction of too high a toll by the "special interests" which thrive and grow fat under a preferential tariff measure. What then would I remedy in our tariff system, you ask? I would simply hold the schedules down to the pledges of the Republican Party and be guided by the report of an unbiased, unprejudiced, impartial, and scientific Tariff Board, and when the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad was in favor of reducing the tariff the reduction would be made, and when the difference was against a reduction and in favor of raising the tariff the raise would be made. We can not do any other way and accomplish practical and common-sense results. Many of our Democratic brethren on the other side of the House some months ago favored this particular mode of dealing with the tariff, and are so recorded in the records of the House. But now, presumably acting upon the assumption that the President of the United States, backed up by his party, would carry out the wishes and demands of the people in regard to tariff revision and do it along the lines suggested, they hold a secret caucus, and after adopting a code of rules for their guidance, turn loose the "steam roller" and begin to roll down the so-called tariff wall without a survey and without chart or compass, hoping in this way to merit the confidence of the people who placed them in power of this branch of Congress. They act upon the idea that the people have confidence in their statesmanship and will accept any old kind of "tariff tinkering" as a solution of the situation. Not so; the people of the United States want a tariff, and a tariff for protection, but one that operates as beneficially to one man as another, and one in which all the people share in proportion to what they give, be it brains, brawn, or capital. We can not forget that only a few years ago the people became restless, elected a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress. Free trade was resorted to in many commodities, and the restless masses soon found themselves divided into Coxey's armies marching toward Washington appealing for work, food, and raiment.

The newly elected President and Congress started out to do what this Democratic House is doing to-day: To work out a tariff measure without a chart or compass and to appease the people by a "makeshift" of a measure without "head or tail." Home industries were paralyzed. The wheels of progress suddenly stopped; the smoke from the chimneys of great factories was no longer to be seen; the furnaces cooled off; the mills and factories closed down in our country, and our workingmen tramped the streets; the mills and factories of foreign countries increased their employees and worked overtime. What was the trouble? It was the result of an ill-advised and ill-prepared tariff bill. [Applause.] We need protection, and the people of the country demand it, but ask that it be made uniform in its operation, and that no favoritism be shown. If the Tariff Board, when once it reports, can show that a reduction in every imported article can be made, and the scale of wages and our mode of living be preserved, then will I cast my vote for each reduction. Until that board reports and the majority continue to urge promiscuous reductions without reliable data, I reserve the right to vote for the protection of those industries of my own section, and, like modern Puck, exclaim: "Everybody for himself, and the Devil take the hindmost."

The great trouble with our protected industries has been that as soon as they are once safely protected and the wheels of machinery are set in motion, and the producer and consumer begin to exchange their products, raw or manufactured, certain "special interests" begin their work of cornering and combining and fixing their own scale of wages and our standard of living, without regard to the profits they make under a preferential system of protection. Not only do they combine and choke out competition and horde up millions on watered stock, but they pay inadequate wages to the men, women, and children whose labor makes the "wheels go round," and thus lower our standard of citizenship.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have a quorum to hear this speech, which is a very interesting one, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to say about it, but I would rather speak to a few men who appreciate my remarks than to a large number who do not. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's speech is very interesting, and I think it ought to be heard by more Members on the other side of the House.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. I intended to give it to the leader to take home with him.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Cox of Indiana). Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of no quroum present?

Mr. MANN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Fifty-six Members present; not a quorum. Under the rule the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CULLOP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had found itself without a quorum, caused the roll to be called, found 161 Members present, and he reported the following as the names of the absentees:

The SPEAKER. A quorum being present, the committee will resume its session.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, diverting one moment from my remarks, I desire to say that I feel very grateful to these gentlemen who have voluntarily come in here to hear havoc and ruin that is being wrought along paths of. progbe guided by a report of an unbiased, unprejudiced, impartial, the closing portion of my speech. [Laughter.] It is certainly a high tribute.

Whenever a scheme is devised whereby the whole people can share in the profits of our industrial and commercial enterprises, proportionately to what they contribute to the success of the enterprise, and when competition can not be unlawfully stifled, then could we raise the tariff to high heaven and not worry much over what might happen? Until then we must meet conditions as they exist and studiously and industriously strive to better them. My study of this question leads me to the conclusion that the so-called Payne-Aldrich "tariff wall," while it may and doubtless does preferentially benefit certain industries, is not so much to blame for the conditions that exist as what goes on within that wall. Let the Government pass laws sufficiently strong to prevent unlawful combinations of capital in restraint of trade; laws that will prevent the stifling of competition; laws that will equalize the burdens of taxation; laws that uniformly act upon all the people regardless of their station in life; laws that will give to the poor man the same consideration that is given to his more fortunate brother; laws that will protect the men, women, and children who work at hazardous callings, and compensate them for loss of life and limb; laws that will compel sanitary surroundings for the ones who are obliged to labor; laws that will regulate transportation; and last, but not least, gentlemen, give us judges who will enforce and uphold these laws and make their application uniform to all people regardless of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, then will the spirit of discontent disappear and the people unite as never before in a record-making era of peace and prosperity.

The tariff question is a great big question. It has many dips, spurs, and angles. Whether you view it from the standpoint of the gentleman from New York, Mr. GEORGE; the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD; or the gentleman from New York, Mr. PAYNE, you will find that the viewpoint of each is the basis of his own best thought predicated upon his study and experience, and voicing what he honestly believes to be the best interests of his countrymen. One believes in free trade, one in tariff for revenue only, one in a protective tariff, but the fact remains that with a population of over 90,000,000 of people, with a history of less than seven score years, the United States ranks at the head of the great world powers. It has had a protective tariff, a touch of tariff for revenue only, and a touch of free trade, but the greatest strides the Nation has ever made has been under the protective system. I repeat, a protective tariff is all right, but it is the abuses that grow out of the protection thus afforded to which we most object. We need spend more time in passing laws that will effectually curb and hold in check some of these "old infants" we have nursed with zealous care these long years. We hear much said about our being able to successfully cope in our various lines of industry with all nations. True, we can, but we can not hope to do so and maintain our scale of wages and our standard of living. We would be obliged to go out of business or else sooner or later come down to their scale of wages and their standard of living, but God forbid that we are ever obliged so to do! [Applause.]

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nevada yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CALLAWAY. The gentleman's statement was that the tariff raises the general wage rate. I do not understand how a tariff can raise the general wage rate. I understand how a tariff can stimulate a certain business.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. The gentleman is evidently one of those who came in voluntarily to hear the closing portion of my speech, and I do not feel like spending so much time on one in harmony with what I am saying.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I only wanted to understand the gentleman's proposition.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. CALLAWAY. How can a tariff raise the general wage rate or protect it?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. It raises it in the same way; it protects the labor of men in this country far above the wages of the laboring men of any other country on earth ever since it has been upon the statute books.

Mr. CALLAWAY. That does not answer my question.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. It raises the wages and protects them by keeping out of this country the goods and manufactured articles that are produced by foreign labor and foreign laborers.

Mr. CALLAWAY. How does the gentleman explain the fact that Germany has about the same wage rate with a protective tariff as England has under free trade?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. That is owing to the geographical position of the two countries. England at the outset had a protective tariff in reference to many manufactured goods which are now in competition with other countries and was one of the first to place protection upon cotton products.

Mr. CALLAWAY. How does the gentleman explain that the wage rate of England did not shrink when it went on to a free-trade basis?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. That is a question which is open to debate. I think the gentleman is wrong. I am talking with reference to American labor, and if the gentleman will listen patiently I will take up that question later. Now I decline to yield further at this time.

One of the most promising signs of the times is the independent spirit which manifests itself in the deliberations of our legislative bodies, especially on this side of the House. I am sorry I can not say as much for the other side of this Chamber. On that side the Ways and Means Committee represents with wondrous unanimity the views of the various Members. It is sometimes difficult to tell which is the greater, the Democratic caucus or the Committee on Ways and Means. Sometimes one dictates the business of this House and sometimes the other. There is little or no individuality or independence noticeable in the deliberations on their side. If it manifests itself at all, it does so in secret caucus or in committee meetings, and the world will never know the nature of those humane manifestations. Perhaps it is a good thing for the country that it does not. Nor is the independence and individuality of the members of the Republican Party confined entirely to the manifestations of its Congressmen. It is signally manifest in the President of the United States, the honorable William Howard Taft, who during the first two years of his administration has done more to advance the moral and material conditions of the Nation than any other President has ever accomplished in a full term of office.

His term has thus far been characterized as an administration of actual accomplishments along the lines of broad, patriotic statesmanship, and the lead he has taken in his work for good government, progress in trade, world-wide peace, and the restoration to the whole people regardless of sect, creed, or color, their rights as American citizens, marks him as a leader whose leadership inspires confidence and whose policies are worthy of our most serious consideration. His administration has been simple and unostentatious. As a President he has shown the courage of his convictions, and when the future historian records his work it will stand out as one of the strongest, sanest, and most progressive administrations in the annals of American history. [Applause.] We realize that as conditions change from time to time it becomes necessary to revise the various schedules of the tariff, but we do believe that it is foolhardy for us to attempt a revision without adequate and reliable data upon which to base our revision. A revision when made should be made upon conditions as they exist and not be made simply for political expediency. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. No, Mr. Chairman; I can not yield further.

Now, gentlemen, and especially my friends of the Democratic persuasion, you have introduced a bill here that affects cotton and the cotton industry, and before you have done with it you may regret your action. You make a reduction from 48 per cent to 27 per cent. Cotton is the most widely used staple in the world to-day. Its culture is as old as Phœnicia, and the Chinese, Japanese, Arabs, Saracens, Hebrews, and Phœnicians all knew of its textile value and uses. It is cultivated over a wide expanse of territory. The Southern States of the United States, all of British India, Egypt, Asiatic Russia, central China and Japan, Brazil, Mexico, Peru, Paraguay, Colombia, Venezuela, and Central America. Cotton was grown on American soil in the year 1653. In the seventeenth century England found cotton a strong competitor of a strongly intrenched woolen industry, and its manufacture being made highly profitable through various inventions it received protection and encouragement from the British Government. It might well be noted here that Great Britain, as far back as 1870, with an annual crush of only 200,000 tons, took the lead in producing cottonseed oil. Since that time, however, the demand for the products of cotton seed has increased, until, according to the census of 1910, there were in the United States alone 810 establishments engaged in producing cottonseed oil. It has been contended that the United States, because of its vast area adapted to the production of cotton and the quality of the cotton itself, is in a class by itself, and needs no protection of whatever kind or nature for the cotton industries. Let me call your attention to the fact that the area of foreign lands adapted to the growth of cotton is on the increase, and that when those areas with increased facilities for handling cotton and its products are once awakened, and modern machinery is installed, the effect will be felt to such an extent that the principles of protection will sound mighty good to the genlemen who now urge this measure.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. I will say to my insistent friend that I will be glad to talk the matter over at my office, but I must decline to yield now.

Mr. CALLAWAY. I live in a cotton country. I want to ask how a tariff would protect us cotton growers?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. I must decline to yield.

The cotton factories of the South, as well as those of New England, will feel the sad awakening. Time was when the grain-growing sections of the United States stood in a class by themselves, and when the ships of traffic were laden with the products of American farms bound for foreign ports. What has happened? Our population and its needs have grown. Other great agricultural sections have been opened up in various parts of the world and bid for recognition. Our grain-growing sections have found that while the home consumption was growing greater, the fields of production in other lands were being developed and that the foreign markets were being supplied by other competitors. High prices for consumed articles inevitably results in a general broadening of the field of production, and when that field is broadened beyond the borders of our own country, it means that we must either protect our own industries and thus fix our own standard of wages and living or compete with the conditions that exist abroad and accept their scale of wages and standard of living. It was that one question more than any other that gave me some concern over the question of the reciprocal agreement with Canada, but we find that country is so nearly like our own, and so situated geographically, that it will not result in any change in our standard of living or in our wage scale, while it will enlarge our supply of natural resources and especially of our food products and the other necessities of life without substantial injury to any of our producing and manufacturing classes.

A careful perusal of the columns of the papers during the past year shows that at the present time there is a marked depression in the cotton industry. Various factories have suspended operation, and many of them have reduced their output. It is a serious question to be considered. Any question that affects a million and a quarter of people, directly or indirectly, must needs cause us to be cautious. In fixing the cotton schedule, gentlemen, we should have at hand all the data to be had. We have, as I have said before, in no far-distant future, great foreign territories of cotton-producing lands to bid for recognition and cotton mills to enter into competition. The South has made rapid strides of progress during the last few years. It was a protective tariff that made the Southern States what they are to-day, and, in fact, I firmly believe that the great masses of the South, if all other questions could be eliminated and forgotten, would vote for protection almost to a unit. Remember, my friends, that every dollar's worth of manufactured goods shipped to a foreign country is a direct benefit to American workingmen, and that every dollar's worth of foreign-made goods imported into this country is a direct injury to American labor.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, I must respectfully decline to yield at this time.

You reply that we do not import very much from foreign countries. We can see imported articles everywhere. Why, my friends, every day while this House is in session you can see Members on that side of the House—when not talking free trade—lounging in the Democratic cloakroom, dressed in imported goods, smoking imported cigars, and lighting them with imported matches. I hold in my hand now a box of matches handed me by one of my Democratic friends and colleagues. It is labeled "Made in Sweden." Every such match that is scratched on the seat of an imported pair of pants is a blow struck at American labor. [Applause and laughter.]

The immensity of our cotton crop, according to the Department of Agriculture, is simply astounding. For many years cotton ranked fourth in value among crops, being exceeded usually by corn, wheat, and hay. But in those days the price of cotton was very low. The crop of cotton for 1910 was probably worth in lint and seed $900,000,000 at the farm, or more than the corn crop was worth in any year prior to 1901, or more than the wheat crop was ever worth. The cotton crop, including seed, was worth more in 1910 by $129,000,000 than the crop of 1909. Now, only one farm product outranks cotton, and that is corn. Just think of that. Ranking next to corn, and the Department of Agriculture states that the value of the corn crop for 1910 can not be reckoned at less than $1,600,000,000, a sum sufficient to cancel the interest-bearing debt of the United States, buy all the gold and silver mined in all of the countries of the earth in 1909, and still leave the farmer a little pocket money. A serious matter, gentlemen. Do you not think it would be wise to wait the report of the Tariff Board? Remember this board is working diligently and intelligently and will be ready to give us reliable data by the time the regular session convenes. And I have yet to see the first man on either side of this House to point to one thing against the personnel of the board. All will acknowledge that individually and collectively they are a high-class set of men, with reputation and character beyond reproach. For my part I would like to have reliable data at hand now. Data not gleaned from some campaign textbook, or from every Tom, Dick, and Harry who has an ax to grind, but data that can be verified by facts and figures and which is indisputable. The Democratic Party is on record as regards the tariff. It stands for a tariff for revenue only. Those are the words of your great leader, the estimable gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. In other words, if it were not for the revenue derived from a tariff measure, the Democratic Party would unhesitatingly declare in favor of free trade. How do you like this free-trade business, laboring men? How do you like the Democratic proposition of bringing into competition with you the laboring hordes of the entire world? Do you want to compete with the pauper, "coolie," and convict labor of Europe and Asia? I think not. You have about enough of that sort of competition at home now. You would rather push off the gangplanks and protect yourself against their immigration into this country. Yes; you would rather vote also for a policy that will protect you against their competition both at home and abroad. For my part I shall vote for more stringent immigration laws whenever I have the opportunity, and shall also vote against their entering into competition with American labor anywhere or in any manner or at any time.

In establishing the various schedules with regard to revenue the Democratic Party proposes to do so by the old "give-and-take" process of tariff making, which has been the curse of every tariff measure ever passed in Congress. As a party it refuses to vote for a permanent Tariff Board, and thus take the tariff out of politics. It is high time for the American people to rid themselves of their hysteria and settle down to sound, safe, and sane business methods in national affairs. The Republican Party proposes to revise the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill, but at the same time in its revision to maintain a protective tariff sufficiently high to protect its industrial and commercial industries, and to maintain a wall, if you please, high enough and broad enough to prevent the laboring men of this country from being brought into competition with the coolie labor of Asia and the cheap pauper labor of Europe.

Mr. BERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. I can not now.

Our laboring men, while underpaid to-day in many of our great manufacturing centers, are much better paid than the foreign laborers of any country on earth, but I would be untrue to the people of the State I represent if I did not conscientiously cast my votes for what I believe to be their best interests. [Applause.] The Republican Party proposes to protect them not only from foreign competition, but from injustice at home. Our laboring men are the ones in whom the perpetuity of our institutions rests. They are entitled to better compensation and safer and more sanitary surroundings in which to work, and stronger laws to compensate them for loss of health, life, and limb. They are entitled to shorter hours of labor, that they may receive and enjoy some of the blessings that flow from a free government. They are the ones that multiply, rear children, and make a race of people worth while. Pay them for their work better wages and give them shorter hours, and they will raise not only more children, but the standard of our citizenship. [Applause.] I know of no better place to begin bettering the conditions of our working people than in the various departments of the Government. Members of Congress, you know what it costs to live in this city, and tell me, anyone who can, how the subordinate Government employees in this city are able to exist upon the salaries they receive. They are wholly inadequate for the time employed and the labor they perform. Yes, go, if you will, to some of the great Government buildings in this Capitol City, and you will find young women—mere girls—and women of mature age working for the Government, the greatest Republic that ever flourished since the birth of time, for wages that are inadequate in these days of high living, to scarcely hold body and soul together, huddled together in insanitary surroundings like so many sheep, and forced to stand upon their feet during long tedious hours, and for a compensation not much in excess of that paid to the humble charwoman in the "Bowery" district of New York. I hope during this term of Congress to see wages raised throughout the various departments of the Government, especially in the subordinate positions. I hope to see the employees in the different departments given more commodious quarters and more sanitary surroundings in which to labor. Some of our buildings are a disgrace to the Nation.

I have pointed out these appalling conditions and inequalities of existence to show some of the reasons that impel the American people to seek redress. But one thing is certain, and that is there will be no material progress, local or national, along any line until conditions settle down once more to a normal basis. No one knows what may happen next. Capital has sought its hiding place. The country has been upside down long enough. Let us by our legislation inspire confidence so that every public man will not be looked upon as a thief and a scoundrel, and every rich man as a mercenary rascal and a wretch, and justice as a purchasable commodity. Great wealth honestly amassed if properly directed, as is done in many cases by our richest men, may be the means of accomplishing for the welfare of the entire people that which otherwise they never would have known. Great railroads thread and interlace this country; telegraph and telephone lines defy the elements, annihilate distance, and bring into closer relations the people of the entire world. Encourage all such enterprises, but so legislate that the great benefits they offer shall not become a means by which their power is used to stamp out and forever crush our individuality. One trouble with our great aggregations of wealth is found in their artificial parentage. Corporations are made up of individuals, but the individuals act collectively and thus become the acts of an artificial person, whose methods lack the guidance of an individual conscience, and whose ultimate aim is too often simply the attainment of great wealth.

It takes something more than wealth and splendor to make a nation great. A great nation is one in which the light of truth, knowledge, and liberty shines as brightly through the chinks and crevices of the poor man's cottage as through the windows of the rich man's palace. [Applause.] It is one in which patriotism, that natural passion which leads men onward in their lofty aims to serve their country, issues in unison from the hearthstones of an enlightened and united people.

Let us pave the way for the restoration of that confidence. Let us obtain proper data from the Tariff Board, revise the tariff bill wherever it is necessary, and let it stand for awhile. No government can long prosper where its policies are changed with every breeze that is wafted in. Time comes and goes. Men come and go. Times change as well as measures. Men change. Principles never change. The principles of this great Republic are founded upon truth, equality, and eternal justice. Let us adhere to those principles and so legislate for the whole people as to forever perpetuate our boasted institutions. Let us with an unfaltering faith renew our allegiance to them, and prove our allegiance by deeds rather than words, so that when our opportunities for the initiative shall have ended we may feel that we have at least accomplished something worth while. [Applause.]

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nevada yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, if I have any time left, I would be very glad now to answer any question as long as the House desires to ask them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes remaining.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I take it from the gentleman's speech that he does not want any tariff reductions or changes until after the report of the Tariff Commission. Is that true?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. That is absolutely true, understanding, as I do, that the Tariff Board will be prepared to give us the data when we meet at the regular session, and inasmuch as the bills that have been introduced affecting the tariff by the Democratic Party do not go into effect until after that board reports. You have not drawn a bill on that side that goes into effect until January, 1912, and the Tariff Board meets and reports, according to themselves, before that time.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask the gentleman if he voted for the reciprocity bill?

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. I did.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to know why he did not wait until the Tariff Board furnished him information regarding the farmers' product in this country before he voted for that measure? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. I was satisfied with the investigation that was carried on by the President and those in charge of the Government affairs of this Nation. I was satisfied with their leadership, and I believe I was right. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman from New York desire to use any more time at this time?

Mr. PAYNE. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama, I have only one gentleman on my list who is prepared to speak either to-day or to-morrow, and I should prefer to let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I would like for the gentleman to be able to even up the time on the two sides of the House to-morrow, and I will yield some time at this time.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman will only desire one hour, and the gentleman can have the rest of the time to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, after the weighty discussion of the tariff to which we have just listened I am not going to attempt to throw any light upon that great economic question. The few minutes assigned to me I intend to devote, under the latitude of general debate, to some views in regard to the proposed memorial to Abraham Lincoln. In the closing days of the last session provision was made for an expenditure of $2,000,000 for such a memorial. The law is limited in its scope to a memorial or monument in the city of Washington. I understand that a number of propositions have been presented to the commission embracing various locations and designs for the proposed memorial. To my mind the most sane and appropriate suggestion is one that unfortunately does not come within the scope of the law—that is, a memorial national highway from the city of Washington to the battle field of Gettysburg. I have therefore to-day introduced a bill to amend the law by providing that the commission might consider and report upon such a plan, together with such negotiations as may be necessary to secure consent of the States of Maryland and Pennsylvania and their respective subdivisions if required, and the design for beautifying the highway with proper memorial arches, ornamental bridges, and so forth.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BORLAND. If I have the time I will be glad to do so.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the gentleman understand that the selection of this memorial is going to be settled soon—prior to the convening of Congress, let me say, in its regular session?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the gentleman expect to have his bill, or would he like to have his bill, enacted into law at this session?

Mr. BORLAND. I will answer that question in this way. It has been announced through the press that the Fine Arts Commission has recommended to the memorial committee, of which President Taft is chairman, a location on the Potomac Drive. It is further announced in the press that the President proposes to convene the committee next week to consider this report. The report must, when agreed upon by the committee, be submitted to Congress for its final ratification. It is not important, in my mind, whether this bill of mine is considered at this session or not. The purpose of introducing it and speaking to it at this time is to get the matter in some form before the people and before the committee, in order that they may know that some plan of that kind might be added to their duties.

Mr. NORRIS. As the gentleman says his particular proposition is outside of the limits of the law, this committee could not follow his suggestion unless Congress enacted that into law. Now, if they are going to decide before the next regular session, it will be necessary to enact the bill into law at this special session.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; I recognize all those difficulties.

Mr. NORRIS. The difficulty comes right here, it seems to me. The Democratic Congress has laid out a legislative program, and they have not included this, so the gentleman should rather make his argument before the caucus than before the House.

Mr. BORLAND. I recognize all these difficulties, I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska, but in the limited time I have I can not attempt to straighten them all out. I can only call attention to the main plan.

Mr. MANN. In that connection, I have no opportunity to participate in a Democratic caucus.

Mr. COX of Ohio. Oh, yes; we will let you in.

Mr. MANN. Well, I may apply. Would gentlemen on that side object to informing us, so we may know what let-down there has been in reference to legislative propositions for this session?

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I only requested 10 minutes of the leader upon this side of the House——

Mr. MANN. I will ask the gentleman from New York to give you 10 minutes more to answer——

Mr. BORLAND. And I will leave that question to the leader of the Democratic side when he is on the floor. I wish I had the time to discuss those matters. If I had I would be glad to do it.

Mr. MANN. I understand, if the gentleman will yield, that it is proposed to pass or consider certain bills that are ordinarily considered to be unobjectionable bills. Now, may we have any information on that subject?

Mr. BORLAND. I am sorry that the gentleman can have none from me. Of course, having introduced a bill, I should be glad to see it urged upon the committee and considered and passed at this session.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question right there. Will the gentleman from Missouri vote to take this bill up unless he gets consent from the Democratic caucus?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly not.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I understand the gentleman would vote against his own bill—vote against taking it up at this session?

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, no; but of course the gentleman would not vote to take up his own bill to the exclusion of other bills offered by Members on this side of the House. But an agreement must be reached for that class of legislation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, resuming the few remarks that I want to make to the House at this time, the piles of stone that have been suggested by these various proposals will add to the city of Washington some more monuments—monuments to dead men; monuments that are absolutely useless; in some cases beautiful and ornamental, and in some cases, according to the Fine Arts Commission, neither beautiful nor ornamental, but in no case useful.

I want to remind the Members of this House how many monuments have been completed and unveiled since I have been here in Washington, less than three years: Monuments to Kosciuszko, Pulaski, Von Steuben, Stevenson, Sheridan, Witherspoon, Longfellow, and Shepherd—eight in three years. Now we are to have Christopher Columbus, Alexander Hamilton, and Thomas Jefferson, and no one knows how many more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. One to Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. BORLAND. Yes. The city of Washington will be covered from one end to the other with these monuments. One unfortunate thing about it is that no matter how much money is expended upon them or what artists are employed upon them, in another generation a new school of artists will come along and say they are not true art and should be torn down. If $2,000,000 of the people's money is to be expended for a memorial to Abraham Lincoln, it strikes me that it is wholly inconsistent with his character that it should savor of the pomp of kings. It is entirely out of keeping with our idea of the man. A $2,000,000 pile of stones can neither increase his fame nor exemplify his character. Would it not be a much more appropriate memorial to build a highway from the city of Washington to the battle field of Gettysburg, that field which is immortalized by his burning words as well as by the dauntless heroism of the citizen soldiers of America? Would it not be more in consonance with the character of Abraham Lincoln that a memorial should be built for the use of the people now living than to erect one that would be costly and at the same time useless? Shall we make one that is as dead as his own mortal clay, or as vital as his immortal spirit?

Why, over in Italy, in the city of Rome, they are building a memorial to Victor Emanuel, probably costing $5,000,000. They are tearing down some of the priceless monuments of classic times in order to build this structure, which is intended to be a representation of modern art and architecture. It does not make one think less of the deathless fame of Victor Emanuel, but it does make one think less of the Italian Parliament and its membership when it authorizes an expenditure of the people's money for a purpose of that kind, when the whole country needs a commercial and an industrial regeneration.

What we need is a monument that will be of some use to the people now living on earth. If we could have the views on the subject of the great commoner, Abraham Lincoln, himself, I am satisfied he would be in favor of such a tribute. It is said there is no monument so enduring as a highway. Human history can point to no memorial—not even the Pyramids of Egypt, with all the slave labor that went into them—that is so absolutely indestructible as the simplest highway along which the feet of commerce and of love and affection have trod. Not only can this highway be used for the purposes of commerce and of pleasure, it can be crowned with greater purposes of art and of beauty by the terminal arches and the ornamental bridges in its course. It can be made a thing of beauty that will attract visitors to this country, as some of the works of art of the old countries attract to them tourists who spend their money, their time, and their thought in studying the institutions and beauties of the country.

I hope appropriate means may be found in the near future for the establishment of this national highway. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BATHRICK].

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, in 1798 the first successful cotton mill became established in the United States, not only by reason of the aid of tariff protection, but also of money given from the Public Treasury. Numerous attempts to manufacture cotton had been made prior to this, but without success.

The people of this country were then founding the great industry of raising cotton, but they needed the assistance of the Government before they could make the much-needed cotton cloth.

Under a protective duty the single mill of that date had increased in 1809 to 62, with continued increases and prosperity following thereafter.

Thomas Jefferson and James Madison were among the prominent and enthusiastic advocates of a protective tariff then, but in justice to their memory it should be said that they had to deal with genuine and not sham infant industries.

It is very palpable to the unbiased investigator that the history of the American tariff is replete with numerous instances which reveal beyond question the fact that tariff under some circumstances has been a beneficent institution. I believe that the American tariff was born in the spirit of patriotism and the love of country. Its purpose was to nourish and strengthen our weak and struggling commerce, and the best minds of our greatest men and most honored citizens have sought to make it the implement of material prosperity and blessing to our whole people. Under past conditions in many respects it has fulfilled this purpose. But conditions of other days have not their counterpart in the present. The influence of nature and art upon our industries has brought us face to face with new facts of to-day, wherein tariff benefits, particularly those of high tariff, are extremely questionable. I believe that the high-tariff method of producing prosperity has been degraded to a means whereby a few have become very rich and many materially have suffered.

There is now a new day and a new condition, yet the time has not come for the total abolition of tariff. We need revenue for the Government and should have a decent regard for those who honestly, perforce, have built their hopes upon tariff. These facts, if no other, compel us to treat the evil side of protective tariff with a degree of reluctant tolerance that no unnecessary injustice shall be done and no precipitant revolution in commerce shall ensue.

The greatest evils of high tariff justly may be summed under the one head—combination. It must not be forgotten, however, that we have many manufacturers who are honestly competing, who are unrestrained by any trade agreement, who have no control in their buying or selling markets, but still are benefited by the tariff. No man can show that the abolition of the tariff might not seriously injure or wreck some of these. They have, to a large extent, predicated their commercial hopes upon it. Tariff may have been for them a shifting sand upon which they built their business structures; it only may have complicated the tortuous course of competition, none the less keen because of it. The sole guiding star of a world-wide application of the natural law of supply and demand might have been more productive of permanent prosperity, but government made the rule and they were obliged to live by it. In the light of this long-prevailing condition I deem it a part of intelligent and conservative legislation that government should not suddenly change this rule and leave behind a trail of disorganized and disrupted business.

Legislation of to-day must face conditions of to-day as a safer course than to follow the faults of the dead past or the theories of an uncertain future. All that we may do in this brief era in the way of tariff revision must be changed again in an era not far distant, if we would pay heed to the required balancing of the rights of production with those of consumption and their relation to foreign commerce. This tariff ghost will not down now nor in the future. So long as other countries legislate to secure advantages for their people so long must America legislate for Americans.

We have threaded the devious ways of government for more than a century since a tariff first was placed upon the imports of this country. In all these years there never has been a time when there were not some industries to which tariff should be applied. There never was a time when there were not dissensions as to the method by which the tariff should be applied; there never will be such a time, and at no period yet have the viewpoints been so diversified as at present.

In listening to the general discussion in this House I am constrained to believe that in our endeavor to make rational tariff legislation we are confronting a complication of opinions and a dearth of facts which leave the question wholly beyond and outside of scientific solution. We may lean toward high tariff, low tariff, tariff for revenue, or no tariff, and yet the ramifications of the question are so complex that the theories present no precise rule by which legislation can be accomplished. There may be some who feel secure in their theoretical premises, but I doubt if any tariff theory advanced in this House will bear the fine test of the detail of operation. I am anxious to state that I profess no distinction in this respect, and I shall not attempt an exact and definite rule for revision, deeming it impossible to do so. But there seems to be one way out of the dilemma, namely, to lower tariffs in compliance with the demand of the outraged people of this country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Nevada?

Mr. BATHRICK. I do.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada raises the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Sixty-five Members present—not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CULLOP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee found itself without a quorum; that on a roll call there were found to be present 167 Members; and that he reported to the House the names of the following absentees:

The SPEAKER. One hundred and sixty-seven Members. A quorum having answered to their names, the committee will resume its sitting.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, I believe the Democratic Party, in charge of this legislation, is faithfully endeavoring to obey this demand, and, although compromise and approximation can not be avoided, a surer revenue to meet necessary expenses of government will result without serious disruption of all business.

There may be some who will feel the long-delayed sting of just retribution. They may be awakened from their long siesta of special privilege, but whatever disturbance this may create with a few will result in good to the many.

Gentlemen have thought it pertinent to resurrect the convention platforms of half a century as a guide to what method shall prevail in the revision now in process; but, Mr. Chairman, tariff knows no creed, no rule. No men empowered to draft resolutions for a party convention ever came near to settling the tariff question. Definite commission to reduce or abolish tariff may be given by the people to their representatives, but to perform the demanded service without doing violence to justice for some and injury to the whole country is a task complicated beyond any absolute control of detail in the performance.

That part of the question relating to high tariff and prohibitive tariff is most easily dealt with because of the utter and unqualified repudiation by the people of this country. Any tariff which generally prohibits the exchange of commodities between this and foreign countries is justly entitled to be relegated to the graveyard of rejected politics.

I freely will admit that there has been a time when it sounded very good to me to say that the tariff should be revised on a basis of the difference in cost of production between this and foreign countries. I would like to see it adjusted upon that basis now, but a more intimate acquaintance with the details of putting this theory into operation points clearly to an absence of facts as to what these differences are. If we agree that the tariff should be based upon this competitive level, who can point out where the level is? It may be found in some few particulars to-day, but it is not there to-morrow. We are informed that the Tariff Board will tell us in December what the difference is in the cost of production of wool between this and foreign countries; but by the time their conclusions are drawn nature will have changed crop conditions, some one will have invented a new machine, and their deductions will have no force. We may discover what the approximate difference in the cost of production is between this country and England on cotton manufactures; but what is the difference in cost of this product between the United States and Germany or France? After we have discovered the difference in cost of production between this country and Japan, we ascertain that the difference is greater or less between this country and others. How are we to adjust our competitive level, under those circumstances, to all countries?

We have listened to discussion of factory equipment and management, and were made intimately acquainted with the multitude of conditions which would operate in one factory or another in this country to produce a difference in cost of production. How are we to reconcile the methods of production in all the factories of Europe with the methods of production in all the factories in the United States? If we select as a basis of calculation a factory possessing superlative facilities, what will become of the larger number which possess only average facilities and yet occupy a more important relative position in our whole commerce? If we take the conditions of to-day and observe, beyond question, that the superior equipment, efficiency of the employees, and wisdom of management of an American manufactory enable it to produce as cheaply as a foreign manufacturer does, even though labor is cheaper abroad, how long will it be before that foreign manufacturer, alive to the situation, and, as a matter of self-protection, will be employing equally efficient management and equipment in his own factory?

No human intelligence, no system of investigation, not even a tariff board can discover what the competitive level is of American production as compared with the foreign production to-day. Even if this were possible, time rapidly works its wondrous changes in all the facts, and it would be but a few months or, at the most, but a few years before their deductions would fall.

The elements of nature, the exigencies of a changing population, the process of war, and transformations of government are shifting tariff facts faster than human agency can gather them together. It would be, of course, the limit of folly to refuse any information in this great game of tariff guessing, but it is conclusively apparent that all information is open to suspicion and deserving of rigid scrutiny.

In the straining for facts to point the way through the labyrinth of difference in cost of production I, in this connection, must deprecate a tendency to enlarge upon the efficiency of American labor as a thing to be thrown into the scale to outweigh the lower cost of European labor. I join in a justifiable pride in the intelligence, skill, and energy of American labor, but these qualities have a decided limitation as an argument in favor of any radical reduction of the tariff. I beg to emphasize that labor is not a machine made of steel and brass. Labor is human flesh and blood, and when we go too far in our speculation upon the amount of work it can do we are dealing with tired muscles and aching bones.

The high standard of American labor is not how much it may produce, but how well it enjoys its production.

In most of our production the machine leads and the quick eyes and nimble fingers of labor must follow.

Reduce the size of a small wheel of a machine, the machine will run faster, labor must keep up, the efficiency of labor will increase, but the strain upon the human machine also will increase.

The limit of efficiency seems to be considered as the limit of human endurance, but to call upon this in a supreme performance is to decrease our standard of labor to broken health, impoverished, homeless families, and children devoid of the full measure of the boasted vigor of our race. Go into the mills and factories of this country and ask of the employees about this kind of efficiency. You will learn of the "pace that kills," with victims physically wrecked easily found as wretched witnesses to the fact.

A laborer or mechanic caught in this mill of efficiency and system of speeding is not so useful a citizen as one who is allowed some leisure and strength to enjoy it, although having accomplished less for his employer in a given number of hours. The generations following that where the limit of efficiency is secured at the expense of mind and body will degenerate to the serfdom of the mill. It will be incapable of understanding or performing the functions of true American citizenship. In fact, in many of our mills and factories to-day the race for this kind of efficiency is deplenishing the vitality of manhood and womanhood, stunting the physique and mentality of childhood, and all for the sake of what? Profit—dollars. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, if we must depend upon this kind of efficiency to replace the tariff, I would rather have the tariff with all its perverse influence.

I desire in this discussion to have it made plain that my attitude upon the tariff is, that there are industries which should be protected to some extent, and that this protection would be to the best interests of both producer and consumer. But in this statement I make a wide division between high tariff and low tariff. The evils of high tariff visited upon the people of this country have been so numerous that it is almost impossible to analyze them, but the greatest wrong which ensued from prohibitive or high tariff was that which aided and abetted the centralization of industries, money, and all character of wealth.

Scarcely a decade had passed with the advent of a high tariff when the previous tendency toward combination became rapidly accelerated and expressed in the most extensive association of industries which any nation of the world ever beheld. Our "infant industries" had become swollen to proportions of domineering power in politics as well as commerce.

The loss of a large proportion of our market to foreign mills having curtailed their output, their workingmen, thus deprived of employment, came to America, and our immigration was enormously stimulated. Under these competitive unprotected conditions, our workingmen sold their labor subject to an unhampered supply and demand, while the products of their labor were sold back to them under protective, noncompetitive conditions. Manufacturers had not yet cornered natural resources, which is the limit of combination control, but large profits in various lines of production induced a stupendous outlay in new competitive industries. An open market for labor and a high-tariff closed market for labor's products was an ideal bait for capital, which was quick to enter the field. Under such conditions the result soon was recorded in a domestic war of competition. The effects of the tariff then had been twofold and contrary; first, it had secured unusual profit for those who were in business at the outset; second, domestic competition was incited by unusual prosperity and large profits were thus reduced to a point far below the safe and stable average which would have maintained had our tariff been nearer to a basis of European competition. Capital fought capital in America and became also involved in a war with labor. Laws prohibiting contracts with foreign labor were laxly observed, and labor suffered in this war most of all. The boasted high standard of American labor, which had been used as a fallacious argument to procure excessive tariff, became by these means plainly in conflict with the effects of high tariff.

Under a ballooning system of industry the banks had loaned large sums for commercial ventures. Prior to a general collapse, these loans were sometimes actuated by hope of personal profit to bank officials, and often issued on the doubtful assurance of prospective earnings and stocks and bonds of embryo industries. A period of price cutting left little surplus for wise maintenance charges and improved equipment. Every financial nerve was strained by competitors to keep in the race.

At the time of the full flood of the combination era every incentive to listen to the blandishments of the promoters of trusts and concentration was present in the minds of owners of factories, of the borrowers, and those of whom they borrowed. In fact, many banks, finding their loans at hazard by the collapse of their securities, virtually became partners in the fate of the industries owing them the money, and for that reason assisted in unlawful combination as their only hope of pulling out of the mire.

This stage had been well set for combination by high tariff and no one gave the Sherman antitrust law more than a complacent side glance, although engaged in palpable and flagrant violations of it. The big speculators and trustees of the peoples' savings used their opportunity to the limit and milked the industries of many hundreds of millions of dollars. Rarely were these combinations brought about by those directly interested as a mere matter of self-salvation, but the joining together was engineered mostly by the financier in charge of bank funds belonging to the people and with the aid of banks having bad loans. Their work also was largely supplemented by the bellwethers of the various industries, who usually got for themselves a share of the secret promotion profits and remunerative offices in the new combination as pay for leading others into the scheme. Doubtful assets of shaky concerns thus banded together often were bonded for twice or thrice their value and the bonds sold to an overconfiding public, not only for the purpose of paying debts, but for paying enormous promotion fees, commissions for fiscal agents, big fees to attorneys employed to steer them through and around the law, and gratuities to influential members of the constituent companies. Fictitious values were scheduled of bankrupt plants, real estate, worn-out machinery, unoperated and obsolete patents, unmined and unsurveyed doubtful mineral deposits, while dilapidated buildings and all kinds of junk were thrown together to produce a false appearance of stability for these excessive issues of bonds and stocks. And then, after all this was done, an era of enlarged recapitalization ensued, giving opportunity for more oceans of water to be pumped into bonds, preferred and common stock, and new flotations of this class of three-shell green-goods securities were foisted upon the public. To assist in mollifying the public these manipulations were covered by the specious pretense that great economy of production would be accomplished. It was glibly claimed that savings would be made in labor, management, and maintenance.

But when the services of managers of subsidiary concerns were dispensed with their combined salaries were usually more than doubled, and that sum paid to the management and assistants of the new combination. For every dollar saved in the discharge of labor, in the concentration of equipment, there were more than $2 anchored to the new combination in an annual charge for interest on bonds and dividends on promotion stock of the increased capitalization.

It even was claimed that proposed economies would cheapen the price to consumers and increase wages to labor, but the concentration of the employment in the hands of one or a very few men simply increased the power to depress the price which would be paid to labor and to charge greater prices for their products. Centralization of every form ensued. Railroads combined and, controlling avenues of transportation, outdid all the other Dick Turpins of finance in exacting toll from the people in the way of excessive freight rates and favoritism, to the detriment of legitimate business, and the sale of more doubtful securities to the innocent public at prices far in excess of the physical value of the property represented. The big speculators, having made large sums, plunged into spectacular stock transactions which attracted money from country banks to our big money centers. There the very men at the head and front of this scheme of commercial hari kari thus controlled more money with which to do more combining and work their scheme in a circle ever widening to a greater control of both money and industry. Banks, too, were consolidated, and the system of pooling our money into the control of the few not only swelled the aggregate of stock gambling, but aided in the cornering of our foodstuffs and other necessities of life. In fact, the great, thrifty American public poured their savings into the laps of these speculators, who used it to exact high prices from the savers.

Mr. Chairman, at no distant day a plan of currency reform will be presented for the consideration of this House. I do not wish unjustly to anticipate its provisions, but I confidently expect to find therein included some means of further concentrating the savings of the people in the hands of our large banking centers, where it may be used by alleged financial patriots with which to make big bets.

It may have been that the centralization of industries and all other forms of combination, which have passed like a blight over this country, were more the logical sequence of conditions than the culpable initiative of individuals. But in an analysis of the primary reason for this condition we find prominently set forth as the main and principally blamable cause, high tariff.

Now, when we seek to lower these tariffs the men who profited by this class of deception, and even fraud, come to us with an air of suffering honesty and present their overcapitalization to us as a basis upon which, they contend, we should found a tariff that will make them a profit.

They bring their tanks of aqua pura down here and ask us to pass laws to make them dividends upon it.

Most of these men are not entitled to the honored name of "captains of industry," but bear the just stigma of "captains of piracy." Many of them are not business men at all. They are merely stock gamblers. They look upon industry not as a legitimate means of production and distribution, but as a mere basis of stock exploitation.

This class of commercial Aladdins has been industriously circulating the fallacy that combinations typify an economic condition of the age, and that they therefore have come to stay. They inform us that, having secured an advantageous position by their financial jugglery, accomplished in defiance of the law, they should be allowed to retain that position to the continued detriment of the people and that the law should not be executed upon them. They tell us, in effect, that their greed and defiance of law must not only be tolerated, but allowed to grow still more weeds in the garden of government. They have intimated that the remedy for their fraud should be a legalization of their watered stocks and bonds, which will be thus sanctioned, revitalized, and made more valuable by a system of Government regulation. Hitherto they have been defiant of the Sherman antitrust law, brazenly denying that they restrained trade while enjoying immunity from criminal prosecution through the complacent inertia of pliant executives.

Now, after many years of uncurbed lawlessness, they seek recognition from the Government in the form of regulation instead of getting their just deserts—of suppression and restitution. They strive to convince us that their brand of restraint of trade is "reasonable"—very reasonable, indeed. When we demanded dissolution of their illegal combinations they held the fluctuating stock market before our eyes as a warning of great injury to business and pretended tearful love for the "widows and orphans" to whom they had sold their depreciated, water-soaked securities. Up to date they uniformly have escaped the criminal penalties prescribed by the Sherman antitrust law, and the aggregate of fines they have paid for conviction thus far secured is about as incidental and unimportant as their annual banquet and wine bills.

Mr. Chairman, is it safe to conjecture what will be the result following upon the recent Supreme Court decree commanding the dissolution of the Standard Oil Co. and the American Tobacco Co.? After the highest court in our land has delivered an opinion that those companies have operated in restraint of trade and has ordered their dissolution, who has heard the whirr of the swift wings of justice in our Attorney General's department in the direction of these two companies? What is he doing in these cases? What move has he made in the performance of his duty to enforce the criminal statute in a case where the infraction thereof has been proven and established by the main court of the land? Is he waiting for the statute of limitations to apply? Only recently the Attorney General semiofficially announced that no criminal prosecutions would be instituted until after the time fixed by the Supreme Court for compliance with its decrees. What explanation has he to make for this delay? Every day in this country men who have been ground beneath the wheels of this great money juggernaut are being arrested and imprisoned for stealing enough to stay hunger. There is little procrastination, no statute of limitations, and no plausible, specious pleas made in their behalf. The majesty of the law must be upheld when a man steals a loaf of bread, but when these great criminals have been convicted before the Supreme Court of this land our Attorney General, sworn to do his duty by the people, sits supinely by and says he will wait until some convenient time to institute proceedings for the enforcement of law and order.

It is reported in the press that the Attorney General suggests a Government commission to regulate great industrial organizations. He does not propose as yet to prosecute under the criminal statute those two convicted great corporations, but seems to desire to establish another commission to regulate them. What would this regulation mean? It would mean more boards, more commissions, more bureaus at the expense of the Government, with the sole result of establishing a surer value and an advanced price for the watered stocks and overcapitalized securities of the combines. Would the decisions of a commission appointed to regulate combinations in prices of their products and the wages of their labor be amenable to the long delay of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States? This proposition seems to be only a further expression of the theory of high tariff that, instead of leaving the regulation of trade to the natural law of supply and demand and swift punishment for those who disobey our laws forbidding combination, we are to give more Government aid to help make more money for the malefactors.

I wish to be fair and just in my criticism, but the recently displayed activity in the Attorney General's office in the direction of less important prosecutions seems more a diversion to cover the escape of the officials of the American Tobacco Co. and the Standard Oil Co. than anything else. Proof of guilt in these two cases is plain. Why go into the byways and out-of-the-way places at this time to hunt other cases for prosecution?

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, if combinations, with all their power of enlargement and centralization, have come to stay, representative government confesses its weakness and is packing up to move out. If combinations which exist to-day are allowed to proceed with their ever-widening circle of control of production, natural resources, and transportation, it will be but a short time when an absolute monopoly will be said to have come to stay also. That will be another economic condition, presumably, and will be termed progressive and beneficent. If combinations operating under the advantage of the great natural resources of America are allowed to continue, how long will it be before they become strengthened by international cooperation, and then what will be the remedy for high prices of the necessities of life? Neither tariff nor no tariff could give relief to our consumers under such circumstances.

The great question is, Will Government permanently surrender its right to suppress these combinations and fail to bring the force of law to bear upon our powerful delinquents?

The answer of the president of the Steel Trust and the ditto of the Attorney General is, We will not suppress crime, but we will appoint a commission to regulate it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. BATHRICK. I will.

Mr. AUSTIN. This afternoon's Washington Star contains a statement of the Attorney General's activity in carrying out in good faith the decree of the Supreme Court in the cases mentioned by the gentleman.

Mr. BATHRICK. Is the Attorney General doing anything in the direction of a criminal prosecution?

Mr. AUSTIN. I think if the gentleman from Ohio will content himself and be patient about the matter the Attorney General will do his full duty under the law.

Mr. BATHRICK. I am asked to content myself and be patient under the statement of the gentleman asking the question, and I think he can as readily content himself on the statement that I am making.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Attorney General of the United States is pursuing a course in relation to the enforcement of this law under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and will be prepared to give a good account of his conduct.

Mr. BATHRICK. All of the Attorneys General for the last several years have been prepared to give a good account of their conduct, but what have they done under this criminal statute?

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman just cited the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. BATHRICK. What of that? That is not supposed to be a partisan institution.

Mr. AUSTIN. The proceedings in the Standard Oil and Tobacco cases were instituted by a Repbulican Attorney General.

Mr. BATHRICK. What has the Supreme Court to do in a partisan way with a Republican Attorney General? Why does not the Attorney General file criminal charges against these culprits?

Mr. AUSTIN. As I just stated, these cases were carried to the Supreme Court by a Republican Attorney General of the United States.

Mr. BATHRICK. But why does not he commence criminal proceedings?

Mr. AUSTIN. Because the question has just been settled by the highest court in the land, and the Attorney General is now engaged in following up said decisions with the proper legal proceedings.

Mr. BATHRICK. And the highest court in the land has said plainly that these companies operated in restraint of trade, which is a crime under the statute.

Mr. AUSTIN. And the Attorney General has given notice in a speech and in an interview that he proposes to proceed against every illegal combination——

Mr. BATHRICK. Certainly. Why has he not proceeded before?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is his intention.

Mr. BATHRICK. It is the old story, that hell is paved with good intentions, and I guess that applies to this.

Mr. AUSTIN. The gentleman from Ohio ought to be fair enough and just enough to the Attorney General, who asserts publicly in speeches and press interviews that he is performing his duty in this matter.

Mr. BATHRICK. Events proving this true, I hope to be the first to commend him for it, but we have been many years under that kind of policy by Republican Attorneys General, and I have not yet seen any criminal prosecution resulting in imprisonment. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. AUSTIN. You had an Attorney General from Ohio in the person of Mr. Harmon. Is his record any better than that of the present Republican Attorney General?

A Member on that side, a Representative from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], has introduced a bill to make violations of the Sherman antitrust law a criminal offense.

Mr. BATHRICK. And will the gentleman from Tennessee support it?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly, I will.

Mr. BATHRICK. Is there not a criminal-offense provision in the Sherman antitrust law now? It provides for imprisonment for violations.

Mr. AUSTIN. Your Attorney General Olney decided there was not.

Mr. BATHRICK. Suppose he did; if he were wrong, must the present Attorney General also be wrong?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Wickersham has found a way when your Attorney General Olney failed to find one.

Mr. BATHRICK. Attorney General Harmon won the trans-Missouri case and caused the word "reasonable" to be excluded. He won the first two cases that sustained the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. AUSTIN. Your own Democratic Attorney General Olney failed to make good under this law.

Mr. BATHRICK. I will say this——

Mr. AUSTIN. And Mr. Wickersham, a Republican Attorney General, has made good.

Mr. BATHRICK. I wish to say this, that in the matter of executing the laws of the Government of the United States I can not look upon it from a partisan viewpoint. I do not care whether a Republican or Democrat executes the law, providing it is done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Alabama to grant me five minutes more.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I have limited my time, but I will grant him five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. BATHRICK. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that in this battle of the people's government against intrenched privilege we are balancing upon the edge of a precipice. The crisis is close upon us when it is to be determined whether Government will punish wealthy malefactors or not. The test of our executive Government is near at hand, and even though the opinion of our court was a qualification or a modification of the statute, it established beyond question that certain combinations in restraint of trade did exist, reasonable or unreasonable though they may have been.

Mr. Chairman, I can not help but fear that our recent Supreme Court opinion has granted at least a partial concession to this class of lawbreakers and established a precedent upon which future litigants can base an argument that their particular restraint of trade is not "unreasonable."

I am content that the abstruse problems of our primary and statutory law should be interpreted by others more competent than myself, but it seems that the certainty of these interpretations never has been established even in our chief tribunal, for it is recorded that this court upon sundry occasions has reversed its own opinions. I am forced, therefore, to conclude that the deductions made by our Supreme Court are decidedly human and not superhuman. But admitting their supreme fitness for the honored and lofty positions they hold in Government and in the minds of a generally law-abiding people, I still respectfully dissent from an opinion which places in the statute a word which I can not find there when I read it.

The people of this Nation are awaiting to hear judgment pronounced and punishment meted out to those from whom they have suffered so long. If this be surely and expeditiously done, a great moral effect for good will sweep over this country and give greater confidence in the stability of our Government. If carping delay ensue, or it be not done at all, it will bring further discouragement and dissatisfaction to millions of patriots who love their country, but who have sometimes vainly sought to believe implicitly in and live honestly by the theory of equality before the law.

We are charged in this session, as well as in that to come, with the duty of enacting a class of legislation which is by far the most important that has, in recurring periods, been brought before the Congress of the United States. We have been obliged in order to secure the best obtainable to compromise and approximate legislation with various sectional interests and various honest viewpoints that these should be finally merged into the best results possible.

I have voted in this House for a minimum of evil that I might obtain the maximum of good. I have voted against a minimum of good that I might help to prevent what I was pleased to think was a maximum of evil.

Mr. Chairman, I deplore the effects which high tariff has brought upon my country, and I also deplore the tendency of a growing sentiment in this House to reach far to the other extreme when conditions can not possibly warrant it. The legislative pendulum has swung far up into the realm of high tariff, and now that it is falling it is the duty of a rational conservatism to prevent its swinging too far to the other side. Excessive tariff has brought its evils upon us, but it is the penalty of overindulgence and not because of any inherent weakness of a means of self-protection which like action of other nations forces us to retain. There are now, and as long as we continue to make tariffs always will be, certain products which belong upon the free list as logically as the others belong upon the protected list. Upon the advent of the income tax or other shifting of the burden of Government expenses, this free list should be materially augmented, not merely because the necessity of raising revenue by means of import duties has been lessened by newer and better revenue measures, but because the character of the product and conditions of its production automatically have removed the necessity or advisability of protection. But this in no sense can be employed as a reason for the total abolition of tariff from all production.

Ours is the greatest per capita consumption and the greatest market in all the world; and this very fact would furnish an incentive to every country on the globe to gain the advantage of getting our market and keeping their own markets excluded from us.

Tariff has been and is still a great weapon of international trade offense and defense.

The millenium may come when the lion will lie down with the lamb and the brotherhood of nations shall dwell in peace and amity, but to-day there is upon us a great world-wide combat for trade, and we can no more be the first to lay down our means of defense in commerce than we can afford to be the first, in the fear of sanguinary conflict, to scuttle our battleships and demolish our coast fortifications. [Loud applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR].

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration revising the cotton schedule is one of the most important bills presented to the House in many years. It is in line with the promises and pledges of the Democratic Party, and as its effect will be to reduce the cost of living by giving the people cheaper cotton goods I shall give it my hearty and enthusiastic support.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have not taken the floor this afternoon to discuss in detail the pending bill, but for the purpose of correcting the many misrepresentations which recently have been made concerning pension legislation. During this special session of Congress, and since the House became Democratic, certain gentlemen on the Republican side and many Republican newspapers throughout the country, purely for political purposes, have been busy in an effort to mislead and deceive soldiers regarding what could and should be done at this extra session on the subject of pensions. They well know that this special session was called for a special purpose and that it was not the intention to take up all kinds of general legislation. They well know that no pension legislation was ever passed at an extra session of Congress in the history of the country.

Two years ago when an extra session of Congress was convened on the 15th day of March, and continued until the 6th day of August, at a time when the House was overwhelmingly Republican, no Republican Member asked for or even suggested pension legislation at that time. But now that the House is Democratic you are attempting to make a grand-stand play before the soldiers of the country by pretending to favor pension legislation at this extra session, when you know a bill passed by the House at this session could not be made effective, as I will later on show. And the ridiculous feature of this pretense is the fact that it comes from those of you who heretofore have opposed pension legislation, and from many who voted and worked against the Sulloway bill. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, for 14 years both branches of Congress have been Republican by large majorities, and you have had a golden opportunity to reward the heroes of the Civil War for their loyalty, their bravery, their self-sacrifice, and their great service to the country; but during all this time you have fed them on promises and pledges, and year after year refused them the pensions they rightfully deserved. When the campaign was on you were liberal in your words of praise, and promises were made without limit, but when the campaign was over you came here and sat quietly in your seats and never raised your voices in their behalf. You were long on promises, but mighty short on performances. [Applause.]

Why, during the last campaign you went about the country telling soldiers that if a Democratic House should be elected they could expect no pension legislation, for the reason that the majority of the Democratic Members would come from the South, and they would not vote for pension legislation. What right or what authority did you have for making such a statement? I answer absolutely none. An examination of the RECORD discloses the fact that southern Democratic Members never have opposed or voted against pension legislation. During the past 10 years over 20,000 pension bills, private and general, have passed this House, and I challenge anyone to show when or where southern Members ever opposed or voted against these bills.

Two years ago when we passed the widows' pension bill, placing all widows of soldiers on the rolls at $12 per month, adding $13,000,000 to the pension roll, every Democratic Member who was present, from both the South and the North, voted for the bill, and it became a law. In view of these facts you gentlemen on that side of the House owe an apology to these big-hearted Representatives from the South, whose fairness and sense of justice prompted them to vote for these 20,000 pension bills for the benefit of the Union soldiers. [Applause.]

Why, Mr. Chairman, in my own campaign last fall a certain United States Senator went over my district telling the soldiers that I had introduced a dollar-a-day pension bill, but that I had done so to fool the soldier, that I was not sincere, when at the same time this Senator had occupied a seat in the Senate for nearly 12 years and had never introduced a general bill to increase soldiers' pensions nor, so far as I know, made a speech on the subject.

Mr. Chairman, for five years I have stood upon this floor pleading for more liberal pensions and have done everything in my power to secure them. My record is an open book upon this question, and no man has the right and no honest man will question my loyalty to the old soldier or my devotion to the flag. [Applause.] The RECORD will show that practically all the speeches made in the House during the past five years in favor of more liberal pensions have been made by Democratic Members, and it is a well-known fact that it was our work that forced the Sulloway bill out of the committee last winter.

I well remember one year ago, when Mr. SULLOWAY, the then chairman of the Invalid Pensions Committee, gave notice to all Members of the House that on a certain day the committee would hear all Members who favored a dollar-a-day pension, and on that day every man who appeared before the committee and spoke in favor of a dollar-a-day pension was a Democrat. Not a single Republican Member appeared and spoke for such a bill. The only one of you on that side of the House who appeared and spoke was the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and he discussed another matter. These facts the country has a right to know, as they show the lack of interest that side of the House has heretofore taken in pension legislation, and will help the soldier to figure out how much sincerity there is in your grand-stand play at this time.

Mr. Chairman, when the Sulloway bill was before the House last winter, who opposed it? The opposition did not come from the Democratic side, but it came from that side of the House. The gentleman from New York, the Hon. SERENO E. PAYNE, the Republican floor leader, turned his back on the old soldier, made a vigorous speech against the bill, and voted against it, while the Democratic floor leader, the Hon. CHAMP CLARK, now Speaker of the House, voted for it. [Applause.] Also, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], the Republican chairman of the Post Office Committee and one of the leading Members on that side of the House close to the administration, also spoke and voted against the bill, as did also the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, the Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH.

I shall not take the time to enumerate the long list of Republican leaders who spoke and voted against the Sulloway bill, but simply want to call your attention to the fact that practically all the opposition to the bill came from that side of the House, But notwithstanding the Republican opposition we passed the bill by a nice majority, and sent it over to the Senate, where it died in that Republican body without any consideration. And now at a time when you know it is impossible for the House to pass a bill and put it in operation, without the aid of the Senate, you are seeking to tie up pension legislation in such a way that nothing can be done at the regular session, soon to convene, and at the same time covering up your real purpose by pretending to favor pension legislation.

Only a few days ago the chairman of the Invalid Pensions Committee, the old soldier of the House, Gen. SHERWOOD, asked unanimous consent to speak for 40 minutes in order that he might explain to the soldiers of the country the present status of pension legislation, but you on that side of the House objected and would not allow him to speak. Why did you object? You objected because you did not want soldiers to know the true situation, and because you knew your hypocrisy would be exposed. The old saying that "murder will out" is as true to-day as it was 100 years ago. You tried to cover up your real purpose, but in that you have failed, and you can no longer mislead and deceive the heroes of the Civil War.

During the last campaign you went over the country telling soldiers that every line of pension legislation ever placed on the statute books was placed there by a Republican Congress, when at the same time you knew the statement was false. The Democratic Party has been in control of legislation several times since the war, and we are proud of our record on the subject of pensions. I have here a list of 24 general bills compiled by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DIXON] showing our record on the pension question. Look at the bills or laws passed by a Democratic House and approved by a Democratic President. A Democratic House passed—

(1) Act of August 15, 1876, providing for the issuance of artificial limbs, or commutation therefor, to disabled soldiers and seamen, and providing transportation for the purpose of having the same properly fitted.

(2) Act of February 28, 1877, increasing the pension of those who lost both an arm and a leg.

(3) Act of March 9, 1878, granting pensions on account of service in the War of 1812 and the Revolutionary War, requiring a service of but 14 instead of 60 days on the part of the survivors of the War of 1812, and granting pensions to widows regardless of the date of marriage to soldiers of this war. It also granted pensions to widows of soldiers of the Revolutionary War on a service of 14 days. Former laws required a marriage prior to the treaty of peace in the case of widows of the War of 1812.

(4) Act of June 17, 1878, increasing to $72 per month the pensions of those who lost both hands, both feet, or the sight of both eyes incident to the service.

(5) Act of March 3, 1879, increasing to $37.50 all pensions on account of amputation at the hip joint. This sum was afterwards increased to $45 per month by a Democratic House.

(6) Acts of January 25 and March 3, 1879, granting arrears of pensions from the date of discharge, generous measures which benefited more than 225,000 pensioners at once and caused the annual pension rate to leap from $33,780,526.19 to $57,240,540.14. The Republican Party had control of both Houses of Congress for more than 10 years after the close of the war, but passed no legislation of this character.

(7) Act of June 21, 1879, abolishing biennial medical examinations and providing that in no case shall a pension be withdrawn or reduced except upon notice to the pensioner and a hearing upon sworn testimony.

(8) Act of June 16, 1880, giving $72 per month to all those who became totally helpless for any cause incident to the service.

(9) Act of February 26, 1881, for the protection of pensioners in the soldiers' home.

(10) Act of July 4, 1884, which established the proper relations which should exist between attorneys and clients and fixed by law the fees to be allowed in pension cases. By this act a Democratic Congress placed the strong arm of the law between the helpless applicant and the rapacious agent.

(11) Act of July 14, 1892, establishing an intermediate rate of pensions between $30 and $72 per month and fixing the rate at $50 for all who require frequent and periodical, though not regular and constant, personal aid and attention.

(12) Act of August 5, 1892, granting pensions to Army nurses and forbidding the demanding of a fee by claim agents for prosecuting this class of cases. This was a generous recognition of the noble heroines, who, leaving home and loved ones behind, in self-sacrifice braved pestilence and hardships to minister to the sick in the hospitals of the Army.

(13) Act of December 21, 1893, making a pension a vested right.

Here are some other contributions to the pension laws which were either approved by a Democratic President or passed by a Democratic House of Representatives.

(14) Act of April 18, 1884, making it a felony for any person to falsely or fraudulently represent himself to be an officer of the United States.

(15) Act of March 19, 1886, from $8 to $12 per month the pensions of 79,989 widows and dependents on the roll at the time, as well as tens of thousands who have since been placed there. These certificates were issued by a Democratic Commissioner of Pensions without any expense or unnecessary delay to those deserving beneficiaries.

(16) Act of May 17, 1886, amending the reports of the War Department, which discriminated against a large and worthy class of soldiers, relieving thousands of unfortunate veterans of the hardships worked by the resting of charges against them based upon technical errors in the records.

(17) Act of August 4, 1886, increasing the pensions of 10,030 cripples—armless and legless veterans.

(18) Act of January 29, 1887, benefiting about 30,000 survivors and widows of the Mexican War.

(19) Act of June 7, 1888, granting arrears to widows from the date of the death of the husband and providing that all United States officials authorized to administer oaths should administer all oaths required to be made in pension cases in the execution of vouchers for pensions free of charge. This arrearage act benefited at once more than 200,000 soldiers' widows.

(20) Act of August 27, 1888, increasing pensions on account of deafness.

(21) Act of February 12, 1889, granting an increase in pensions from $72 to $100 per month to all persons who lost both hands in the service and line of duty.

(22) Act of March 1, 1889, relating to the payment of pensions to the widows or dependent heirs where subsequent to the issuance of the check the pensioner dies.

(23) Act of March 2, 1889, removing certain technical charges in the record and relieving a large and meritorious class of soldiers.

(24) Act of March 2, 1895, which abolished the rates of $2 and $4 and fixed the lowest rate of pension at $6 per month.

Mr. Chairman, with such a record as this on the pension question and the continuous and persistent effort some of us have made during the past five years for more liberal pensions, who could say that the Democratic Party has not been mindful and appreciative of the heroic efforts and sacrifices made by the Union soldier for the preservation of the States? Every Member of this House understands why it is impossible for the House to pass a pension bill and put it in operation at this time, but in order that the soldiers of the country may understand it I will state the reasons as fully and as clearly as possible.

In the first place, I desire to say that the Sherwood bill—a bill bearing the name of that gallant old soldier who gave four years of the best part of his life to the service of his country—which the Invalid Pension Committee of the House has agreed upon, and which it will pass early in the regular session of Congress, will add about $40,000,000 to the pension roll, and if that bill were passed at this time, there would be no money available to pay pensions under it, as the appropriation for pension purposes for the fiscal year ending on June 30, 1912, was passed at the last regular session and was based upon the law as it now exists, and as the Senate refuses to consider an additional appropriation at this extra session, a new law could not go into effect until the next regular session, at which time Congress will pass the regular pension appropriation bill making money available to pay pensions under both the old and the new law.

Therefore absolutely nothing could be gained by passing a bill at this time, even if it were possible to do so, but, Mr. Chairman, it is not possible to do so, for the reason that the Senate absolutely refuses to take up pension matters at this extra session. The committee of the House, of which I am a member, took this matter up with the pension committee of the Senate, and we have a letter from the chairman of the Senate Pension Committee, over his own signature, telling us that the Senate will not act on pension legislation at this extra session of Congress. Therefore it is impossible to pass a bill at this session on account of the refusal of the Senate to join the House in doing so.

Mr. RUSSELL. Is that chairman of the Senate Committee on Pensions a Republican or a Democrat?

Mr. ADAIR. A Republican chairman.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. ADAIR. It is getting late, Mr. Chairman, and I decline to be interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana declines to yield.

Mr. ADAIR. When the regular session convenes in December we will pass our bill and send it over to the Senate, and then if you Republicans who voted against the Sulloway bill, and who are now trying to work a bunco game on the soldier, should in the meantime repent of your sins, I would advise you to go over to the Senate and insist on your Republican brothers in that body, who killed the Sulloway bill last winter, showing their conviction and conversion to the cause of right by passing the Sherwood bill. [Applause.]

But you gentlemen on that side of the House have not repented. You are still the enemies of pension legislation, the same as you were when you voted against the Sulloway bill. Now you are trying to prevent pension legislation by insisting on the passage by the House of the Anderson bill, which you know, and every Member of the House knows, the Senate will neither consider nor pass. The Anderson bill is an age bill, practically the same as the Sulloway bill, and the Senate has been canvassed on the subject, and it is known to a certainty that such a bill will get no consideration in that body. And that is the reason you favor the Anderson bill. You want to pass and send over to the Senate a bill that will die in that body so that nothing will be done. Why do you not come out openly and oppose pension legislation instead of trying to kill it in an underhand way, while at the same time you are pretending to be the friends of the soldier? If there is anything on earth I despise it is hypocrisy, misrepresentation, and fraud, and all of these are embodied in your methods to prevent pension legislation. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Chairman, we on this side of the House, who have been fighting the battles of the old soldier during the past five years, understand your methods and purposes, and while you may have been able to fool some of the soldiers temporarily, you have not fooled us, and we are not going to allow you to tie up pension legislation in that way. Neither are we disturbed by political newspapers constantly misrepresenting the facts on the subject of pensions and criticizing the House because it is Democratic and at the same time saying nothing about the Senate because it is Republican. Only a few days ago a prominent newspaper, circulating largely among soldiers, made the statement that pension legislation must originate in the House, when the editor of that paper knew full well his statement was false. The last general pension bill passed increasing the pensions of soldiers, known as the McCumber bill, originated in the Senate and passed that body before the House had anything to do with it. A bill can originate in the Senate as well as in the House; and if these newspapers want to criticize, why do not they say something about the Senate for killing the Sulloway bill and refusing at this time to consider pension legislation?

Mr. Chairman, the Invalid Pensions Committee of the House has given the matter careful consideration, has studied the situation from every different standpoint, and we are proceeding along a line that will bring results at the earliest possible moment. No pension bill was ever passed in the history of the country that was not backed by the committee, and if you want to accomplish something for the relief of the old soldier stand with the committee and it will be done. The bill we have agreed upon may not suit all of you; in fact, it does not entirely meet the wishes of a single member of the committee, but like all legislation it is the result of compromise. When our committee got together to consider the 48 bills before us, there were as many different opinions as there were different members of the committee, and, like a jury reaching a verdict, we had to give and take, compromise our differences, and get together. Personally I favored my own bill—a straight dollar-a-day bill—but we knew the Senate would not pass a dollar-a-day bill; neither would it pass the Anderson bill nor the Sulloway bill; but as Members of that body had agreed to consider a bill based upon service, we thought it best to report that kind of a bill, although several of us preferred a different bill. Now, we ask all Members of the House to join us in securing the passage of the bill we have agreed upon, known as the Sherwood bill, which provides pensions as follows: Ninety days' service, $15 per month; six months' service, $20 per month; nine months' service, $25 per month; one year's service or more, $30 per month; and a provision that where a soldier is incapacitated from performing manual labor by reason of his service, he will be entitled to $30 per month, regardless of the length of time he served. This will at once put at least 75 per cent of all soldiers on the roll at $30 per month, and the balance will receive a like amount before long.

Mr. Chairman, there are two ways of opposing pension legislation. One is to be openly against it, and that is the honest way. The other is to pretend to be for something you know you can not get, and that is the dishonest way. Every Member of the House who refuses to follow the committee and insists on something he knows can not be done is an enemy to the interests of the soldier and indirectly opposed to pension legislation. I am just as ambitious to have a pension law bear my name as is Mr. ANDERSON or any other Member of the House, but when we know that neither his bill nor mine can be passed in the Senate, then it is the duty of each of us to lay aside our individual preference and support a bill which we have reason to believe the Senate will agree upon. To pass the Anderson age bill or the Adair dollar-a-day bill and send either to the Senate would result in no legislation at all. What I want is liberal pension legislation, and I am willing to support any bill, no matter whose name it bears, that will bring relief to the men who endured hardships and privations that we of this generation might enjoy a united country.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from California?

Mr. ADAIR. I do.

Mr. RAKER. There has been considerable said in the newspapers about this Democratic House being opposed to pension legislation, and as evidence of that it has for the last six weeks kept the Anderson pension bill from coming before the House. It has been stated further—I do not know whether there is anything in it or not—that there is a combination engaged in sending this information over the country. Does the gentleman know anything about that?

Mr. ADAIR. Yes; I have heard it a great many times. The real purpose behind the Anderson bill is to send it to the Senate, knowing that that body will not pass it, in order that no legislation may be enacted. Every Member of this House who has the interest of the old soldier at heart should vote against sending to the Senate such a bill, when it is known to a certainty that it would get no consideration in that body. Every Member of this House who votes against sending such a bill to the Senate is the true friend of the old soldier, and is proceeding along the right line to bring results in the end. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up any more time of the House, but in conclusion want to say that I am willing to stay here in this uncomfortable and almost unbearable heat, with the temperature at times reaching 110° in the shade, to prevent the enemies of pension legislation from sending over to the Senate a bill which it is known can not be passed and would result in no legislation at all, and then when the regular session convenes in December, about four months hence, you will find me here again, using my voice and vote in passing the most liberal pension bill ever passed by Congress in the history of the country. [Loud applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CULLOP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12812, to reduce duties on manufactures of cotton, and had directed him to report that the committee had come to no resolution thereon.

MINORITY VIEWS ON THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] I present the views of the minority of the Committee on Ways and Means (H. Rept. 65, pt. 2), on the bill H. R. 12812, to reduce the duties on the manufactures of cotton.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. HAWLEY, by unanimous consent, was given leave of absence for July 29 and 31, August 1, 2, 3, and 4, on account of inspecting lands offered to the National Forest Reservation Commission as a House member of the said commission.

Mr. WITHERSPOON was granted leave of absence for four days on account of being confined to his room by sickness.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

AMENDMENTS TO HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 130.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, amendments to House joint resolution 130 will be printed for the use of the House.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen who have spoken and who hereafter may speak on the bill H. R. 12812, the bill to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton, may have leave to extend remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. For how long?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Five days after the bill is passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman's request is not confined to those who speak in reference to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken or who shall hereafter speak on House bill 12812, the cotton schedule, shall have five days after the passage of the bill in which to extend remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the gentleman from Alabama that I have no objection to gentlemen who make speeches extending remarks in the RECORD, and I have no objection in this case to gentlemen who speak on this subject; but under the form of his request the gentleman from Alabama might be imposed upon to yield half a minute to a Member who would print a book in the RECORD on some extraneous subject entirely.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman that I do not expect, and it is not my intention, to yield a half minute to anybody except to make remarks on this bill.

Mr. MANN. It is a common thing for gentlemen to apply for recognition simply to extend remarks in the RECORD. The gentleman in charge at the time is not usually very critical about that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I really see no reason why a gentleman should not extend his remarks in the RECORD if he wants an opportunity to state to his constituents what his views are on public questions.

Mr. MANN. And I will say to the gentleman that I have no objection to extending his remarks in the RECORD which he has prepared himself, but it is a decided nuisance, not to say anything further, when you examine the RECORD and turn over page after page, to find printed in small type something that some gentleman has taken out of somebody else's work and inserted in the RECORD as a part of his own remarks. I think it very decidedly ruins the value of the RECORD to do this in any large number of pages, as it frequently is done.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I have no desire that that should be done, but if the gentleman has any suggestion to make about my request, I would be glad to hear it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD (at 6 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until Saturday, July 29, 1911, at 12 o'clock m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2495) to define and classify health, accident, and death benefit companies and associations operating in the District of Columbia, and to amend section 653 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 70), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 816) to provide for plans and specifications for two high schools in the District of Columbia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 71), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1704) relieving and exempting lot No. 53 in Ann S. Parker's subdivision of lots, in square No. 140, of the city of Washington, D. C., from the operation of an act entitled "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens," approved March 3, 1887, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 72)), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12738) to amend the Code of Law for the District of Columbia regarding insurance, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 68), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1785) to amend section 647, chapter 18, Code of Law for the District of Columbia, relating to annual statements of insurance companies, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 69), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 29, 1911.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., as follows:

O Thou who art the life and light of men, the giver of every good gift, the inspiration of all our longings, hopes, and aspirations, the God of our salvation, pour down upon us, we beseech Thee, Thy spiritual gifts and grant us every blessing which makes for righteousness, that we may be true to our better self and grow day by day into the likeness of our Maker, until we all come unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ. For thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-seven Members present—not a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that there be a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The Chair desires to state that the reason so many gentlemen have to arise in order to get the RECORD straightened out is because when the roll is called the uproar is such that it is impossible for the Members either to hear their names or the Clerk to hear the responses. [Applause.] The Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Mr. STEPHENS of California. Mr. Speaker, Mr. NEEDHAM, my colleague, has been sick for two or three days. He answered to two roll calls on yesterday, but was obliged to leave, and is sick at home this morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that he get one of these written slips and ask for leave of absence. Two hundred and twelve Members are present—a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will reopen the doors.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DOUGHTON, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. WEDEMEYER, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. SMITH of Texas, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. SHARP, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. NEEDHAM, indefinitely, on account of illness.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. BARTLETT, who is absent from the House on account of official business, being engaged in the steel investigation in the city of New York.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] asks unanimous consent for leave of absence for his colleague [Mr. BARTLETT] because of his being engaged on an investigating committee. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall object to any indefinite leave of absence. Several gentlemen on that committee have obtained leave of absence for a few days. It may be necessary for the gentleman to be here soon.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave of absence for my colleague for one week.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks for leave of absence for his colleague [Mr. BARTLETT] for one week on account of the absence of the latter with one of the investigating committees. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

AMENDMENTS TO HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 130.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House joint resolution 130, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that the House disagree to the Senate amendments to House joint resolution 130 and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. I think there are some amendments there that may require a vote in the House, and therefore I object.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I did not catch what the gentleman from Illinois said.

Mr. MANN. I said that there are some amendments there that may need a vote in the House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, what is the title of the resolution? I failed to understand it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 130, making appropriations for certain expenses of the House of Representatives incident to the first session of the Sixty-second Congress.

Mr. FITZGERALD. We might arrange to take a vote at present on any amendments the gentleman suggests. I do not know of any amendments that are likely to be agreed to by the conferees.

Mr. MANN. We might want to have a vote on whether the House does agree to the amendments or not. I suggest to the gentleman that he ask that the resolution with amendments be printed for the benefit of the House, so that we may have the amendments before the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It will not be necessary if the gentleman objects. They will be printed without argument.

Mr. MANN. Very well, then, I will object.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. MANN. I do.

The SPEAKER. Then, under the rule, it is referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12812) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama to withhold his motion until I can ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Expenditures in the Post Office Department may be excused from further attendance during to-day's session.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman that these committees already have the leave of the House to sit during the sessions of the House, and, as the question of no quorum is being raised continually in the House, I do not think I could yield for that purpose. If there is a call of the House, the committees certainly ought to be here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12812) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 12812) to reduce the duties on manufactures of cotton, Mr. CULLOP in the chair.

Mr. CULLOP was greeted with applause on assuming the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12812. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill by title.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL]. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, it is my purpose to discuss the pretended and the real attitude of the Republican Party toward a Tariff Board or commission and toward tariff revision, with special reference to the present conditions.

Until recently it has been the boast of the Republican Party that it possessed the most thorough knowledge of the tariff and that all the tax laws enacted by it contained the very essence of fiscal wisdom. The McKinley and the Dingley tariffs were heralded over the country as the most scientific and perfect tariff laws ever enacted. President Taft and most of his party followers strove for a time to fasten the same label of fiscal and scientific perfection on the Payne tariff. But, Mr. Chairman, these vainglorious utterances, these boastful encomiums, these extravagant expressions of laudation, are no longer heard. Instead, we daily hear open confessions among Republican statesmen that the high system of tariff rates contained in the McKinley law, carried into the Dingley law, and sought to be perpetuated in the Payne law are not what they should be and that material changes are necessary, if not imperative. Their confession is accompanied by the astounding declaration that the Republican Party in Congress, together with its President, have not now sufficient wisdom and intelligence to legislate upon the tariff; but that they are reduced to the humiliating strait of appealing to a so-called Tariff Board to supply them with the capacity and intelligence necessary to enact a tariff law that the country will tolerate. During its checkered career this party has resorted to every other art of deception to maintain an intolerable system of high taxation, but only once before in its history has political necessity impelled it to offer the plea of downright ignorance and incapacity as an excuse for its failure to discharge a plain duty to the people by an honest reduction of their taxes. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Confronted by a grave political crisis, seeing the people in open revolt against the high and grossly exorbitant rates in the Payne and preceding tariff laws, the Republican Party, shamelessly and with a countenance every feature of which betrays intent to deceive, now comes forward again with that old dodge, that miserable sham, that worse than no pretense—the sinister plea that only a Tariff Board knows how to subtract. [Applause on the Democratic side.] By this last desperate expedient that partly faintly hopes to appease the people's wrath and again to baffle and, if possible, defeat tariff reduction. Its loyalty to the special interests is equaled only by the shrewd cunningness with which it serves them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, I desire to brand this latest Tariff Board device as premeditated hypocrisy and aggravated false pretense. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I shall recount certain facts, proving beyond controversy, first, that the Republican Party never has given the people material and genuine tariff reduction, and never will do so, and, second, that this same party has always bluntly, sneeringly, and contemptuously dismissed the suggestion of the creation of a Tariff Board or commission, save at such times as it sought to delay honest tariff revision and at the same time to avert impending political disaster. Frenzied by the fear of certain defeat, seeing itself about to be overwhelmed by the rising tide of popular condemnation, this party has once again thrown out this Tariff Board life line. By this ruse the Republicans fooled nearly all of the people once. In making the second attempt they will not even fool all of themselves. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, the necessity for reducing the tariff has been strongly urged upon the Republican Party since the early seventies, but it has persistently and steadfastly declined to do so to any appreciable extent. The reason is obvious; that party has always comprised the beneficiaries of the high tariff and the trusts, and these latter have always composed, as they yet do, the ruling, dominating element of the Republican Party. When high protection dies, the sole remaining mission of that party will have ended. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It will have lost its only asset.

But, Mr. Chairman, what is now and what has been the pretended and the real attitude of this party toward a Tariff Board or commission? Why this sudden clamor for a Tariff Board? Is it in good faith, or is it history merely repeating itself? Let us see whether Republicans, in their extremity, have not engaged in the same "about-face," somersault performance before. In 1872 the Democratic Party commenced the battle for tariff reform. It insisted that, the war being long since over, the country should return to the just and honest tariff-for-revenue system existing prior thereto.

The Republicans then, as now, in a hard and fast alliance with the high-tariff beneficiaries, declined to make reasonable reductions. Prior to 1883 they made no permanent change in the war tariff as it related to protective duties. They only reduced or repealed direct taxes and such import duties as those on tea, coffee, and other articles we do not produce. By 1882 the people were ripe for revolt against the party in power on account of the burdensome tariff exactions, just as they are today. Then it was that the Republican Congress created a Tariff Commission or board as the only alleged scientific cure for existing tariff ills. Loud proclamation everywhere was made by Republican soothsayers of this scientific relief speedily coming. The Tariff Commission was to prescribe, and an eager Republican Congress was to administer, the dose that would bring permanent relief from all tariff ailments. What was the result? Instead of a specific, they gave the country an opiate. It was worse than a Barmecide feast; worse than the fabled Dead Sea fruit that turns to ashes on one's lips. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The Tariff Commission of 1883 was composed of gentlemen who—though all were protectionists—in ability would compare favorably with any commission that might to-day be selected. That commission traveled over 7,000 miles, visited 29 cities, examined more than 600 witnesses, taking testimony filling 2,625 pages, and, to the surprise of the Republicans, felt obliged to recommend a substantial reduction of duties amounting from 20 to 25 per cent. Their bill was offered in the House and referred to the Ways and Means Committee, which reported a different bill; the House debated this in amended form. In the meantime the Senate took up a purely internal-revenue bill previously sent over from the House, and, disregarding the report of the Tariff Commission entirely, attached to it the principal part of what was afterwards known as the tariff act of 1883, and the balance of it was added in the conference committee. This law, instead of responding to the facts and recommendations of the Tariff Board, reduced some rates, increased others, substituted specific for ad valorem duties, and thus cunningly revised the tariff so as to impose higher average duties than before—47.10 per cent for the year 1887 as compared with an average rate of 42.5 per cent for the 10-year period prior to the so-called revision of 1883.

Mr. John L. Hayes, long secretary of the American Wool Association, was president of the Tariff Commission, and he exposed Republican perfidy when, shortly after the passage of this act, he wrote as follows:

> Reduction in itself was by no means desirable to us; it was a concession to public sentiment, a bending of the top and branches to the wind of public opinion to save the trunk of the protective system.

Mr. Chairman, this utterance clearly defines the real attitude of the Republican Party both then and now relative to the removal of our unjust tax burdens. Then, as now, the popular demand for tariff reform had become acute. Then, as now, the Republican Party could foresee disaster, both to itself and the high protective system, unless the people could be appeased. Then, as now, the real friends of tariff reduction insisted that the way to revise the tariff was to revise it, and that Congress should bring immediate relief to the country through revision of duties, while Republicans, through the agency of a commission, sought to postpone revision and to preserve the unequal and oppressive system of taxes. How well they succeeded by this tariff-commission dodge I have just detailed. From its inception Democrats in and out of Congress denounced this entire move of the Republicans as bad faith and sham revision. Such it was. Mr. Chairman, will history now repeat itself? Can the Republican Party bunco the American people a second time by precisely the same method and under similar political and economic conditions? [Applause on the Democratic side.] "We shall see what we shall behold." [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield right there for an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman state to the House just how many years the Republican Party under that former commission succeeded in delaying any action at all with reference to a revision of the tariff?

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will bear with me just a few moments, I am briefly tracing the record up to that time.

Mr. HARDY. I thought the gentleman was leaving that part of his discussion.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the House now has under consideration the cotton schedule. I assume that the Republicans, as they recently did with the woolen schedule, will move to recommit it to the Ways and Means Committee, there to await a report from the so-called Tariff Board, with a view to administering their emergency scientific treatment. [Laughter and applause on the Democratic side.] Mr. Chairman, we can best judge the outcome of this proposed application of science by recalling the method and experience of the Republicans and their nonpartisan scientific Tariff Commission in dealing with this same cotton schedule in 1883. Senator William B. Allison, long the Republican leader of the Senate, spoke in that body on February 3, 1883, as follows:

Now, I want to say one word in regard to the Tariff Commission report upon the cotton schedule. The truth is that the Tariff Commission did not examine this cotton matter at all, it may as well be said on the floor of the Senate; nor did they make this schedule that is called the Tariff Commission report schedule. It was made by a cotton manufacturer from Boston, with an expert appraiser in New York, and the Tariff Commission accepted it.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

When the knowledge of that fact came to me, I had no particular faith in the Tariff Commission report on this cotton schedule, and therefore I examined it as best I could for myself, hearing the witnesses, reading the testimony, and hearing people who I supposed knew something about it, and in whom I had faith.

Mr. Chairman, is the present administration endeavoring to repeat this burlesque performance? Do Republicans imagine that the American people can be thus flimflammed and goldbricked a second time? Does this exhibition of tariff science, described by Senator Allison, inspire the present professed Republican confidence in a Tariff Board to such wonderful extent as to move Republicans in Congress to postpone all tariff-reform measures until the board informs Congress just how to proceed? Blind and credulous, indeed, must be the citizen who fails to detect the shallow pretense and the transparent subterfuge in this latest Republican movement to evade and postpone tax revision. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

For 40 years Republicans have had only two controlling purposes, namely, the maintenance of party supremacy and the high protective-tariff system. Instead of lowering this system as the war left it, they have constantly raised it. In 1888, when a Democratic House sent the Mills bill to a Republican Senate, did that body urge a tariff commission or attempt to lower the tariff? No. Believing that the immense contributions of the high-tariff beneficiaries to their campaign fund would enable them to carry the election soon to follow, the Republicans in the Senate offered a substitute that largely increased the already high war-tariff rates. Besides, the tariff commission fiasco of 1883 was still fresh in the public mind. One lone Republican Senator offered a tariff commission amendment to the Senate substitute. The attitude of Republicans generally toward a commission at that time, as well as recently, is best explained by Senator Aldrich in a statement made in another body in July, 1909, in reference to this commission amendment, as follows:

There was not a member of the Senate Finance Committee in 1888 for it, and I do not believe that a member of the committee would now be for it.

Mr. Aldrich, it is seen, was also speaking for his colleagues while the Payne-Aldrich bill was under consideration. We thus behold the Republican Party in 1882, while under the stress of threatened political adversity, proclaiming a tariff commission as a paramount necessity, and in 1888, when hope of success ran high, spurning it as a useless appendage. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, emboldened by success in the general elections of 1888, the Republicans in Congress turned up their noses and smiled in contemptuous derision whenever a tariff commission was mentioned. They threw off all disguise and, in flagrant disregard of the recommendations of the commission in 1883 for 20 to 25 per cent reduction, enacted the McKinley law in 1890, which raised the protective rates to an average of 48.50 per cent—far in excess of those in existence during the Civil War, they being 37.75 per cent. Republicans in Congress then patted each other on the back and solemnly pronounced themselves the greatest scientific tariff experts of that or any age.

For tariff reasons, most obvious to everyone save the average Republican, that party was overwhelmingly defeated in 1892. It was powerless to do or seriously suggest anything until 1897. In that year the freebooting manufacturers, who had furnished the swag with which the Republicans won in 1896, as in 1888, insolently demanded that all tariff rates, wherever the slightest competition might occur, should at once be made as nearly prohibitory as possible. The Republican Party meekly and pusillanimously complied by enacting the Dingley law. The rates were raised to Alpine heights, reaching 52.07 per cent in 1899. That party still retained its professed practical and comprehensive scientific knowledge of the tariff in all its details, and promptly proclaimed its Members of Congress more than capable of drafting a completely logical and scientific tariff law. No superfluous tariff commissions or boards for them. The sole power and duty of enacting revenue laws was vested in Congress by the Constitution.

Mr. Fowler, of New Jersey, and Mr. Stone, of Pennsylvania, each offered tariff-commission bills in the House. Their Republican colleagues at once classed them as impractical dreamers. The Republican Party had completely mastered the science of tariff taxation and written its very essence in the Dingley law. Cursed be the Republican who dared to impeach the scientific tariff knowledge of his party by urging the assistance of a Tariff Board. The Democratic Party, unfortunately, was powerless at that time to come to the relief of the people. That intellectual giant, Thomas B. Reed, in a magazine article clearly expressed the ridicule and aversion with which Republicans generally looked upon a Tariff Board, or commission, in the following language:

But can we not have, sitting in perpetual session, a body of men nonpartisan, judicious, wise, and incorruptible? Yes; in your mind. You can have anything in your mind. Imagination is unlimited, and it is very delightful to wander round among possible impossibilities. Just think of a nonpartisan free trader sitting on a tariff tax! Of course he would be above any prejudice except his own. I saw one Tariff Commission sit in 1882, and its report was not enacted into a law. All its mistakes were, and the result was, satisfactory to nobody.

Mr. Chairman, the Dingley rates prohibited almost all competitive importations, save luxuries. The American manufacturer was given a complete monopoly of the American market. Trusts sprang up like mushrooms. The people began to groan and loudly complain under these tax burdens soon after 1900. But Theodore Roosevelt, who was a master hand at throwing blazing fagots into the air, so as to attract the people's attention away from those that were falling on their heads, managed to divert attention from the destructive tariff laws until 1908. By this time the tariff burdens were fast becoming unbearable. The people were in open rebellion. Republican insurgency was breaking out in many sections. Republican leaders in Congress sought to quiet the rising anger of the masses by suggesting that they would revise the tariff at the short session of the Sixtieth Congress. Such vague assurances but increased the demand for early revision. The country well knew that if the party crisis should pass the Republicans, like Pharaoh, would soon repent of their promises. Whereupon it was officially announced in Congress that the Republicans would revise the tariff a year later at an extra session.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us see whether Republicans regarded a Tariff Board, or commission, as an extreme necessity, as an essential prerequisite to tariff revision. Their conduct during 1908 and 1909 sheds much light upon their real motives now. Let us see whether they trifled with the public conscience then or are attempting to do so now.

Mr. RUCKER of Missouri. Both.

Mr. HULL. A Republican Congress was in session from December, 1907, until in June, 1908. Its leaders had promised tariff revision during 1909. Did this Congress create a Tariff Board and put it to work a year in advance? Nay, verily. As early as January, 1908, Senator Beveridge introduced and urged a tariff-commission bill in another body, but he failed to muster a "corporal's guard" on his side of the Chamber in its support. On February 6, 1908, about 30 representatives of the National Association of Manufacturers called on President Roosevelt and asked him to send a special message asking for a tariff commission. Strange to say, he enjoined secrecy as to the conference. Later in the day it was given out at the White House that no such special message would be sent to Congress by the President.

On February 26, 1908, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. DALZELL, one of the "big five" who then absolutely dominated legislation in the House, in a speech on this floor said:

There will in no event be any Tariff Commission. [Renewed applause on the Republican side.] The men who made the Constitution intrusted to the representatives of the people, elected every two years, the exclusive prerogative of initiating revenue measures. During all our history the House of Representatives has jealously guarded that prerogative, never surrendered it, and both Democratic and Republican Representatives in this respect, standing on a common platform, never will. [Applause.]

On the 4th day of February, 1908, a large delegation of leading business men from over the country waited on the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], then Speaker, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], then chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, and pleaded in speech after speech for a Tariff Board of some kind to assist Congress in revising the tariff 14 months later. Speaker CANNON replied, in part, as follows:

We had a Tariff Commission once, composed of very able men. They performed in the early eighties. We revised the tariff. I am told, Brother PAYNE, by those who were in that Congress, that they heard all the industries, and the report of the Tariff Commission was so voluminous that they did not even read it. * * * I fear greatly that you would turn into a debating school, just as we do in the House, and that there would be liable to be a majority and a minority report—maybe not; I should hope not—if this commission is constituted. * * * You say that Congress is not fully informed. Let me tell you something. I want to say that I do not believe there is a man in the United States who knows as much of the schedules and who is as well equipped for that work as the gentleman upon whose shoulder I lay my hand [Mr. PAYNE].

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] replied, in part, as follows:

I think the signs of the times are that next winter this committee will be forming a tariff bill. Now, the question is whether the committee should receive the aid of a Tariff Commission. That is one of the questions. We shall invite in all the aid we can get, all the information we can get—and our power is great to send out and get information. We know where to get the Government experts for information about all the intricacies of the operations of the various schedules of the tariff. We know where to get the various decisions as to what the language means in the different schedules. We know where to get the information from manufacturers, or merchants, or mechanics, the country over. Shall we get this information at first hand, confronting the men who present it, cross-examining them, and using our endeavors to get at the facts, or shall we delegate that power to another body of men appointed as a Tariff Commission? Speaking for one, and from what I have seen in the formation of tariff bills, the committee, no matter what the Tariff Commission might report, would seek its information at first hand.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

* * * You probably have gathered from the tone of my remarks that I am not able to see the wisdom of a Tariff Commission.

The decided opposition of Senator Aldrich and other standpat leaders in another body was equally well known.

Deliberately rejecting the remotest idea of a Tariff Board to assist in the coming tariff revision as "fantastic, futile, chimerical, impracticable, and impossible," we find both Republican Houses of Congress in May, 1908, in lieu of a tariff board, passing resolutions authorizing the Ways and Means and the Finance Committees to sit during recess and to gather all essential facts and data looking toward the preparation of a bill for revision. Their hearings commenced early in November, 1908.

Mr. Chairman, during the Republican national convention in June, 1908, a tariff-commission plank was urged before the committee on resolutions, but it declined to report on that subject.

Mr. Chairman, what was Candidate Taft saying and doing at this crucial time about a commission—he who now demands that the entire legislative machinery of the Government shall come to a standstill to await the pleasure of a roving, junketing, irresponsible Tariff Board? [Applause on the Democratic side.] In his speech of acceptance June 28, 1908, he favored revision the next spring, based upon "the preliminary investigations already begun by the appropriate committees of the House and Senate." [Applause on the Democratic side.] We next find him conferring with the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee December 9, 1908, and later in the day he gave out a statement in part as follows:

From my conversation with them and the discussion which followed as to the examination which they are now conducting and expect to conduct, I have every reason to be confident that they have taken three times as much evidence as has ever been taken in the preparation of other tariffs. * * * Not only from conversation with the members together, but with the members individually, I am quite convinced that they are in good faith going to prepare a bill which will be a thorough revision in accordance with the platform of the Republican Party.

In his inaugural address March 4, 1909, and in his message to the Congress called to revise the tariff, March 16, 1909, he was as silent as to the need of a tariff board as he will be 100 years hence.

Here is another echo from the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], November 27, 1908, in a letter to John Van Cleave, he says:

The present committee will have more complete information at its disposal than has any previous committee, even when the former Tariff Commission reported in 1883.

He amplified this very much in a speech on this floor on March 23, 1909.

In January, 1909, Mr. Taft, in letters written to three or four gentlemen, expressed views favoring a permanent board of tariff experts, but he was careful not to suggest that Congress should have its aid in making the coming revision. On the contrary, the New York Tribune of February 18, 1909, states that in a conference between him, Speaker CANNON, and Senator Aldrich, Mr. Taft indicated that the method by which Congress arrived at its conclusions was a legislative matter, and he did not propose to interfere. This is in striking contrast with his present attitude. The paper further states that these two leaders, who had assured Mr. Taft that Congress would not have a Tariff Board, "seemed pleased with Mr. Taft's attitude." Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, this same paper, dated February 27, 1909, states that a delegation from the National Association of Manufacturers called on President-elect Taft in New York and strongly urged a Tariff Commission "which would give the country an honest and intelligent tariff," and that Mr. Taft replied that he favored immediate revision of the tariff; that the impending tariff revision was the most important matter to be attended to; that the appointment of the commission would only retard the speedy revision of the tariff. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He then added that he had no objection to a commission or to its appointment at a later day to gather facts about the tariff after it was revised. The New York Herald of the same date quoted Mr. Taft's attitude, in part, as follows:

The one advantage of appointing a commission with power to revise the schedules would be that it would postpone action, thus giving the country time to fully recover from the effects of the recent depression. On the other hand, the existence of such a commission would keep the business community on tenter hooks all the time and would be a perpetually disturbing influence. Better to have the matter up before Congress in extra session and settle it one way or the other for a term of years. This seems to be the view of Mr. Taft.

It is thus seen that when pressed the President-elect expressly declined to favor a Tariff Board to aid in the proposed revision of 1909.

Mr. Chairman, what followed? The extra session convened. The lobbyists of the manufacturers thronged the Capitol and in great glee wrote their respective schedules. Senator Aldrich piloted the old hulk of high protection safely through Congress and past the Chief Executive. The result was that abominable iniquity, that ghastly abortion—the Payne-Aldrich law. [Applause on the Democratic side.] It was found that existing high rates had been made still higher, being an average increase of 1.71 per cent. Each lobbyist, in a state of ecstatic delight, departed, singing—

I care not for the stars that shine,
I only know that I've got mine.

[Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

The Republican Party heaved a sigh of relief that sounded like the voice of many waters. The President was bewildered but buoyant. He had gotten lost in the tariff mirror-maze constructed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Aldrich], and, in the reflection, mistook "revision upward" for "revision downward." [Applause on the Democratic side.] The country was thunderstruck. Trusts and combines, in ghoulish glee, shouted, "On with the dance." [Applause on the Democratic side.] There never was such bigotry and insolence in the camp of high protection since the world began. The doctrine of passive obedience had been reestablished. Prices of most necessaries immediately took up their abode with the stars. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

But, Mr. Chairman, anticipation was not realization. What had been a sporadic insurrection among the masses soon became a nation-wide revolution. It is now on. [Applause on the Democratic side.] A Tariff Board which, to Republicans, previously had been lunatic nonsense became "their hearts' delight" as the acme of scientific economic sanity. [Applause on the Democratic side.] To them the tariff thenceforth became shrouded in darkness and mystery. Republican statesmanship and infallibility in the construction of scientific tariffs suddenly collapsed. [Applause on the Democratic side.] A Tariff Board was the only touchstone for its revision. Republicans, brass-throated and leather-lunged, who had formerly denounced it gradually proceeded in dulcet tones to praise it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Their friendship for this board soon became as warm as that David had for Jonathan. With some of that unreasoning hope that made Micawber's life so beautiful, they imagine that somehow this board may be the means of saving the life of their party and the high protective tariff. Since the last election, in which the Payne law was so overwhelmingly condemned, Republicans in loud lamentation have cried out, "O Lord, what shall we do to be saved?" [Applause on the Democratic side.] But since the prayers of the wicked are not answered, they have again embraced a Tariff Board, or commission, as a device to quell popular indignation.

Ah, Mr. Chairman, this conversion is too sudden. It is not even deathbed repentance. It is patently insincere. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The situation, therefore, is that the minority in this House, inspired by the President, has asked that Congress adjourn in order that the various tariff bills passed by this House shall be first reviewed and approved by the so-called Tariff Board before becoming a law. Until now, Mr. Chairman, no earthly tribunal, save the American people and the great Supreme Court of the United States, has exercised the high prerogative of reviewing the action of Congress. I brand this as Tariff-Board referendum pure and simple. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Even the President has only the veto power.

Mr. Chairman, I never expect to witness a more grotesque and at the same time a more humiliating scene than that when the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], who has grown gray as an expert student of the tariff, arose in his place some weeks ago and at the behest of his party solemnly moved that the woolen bill be recommitted to await the review of a Tariff Board. Here was Roderick blowing through the wrong end of his bugle. It was doubtless galling to him, as it must have been to every Member on that side, that a once great political party found itself in such extremities as to oblige it to make the pusillanimous suggestion that this House's action on a great legislative matter affecting 90,000,000 freemen must be reviewed by an irresponsible Tariff Board before either branch of Congress could proceed further. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, how did this so-called Tariff Board happen? What was the prime source of its origin? From what fountain of tariff wisdom has it been drinking? What is the real scope and significance of its existence? In the first place, as far back as 1907, when it became apparent that public sentiment would soon compel a revision of the abnormally high tariff rates, their chief beneficiaries, the manufacturers, originated a propaganda for a Tariff Commission. They feared that the people, through their Representatives in Congress, would cut out some of their protection graft when they came to revise the tariff, and they judged that a protectionist commission might gather enough one-sided facts to ward off this threatened result. I defy contradiction when I say that their propaganda conducted since 1907 was with the sole view of securing a commission of protectionists, which would urge such nominal revision as would retain inviolate all, or most all, of their protection graft. [Applause on the Democratic side.] This is admitted, in effect, by Mr. Miles, one of the heads of that movement, at the time he conferred with President Taft in New York in February, 1909, relative to a Tariff Commission. He wanted the high protective system strictly preserved, and considered a commission the safest means of so doing. No one has denied this fact. Mr. James W. Van Cleave, another of its promoters, said:

> Revision means neither reduction nor increase. It means adjustment to the conditions that exist at the time the revision is made.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman said he defied contradiction. Mr. Miles is a resident of my city of Racine. He is a manufacturer of agricultural implements. The tariff on agricultural implements is 15 per cent only—a low rate—and agricultural implements are now on the free list under the Payne tariff law to all countries which will let our implements into their territory free. That low tariff met with the approbation of Mr. Miles.

Not only that, but he and those whom he represents are very anxious indeed to have free trade in agricultural implements between this country and Canada, and between this country and any other country that will let our agricultural implements go into its territory free. They say that they do not want tariff legislation hereafter to be the result of logrolling in Congress, but that it be firmly established until an impartial commission, after investigation, shall present the facts to the American people.

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will pardon me——

Mr. COOPER. In other words, the manufacturers of implements are in favor of taking the tariff absolutely out of politics. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HULL. I am, to some extent, familiar with the hearings three years ago, when Mr. Van Cleave had a long discussion with the members of the Ways and Means Committee. Some accusation was made then that he was not a high protectionist—but without going into the minutiæ, Mr. Chairman, against the impression and statement of my friend from Wisconsin, relative to the real purpose of this propaganda that has been conducted since 1907 by this National Association of Manufacturers, I wish to read the resolutions adopted by this national association in annual convention in 1909, which lay bare the whole secret of this insidious clamor for a Tariff Commission, as follows:

> We reaffirm our unqualified indorsement of the American policy of protection. * * * As the most effective means of insuring the continuance of this policy, etc., we heartily favor the creation of a board, etc., for the use of Congress and the Executive.

A wayfaring man, though a fool, can read the object of a Republican commission. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

When the Payne law was enacted, article 718, section 2, provided as follows:

> To secure information to assist the President in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him by this section—that is, relating to the application of the maximum and minimum rates—and the officers of the Government in the administration of the customs laws, the President is hereby authorized to employ such persons as may be required.

The present board yet hangs by this slender thread. It now has no additional power.

Another Republican body had just previously voted down Senator LA FOLLETTE'S amendment providing for a full-fledged tariff commission upon the ground that Republicans did not want further tariff agitation for many years. They thought the people would wear the Payne tariff yoke for a great length of time. The real purpose of this provision in the Payne law is best explained by Senator Hale in another body on August 4, 1909, as follows:

> When this subject came up, Mr. President, as it does in the urgent deficiency bill, I went over this whole question with the President as to his scope of duties. I showed to him that it was not intended to keep this subject open, but to confine him to the question of discriminations, discriminating duties, and discriminating processes by other powers. In framing the language of the item of appropriation that gives the President the amount of money that he asked, it has been confined strictly to the language I have recited as a part of the tariff act. I have no fear the President will undertake to exceed that. I do not believe that he will.

Again, he says:

> But the Senate conferees found the House conferees a rock against any form, not only of tariff commission, but of any authority, that should be given for any officer of the Government to keep this subject open. * * * What is the business of the President under the maximum and minimum provisions? It is not to inquire into the condition of labor in other countries—the relative cost of labor there and here. He is limited to an inquiry as to the discrimination that is made by other countries against the United States. He so understands it. I understand that he so understands it. I do not believe and I do not expect and I do not fear that the President would seek to amplify this authority.

But, Mr. Chairman, he has done so.

Speaking further, relative to possible changes of the Payne law, he said:

> * * * It is not any tariff commission that will settle this question in the future. It will be Congress that will settle it; it will be the House primarily and the Senate secondarily; and no tariff commission will add 1 ounce of weight to the deliberations of the two bodies which must at last settle all these questions.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, had I the time I could quote numerous other Republican leaders in the same strain. Suffice it to say that these utterances of Senator Hale reflected the views of the large majority of the Republican Party. But I must add as the crowning, crushing fact in this argument the statement of President Taft made at Winona in September, 1909. It is almost cruel to do so, in view of his present changed attitude. Now, Congress is helpless to proceed without the enlightening facts and conclusions of this Tariff Board. Then, in referring to these same facts, the President said:

> I do not intend, unless compelled or directed by Congress, to submit the results of these investigations, but to treat them merely as incidental facts brought out officially from time to time, etc.

He proposed to use them only in his department as a basis for a recommendation at some far-off time in the future. Then, the facts gathered by this board were so valueless that the President would deposit them in a musty pigeonhole in his office. Now, while the American people are playing on the thick cranium of the Republican Party with a trip hammer [applause on the Democratic side] the President would prorogue Congress until his beneficent board in its own good time allows its effulgent rays of tariff light to shine on the benighted minds of the membership of the great legislative department of this Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, in the spring of 1910, within a few months after the President had pronounced the Payne law the best tariff law that had ever been enacted, we see him clamoring at the door of Congress for $250,000 with which to make his Tariff Board permanent. Of course, he did not expect his party to again revise the tariff—so perfect—for many years. Then why did he desire to perpetuate his board? He, in February, 1909, had stated to Van Cleave and Miles in New York that he would be willing to have a board after the coming revision to gather facts relative to the working of the new law. Mr. Chairman, he desired a permanent board of three Republicans merely to gather facts that would sustain and perpetuate the Payne law and sustain intact the so-called principle of high protection as embraced in that law. This is beyond controversy. Republican leaders in Congress, though skeptical as to the board's necessity just then, reluctantly complied with the President's request, but for the additional purpose, as the organ of the Protective Tariff League stated—of placating the insurgents and putting a stop to their criticisms of the tariff of 1909.

Besides they considered this board more harmless than a tariff commission with greater powers, which insurgents were then urging. I may say here that these insurgents are not wholly blind. They have discovered that the pretended zeal of their stand-pat element for a commission is a subterfuge to obtain delay and they now show a partial willingness to proceed with tariff reduction.

Mr. Chairman, I am justified, from all the conduct and utterances of Republicans most potential in their party's councils, in making the charge that, prior to last fall, the present administration and its Congress had not harbored the thought of touching the tariff for years to come. The President's board was to constitute a buffer sufficient to evade, placate, and postpone. But while the last autumn leaves were falling, a confused sound, like "the wreck of matter and the crash of worlds," suddenly broke upon Republican ears. [Applause on the Democratic side.] An election had occurred. And lo and behold, "Ichabod" was written all over the Payne law. [Renewed applause.]

Mr. Chairman, a few weeks later the President and his party leaders in Congress returned to Washington, and, with faces shining like that of John on the Isle of Patmos, hastened to proclaim the speedy creation of a permanent tariff commission as the supreme duty of the hour. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Something of this kind became necessary, in the language of President Taft, "for the purpose of more nearly conforming to the party promise." Their perfidious game of tariff revision by a permanent commission must now be worked overtime. This claptrap must be belched forth from the throats of every Republican in a tone of sincerity. Protectionist Cæsar calls for Tariff Commission Cassius to help him or he sinks. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The fortress of high protection is seriously threatened. The permanent tariff commission bill was beaten at the last moment, but the President yet clings to his original board as a substitute. We are now confronted with the paradox of a presidential board securing and furnishing facts and conclusions, gathered to sustain a high protective tariff, to a Democratic House with which to revise the tariff down to a strict revenue basis. This is a ridiculous absurdity. This board, under the direction of the President, is the sole judge of what facts are needed. Only the President, not Congress, directs the board. Its members gather only such facts as the President suggests, ignoring or suppressing those not desired. The documents supplementary to the President's message of June 20, 1911, recite that—the functions of the Tariff Board are administrative and judicial; that the highest function of the board will consist in weighing the evidence gathered, in reaching sound conclusions thereon, and in embodying all essential facts in its reports. * * * Thus far the final decisions of the board have in every case been unanimous.

Mr. Chairman, this statement shows that the board will send its "judicial conclusions" to Congress accompanied by only such facts as the judgment of the board may deem essential. These "judicial conclusions" are expected to have a controlling influence over the deliberations of Congress in revising the tariff, otherwise the board would be useless save as a scheme of delay. The board, not Congress, is to be the judge of the "essential facts." The Republican requirement is a tariff that will equal the difference in the cost of production here and abroad plus a reasonable profit. How much will the board allow for a reasonable profit? Will its profit allowance be niggardly, or full and ample? What will be the board's basis of the cost of production? Suppose the difference should be 100, 200, 300, or even 500 per cent, where would the board stop? What will be its basis upon which it computes "a reasonable profit"? What will be its "conclusions" and "essential facts" relative to articles sold abroad cheaper than at home? In what order will the President direct his board to report on the remaining 11 tariff schedules? Which of them will he postpone until after the election, thereby tying the hands of Congress indefinitely? Does not this plan vest the time and manner of revising the tariff exclusively in the President? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Suppose, Mr. Chairman, Congress should differ with the board and with the President upon these important propositions? Suppose Congress should differ with the board as to what principles shall govern us in revising the tariff? In levying a tariff for revenue, of what concern to Congress would be the "judicial conclusions" and "essential facts" of the Tariff Board relative to a "reasonable profit"? Of what value and concern to Congress would be its "judicial conclusions" and "essential facts" in support of a tariff for protection? The board evidently keeps the doctrine of protection carefully in mind, for on page 17 of the President's message and supplement of June 20 I find this authorized statement:

The producer who believes that he needs and should have protection should be willing to furnish facts in support of this plea.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Aye, Mr. Chairman, this board has already invited the cohorts of "predatory wealth" to come on. How much protection will be recommended for the United States Steel Trust? How much for the Sugar Trust? How much for the Woolen Trust? How much for the Agricultural Implement Trust? How much for the Shoe-machine Trust? How much for the beef and hundreds of other trusts? Finally, Mr. Chairman, what amounts will the board recommend as a "reasonable profit" to this immense horde of hungry trusts? Or, will these trusts fix their own "reasonable profits," as heretofore? [Applause on the Democratic side.] How can Republicans be serious in urging a program so farcical and ludicrous? Is a Tariff Board necessary to inform Congress that the present tariff rate of 91 per cent on cheap cotton stockings is too high; that 100 per cent on cotton underwear, 63 per cent on sugar, 136 per cent on woolen blankets, 154 per cent on women's dress goods, 121 per cent on flannels, 96 per cent on shawls, and rates in like proportion on other necessaries are too high and should be reduced at once? The Republican plan would require the masses of the American people to shiver and go hungry through many more winters—awaiting the pleasure of the board—before reducing all these unconscionable rates and thereby giving the people cheaper food and clothing. [Applause on the Democratic side.] At the present rate this board will require several years in which to report on all the tariff schedules. In the meantime Congress will be idle; the American people will continue to pay $2,000,000,000 annually as tribute to protectionist greed; hunger, cold, thirst, and untimely death will stalk abroad in the land; and high protection—the "sum of all villainies"—will continue to flourish like a green bay tree. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

But it is said that Germany and France have commissions. True, but they are composed exclusively of high protectionists. It required six to eight years for these commissions to make their first report. Most of their time was devoted to the questions of a safe margin of protection, "reasonable profits," classifications and subdivisions of articles to be taxed, and so forth. Theirs was a work of making stronger the high protective system, of fastening increased burdens of taxes on the great middle and poorer classes, of so scientifically adjusting the high-tariff yoke to the necks of the masses as to secure the maximum of protection, including "reasonable profits," to the manufacturers, with the minimum of complaint from the plundered taxpayers. Do we need to imitate their "scientific" example? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Republicans are no longer content merely to plunder the people, but they now curiously desire to plunder them "scientifically." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. RANDELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman such time as he desires in which to conclude his remarks. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, my contention is that 483 Representatives of the American people, clothed with the power, duty, and responsibility of legislating for their welfare, know more about the tariff than five gentlemen comprising a Tariff Board. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Congress has available all the avenues of information that the board has, and others in addition. It is futile to talk about taking the tariff out of politics so long as high protection is advocated. The tariff went out of politics from 1846 to 1861, but not through a commission. Protection was virtually destroyed, and along with it its champion, the Whig Party. Should history thus repeat itself, the funeral of the Republican Party will be near at hand. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, Congress always welcomes valuable facts in connection with proposed legislation from whatever source. But I have long contended that neither a presidential board nor a congressional commission was the wise policy. The practical course would be for Congress to authorize the appropriate committees of the two Houses permanently to employ experts to gather and compile tariff facts under their direction, extending this right to the minority as well as the majority. The best possible results would be thereby obtained.

Mr. Chairman, I have spoken impersonally concerning the present board, for I know little about its personnel. This board is acting under the direction of the President. I criticize the policy, the plan, and the purpose of the Republican Party, not the individual membership of the board. I make the further point that even though the board should make highly valuable and sound recommendations as to reduction, they would be brushed aside by a Republican Congress just as heretofore. Grant and Arthur made earnest appeals for a radical reduction of protective duties, but they fell upon deaf Republican ears. In no event could the report of this board—prepared along protective tariff lines—be of particular value to the Democratic House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The difference between the two party doctrines of taxation is as wide as that between good and evil. It is historic and fundamental.

On March 3, 1911, Hon. Thomas H. Carter, speaking in another body concerning the probability that the Democratic House at a coming extra session might be asked to await the report of a Tariff Board, said:

> In times gone by a tariff board has reported and Congress has acted without much reference to the report. I believe that in due course that will occur again. So the embarrassment apprehended is after all of a vague and shadowy nature.

This great Republican spoke in words of candor and true prophecy.

Mr. Chairman, the Republican excuse for revision by the aid of a Tariff Board is a false one. This crafty scheme is a Trojan horse with which to deceive and betray well-meaning tariff reformers into the hands of the stand-pat protectionists. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Just now many standpatters are posing as ardent downward revisionists through a Tariff Board. They are "plain-clothes" standpatters, searching for aid and recruits in the camp of tariff reform. They wear no longer the uniform of organized greed that used to gag at the very word "Tariff Commission." As the popular demand for relief from tax burdens becomes stronger, Republican promises of downward revision will grow correspondingly louder. With much show and flourish they will, in words, consign the trusts to "outer darkness." Next winter, with a great parade of words and figures, they will, if hard pressed, vow that the country must have real reduction immediately. Then will we witness a great mimic battle for tariff reform. Doubtless the ex-Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. Aldrich, will be called from his retirement, Cincinnatus-like, to command the stand-pat hosts that will wage destructive war on the forces of rapacity and greed. All the other nimble tariff jugglers will be called into service. Every tariff magician, conjurer, enchanter, sorcerer, and necromancer will be in great demand. The result will be that the American people will receive a tremendous dose of soporifics, narcotics, opiates, and anodynes. There will be "much sound and fury, signifying nothing." It will be the old tariff-juggling story of 1883 over again. It will again be the "bending of the top and branches to the wind of public opinion to save the trunk of the protective system." [Applause on the Democratic side.] They will probably consent to a number of reductions; they may even propose such.

But such action, like reciprocity, will be only "a tub to the whale," "a sop to Cerberus." A cunning purpose will be behind every tariff step they take. Wherever they can raise a rate or leave one undisturbed they will mark all the beneficiaries under it for their own in the coming election. Where they reduce a rate or rates, they will give assurance to the manufacturers affected that these are forced reductions, and they will promise them that if they shall contribute liberally to enable the old party of standpat protection to win at the polls, theirs and all other tariff rates will again be promptly restored, as they were written in the McKinley, Dingley, and Payne laws. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The result, Mr. Chairman, will be that, with this certain knowledge held out before the manufacturers of the country, there will be the greatest fat frying next year in the country's history. Republican promises to reraise the tariff, if restored to power, will again be made a pawn for enough millions to buy the American electorate, if possible. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The tariff to-day is higher than it was prior to the revision upward in 1909. Therefore, there was better excuse for asking the extra session of 1909 to adjourn without action than can be offered in support of adjournment now without action. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, Democrats may well ask, in the language of the Prince of Wales in the midst of carnage on the field of Shrewsbury, "Is it a time to jest or dally now?" We are admonished from on high to "be not weary in well doing." Our manufacturers lazily recline in the hothouse of protection and refuse to get out into the crisp, invigorating atmosphere of reasonable and fair competition. They well know that Democratic success next year means a tariff for revenue only. [Applause on the Democratic side.] All their energies and resources will be used to encompass our defeat. But an aroused public sentiment and a quickened public conscience will bring to our support millions of citizens who have hitherto been indifferent or antagonistic to the reduction of taxation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The great independent press of the country, for whose benefit, in part, Democracy has just placed wood pulp and print paper on the free list, would be selfish and treacherous indeed if it should now desert us and retire from the conflict or go over to the enemy. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I predict that it will loyally stand by us until the entire battle is won. I predict that it will not hesitate to continue to warn the people against the perils of the Scylla of high protection on the one hand and the Charybdis of a presidential Tariff Board on the other. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Then, Mr. Chairman, with these immense recruits, with Republicans trailing after the black flag of standpattism, and with Democrats in solid column marching shoulder to shoulder under the banner of honest tariff reform, how can we fail to win in the great battle of ballots in 1912? [Prolonged applause.]

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, before yielding time I want to call attention to a mistake in the minority report, on page 3, where the word "majority" appears in print, and should be "minority." In order to emphasize the correction, I will extend these short remarks by printing a copy of the corrected views of the minority in the RECORD.

The corrected paper is as follows:

This schedule represents one of the most important industries in the United States in the way of manufacturing. Cotton factories are found in all sections, although they may predominate in New England. They spread over the Southern States and have been making their way westward. The products have been steadily improved by advanced methods of manufacturing, and the markets for raw cotton, of which the United States is the principal producer of the world, have been rapidly enlarged. The consideration of this schedule should be entered upon with careful study and thought, even from the standpoint of a tariff for revenue only. The domestic productions are so vast in amount and the labor employed furnishes a livelihood to so many of our people that no sudden change can be made without a general disturbance of business. That great Democrat from Kentucky, in those days when there were giants in the Democracy, on his first inauguration as Speaker, free trader though he was, laid down the rule that reductions should be made gradually, avoiding so far as possible the disturbance of established business. In these days, however, a sort of hysteria seems to have seized the dominant party in the House, and they come out boldly and assert that they are ready to report bills and pass them, so far as they have the power, whose only purpose is revenue; that they will not knowingly insert any provision that is in any way protective of any industry, and they are following out their professions.

It is reasonable to suppose that from the lesson given them in the debate on the wool bill, and subsequent developments emphasizing the minority's position in that debate, they have finally learned that there was a surplus of $15,806,323.94 June 30, 1910, and that the surplus as corrected to date, for the year ending June 30, 1911, is $47,240,466.23. (The revenue is some five or six millions greater for the fiscal year just ended than was predicted in that debate by the minority, owing to the fact that between five and six millions of dollars more from corporation taxes was paid during the month of June, 1911, than during the corresponding period of 1910.) But it is evident that the majority have finally found out that the present law produces ample revenue. However, this fact does not excuse them for the enormous increase in revenue which will result if the present bill should become a law.

An ingenious statement was prepared and printed for the use of the caucus showing a loss in duties of about $3,000,000 from a comparative basis of the actual imports for the year 1910, but a careful examination of the caucus bill compared with the tables in the report of the committee shows that the estimated results for a 12 months' period under the proposed act are not much larger than under the last three years of the Dingley Act, when the average duty was not much less than under the present law. As this bill cuts the present duty on an average of 50 per cent, or nearly that, it is fair to assume that the imports will be greatly increased, and to such an extent as to increase the revenues under its provisions.

Of course there is no time for the minority to make tables showing exactly what the difference would be. Some cotton experts have given it as their opinion that the imports of cotton goods under the proposed bill will exceed $200,000,000 in value, instead of the $68,000,000 in value imported last year. If we eliminate from this the imports of laces and lace window curtains, the duties on which are not changed in this bill, it would show a still more enormous increase in the imports of dutiable goods where the duties have been changed in this bill, as the value of such laces and curtains imported amounts to some $39,500,000, leaving an importation of only $28,500,000 in value imported under the items embraced in the present law for the year 1910. In other words, the increase would be from $28,500,000 to $164,500,000. This would make more than five times as much goods imported under the proposed bill as under the present law, and the duty being about one-half, the revenue would necessarily be two and one-half times as great as under the present law. This guess of cotton manufactures may not be a correct one, but we submit that it is more likely to be correct than that given by the representative of the Tariff Reform Club of New York who furnished the figures upon which this bill was drawn.

Of course, there are other factors which might and probably would enter into it if the Democratic program is followed out by the introduction of other bills. There is no doubt but that the stagnation in business, which is uniformly affecting the woolen industry and is affecting the cotton industry to an extent increasing day by day, will also affect other industries. The purchasing power of the people will be greatly lowered or wholly destroyed, and hence th imports will be less. The result might be like that under the Wilson law, under which there was a deficit of revenue. The people will again wear their dilapidated and patched garments instead of buying new ones, and, as under previous Democratic tariffs, we will have a deficit in the revenue which may even be equal to the sum estimated by the present chairman of the Ways and Means Committee in his speech on the wool bill—namely, $50,000,000—instead of the splendid surplus of almost $50,000,000 which we had under the present law for the last fiscal year.

Less than a year ago the Ways and Means Committee of the House, of which the present honored Speaker of the House and the present chairman, the gentleman from Alabama, were members, voted unanimously in the committee in favor of a bill to create a Tariff Commission. This bill was simply putting into permanent law what had been enacted in an appropriation bill, and which is now embodied in the sundry civil appropriation bill. The bill as reported by the Ways and Means Committee passed the House by a large majority, both parties voting in its favor. It also passed the Senate later, but failed on the final day of the session last March because of a filibuster conducted by a very small number of the then minority. This legislation was taken in view of the insistent demand of parties who wished to have a permanent Tariff Board whose duty it should be to gather information and present the same to Congress as a foundation for subsequent tariff legislation. Many yielded to this demand because, with the increased business of the country, it was very difficult for a committee designated only for a congressional term of two years to cover the entire field of investigation in time to legislate during the term of Congress for which they had been appointed. It was admitted on all hands that all future tariff legislation changing the schedules should be based upon information to be gathered by this commission, and such other information as the committees of Congress might use or obtain through their own investigations.

It is a well-known fact that the present Tariff Board is considering the cotton and woolen schedules in all their bearings, and that they have many agents at work, both in this country and abroad; that in the United States the manufacturers have opened up their books and allowed the board to have full information in all the workings of their business, while they have met with unexpected success abroad. This information is now being gathered and tabulated as fast as received, but it will not be in shape to present to Congress until it is tabulated and in such form as to aid Congress in its work of preparing new tariff schedules. The members of the board have publicly stated that such information will be ready to transmit to Congress on the 1st of December next. With that information before them the present Committee on Ways and Means might proceed with some degree of intelligence in the formation of a cotton schedule, but as it is they are at work in the dark.

No majority member of the Ways and Means Committee is able to give an intelligent answer as to the effect of any of these duties upon the business of any factory now engaged in the manufacture of cotton, or to cite any evidence on which he can base that calculation. On the contrary, the evidence already obtained before the former Ways and Means Committee would show that these duties are grossly inadequate. They would tend to close the factories all over the United States. This statement comes from no particular section of the country, but from the whole country. Indeed, the representatives of southern manufactories, where labor conditions show a lower wage paid the workmen, are loudest in their protest against this kind of legislation.

But this proposed bill is not put forward as a protective measure, or as furnishing sufficient duty to allow the factories to continue their work. We are told it is a revenue matter pure and simple. It is not even this. No tariff bill will be a good revenue producer that simply cuts down the duties to the last notch with a view to increasing importations and compelling our people to buy wholly or largely abroad, for such a condition paralyzes industry, destroys credit and business confidence, and cuts down importations even to a greater extent than it reduces the customs duties. To get revenue we must have importations. Paralyze business, deprive people of labor and wages, and importations are reduced. The revenue is reduced or destroyed.

The majority have evidently mistaken the voice of the people. That voice may have been for a lower tariff duty, but it was far from demanding free trade. A reasonable reduction in some instances would have satisfied the voice even of the extremists, but the great majority will never follow the lead of the Democratic Party for free trade.

We oppose the proposed legislation—

First. Because it does not furnish protective duties for a great American industry, and it is frankly admitted that it is not intended to do so.

Second. Because on its face it proposes greatly to decrease the duty, and therefore unduly increase the importations, if the country should maintain a sound and prosperous condition.

Third. Because its inevitable tendency will be to destroy the business confidence of the country.

Fourth. Because there is no demand for such legislation at this time, but, on the contrary, the country appreciates the sound reasoning that asks the postponement of the revision of Schedule I until after the report of the Tariff Board has been received.

Fifth. Because the duties under this bill are ad valorem duties, in disregard of the judgment of every Democratic or Republican Secretary of the Treasury who has spoken upon this subject, except Robert J. Walker. All the others have strongly advocated specific duties. The experience not only in this country, but in all foreign countries, has been against ad valorem duties. The simple reason is that they furnish a method for cheating and defrauding the Government of its revenue, which has never yet been successfully met. An attempt to meet this was made in the present law, and while it has worked with some measure of success by its deterrent influences, it is doubtful if it would be successful against the onslaughts that have been made by importers in a schedule like the cotton schedule, so open to fraud by undervaluation and purposely made ad valorem in every particular.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty Members present—not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. CULLOP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had found itself without a quorum, caused the roll to be called, and found 192 Members present, and he reported to the House the following as the names of the absentees:

The SPEAKER. A quorum being present, the committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I would hesitate to take up the time of this committee in addressing it upon a subject foreign to the bill now under consideration, except for the fact that the matters about which I will speak pertain to the investigation of the affairs of the District of Columbia now being conducted by the special subcommittee of the Committee on the District of Columbia. It is with the single desire to throw some light upon one of the matters covered by the resolution authorizing this investigation that I feel justified in taking up the time of this committee at this special session and not waiting until the regular session, because I feel that the House and the committee conducting this investigation should have before it all of the laws authorizing the payment by the Government of its proportionate share of the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia.

A few weeks ago Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, introduced a resolution to investigate the affairs of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. OLDFIELD introduced it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I am corrected by Mr. JOHNSON; Mr. OLDFIELD introduced it.

This resolution was in due time presented to the Committee on Rules, and the gentleman from Kentucky appeared before this committee and urged its favorable report. The Washington papers, a short time thereafter, published what purported to be portions of the statement made by the chairman before the Committee on Rules. He is quoted as having said:

And it is further my opinion that an investigation will disclose that the United States Government has not received credit on the half and half plan for the several million dollars that it has paid toward the retirement of the 3.65 bonds. As I understand it, the organic law binds the Government to the payment of one-half of the current expenses, or the running expenses, of the government, and that the United States Government has not only paid one-half of the current expenses, but that it has paid one-half of the entire expenses of the District government, whether it be current or not, except a few small items specifically chargeable by law to the District government, and in addition to that, while the United States Government was only guarantor for the interest upon these 3.65 bonds that she has, through a number of years, paid one-half of that interest without ever having gotten credit for it in the 50 per cent which she is obliged to pay. I have gone back just 40 years and I do not find anything that is in full explanation of the matter.

He then goes on and recites other reasons why an investigation of the affairs of the District of Columbia should be had. On the 6th day of June Mr. JOHNSON, in speaking in support of a resolution reported by the Committee on Rules to provide for an investigation of the affairs of the District, among other things said:

While this matter was up before the Committee on Rules I had occasion to say that I had been informed reliably, as I believed, that the Federal Government had paid more than one-half, and I cited one instance of the interest upon the 3.65 bonds and on the bonds themselves, contending that the Government was not bound to pay any interest whatever on these bonds, but that the Government had bound itself to have taxes levied in the District of Columbia which would produce sufficient revenue that the District might pay the interest on those bonds.

Speaking further, he said:

Now, my contention that the Government is bound only as a guarantor of this interest and is not in any sense bound to pay this interest can be found in an act passed in 1877, which reads as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury shall reserve of any of the revenues of the District of Columbia not required for the actual current expenses of schools, the police, and the fire department a sum sufficient to meet the interest accruing on the 3.65 bonds of the District during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1877, and apply the same to that purpose; and in case there shall not be a sufficient sum of said revenues in the Treasury of the United States at such time as said interest may be due, then the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to advance, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated a sum sufficient to pay said interest, and the same shall be reimbursed to the Treasury of the United States from time to time as said revenues may be paid into said Treasury until the full amount shall have been refunded."

Now, as I said, I am advised that this refunding from time to time, as contemplated by this act, has not been made.

Further along in his remarks, he again states, referring to certain statements in the newspapers:

They say that I said that these bonds were fraudulent. I have never said that, because I know these bonds are good and binding, but what I have said is that perhaps year after year for nearly a third of a century you have been paying half of the interest on these bonds, when it was never your debt. You perhaps have been paying half of the principal of these millions of bonds, when it was never your debt. To go into that, and to go into other things of equal importance, this resolution has been introduced, and I earnestly hope it will be adopted.

It is to endeavor to throw some light upon this claim of Mr. JOHNSON and correct what, in my judgment, appears to be a misunderstanding governing the issuance and payment of these bonds that I desire to address the House. In the first place, for fear that my motives may be misunderstood, let me say that this is not the only thing that will be investigated. The question of taxes and other important matters will be, as I am informed, thoroughly inquired into by the subcommittee in charge of this investigation. I do not speak as one opposed to, but rather as one who approves of, a most rigid and searching investigation of the affairs of the District, in its every department. I agree with the chairman of the District Committee that if there is anything wrong we should know it, and if the District is being governed properly, economically, and honestly, that should be given equal publicity, and stop, if possible, the constant insinuations which arise against the management of its affairs.

I have absolute faith that the committee will act fairly and will bring in at the conclusion of its labor an unbiased report. I know they are not searching for something to criticize, but are giving their time and attention to investigating, without bias or prejudice, every department of the District government, in order that Congress may know just what are the methods of administering the business of this great community. Personally I have every faith in the integrity of the board of commissioners. I believe that they will give every assistance toward bringing to light anything that the committee may desire in the way of facts governing the scope of this investigation. But while, as I said in the beginning, the question of the Government's assumption of one-half of the principal and interest of the 3.65 bonds is not the only important matter suggested in the resolution of investigation, it seems to have impressed the chairman as being one of the very important matters, because he cites these payments, and these alone, as justification enough for the expense and trouble of investigating the entire District affairs. So earnestly did he insist that no law existed for these payments that my curiosity as a Member of this House, and as a citizen of the country which helps support this District, was aroused. I had personal knowledge from my long experience on the Committee on the District of Columbia, and from my investigations as a member of the Appropriations Committee, that the Government was not only paying one-half of the interest on these bonds, but it was also paying one-half of the principal.

The gentleman from Kentucky did not state that this was positively being done; in fact, he disclaims personal knowledge and says that he speaks from "reliable information." He seems absolutely positive on the question of the Government's nonliability for the payment of this principal and interest. He positively asserts that no law exists authorizing the payment of either the principal or interest by the Government, but he seems somewhat dubious as to whether the Government really had paid the principal and interest. He could have cleared up this latter by asking any member of the Appropriations Committee or its very able clerk, Mr. Courts, because an item has been annually carried since 1879, appropriating out of the joint revenues of the District and the United States Government a sum sufficient to pay the interest and to create a sinking fund to meet the funded debt. With my knowledge of these facts, I could not bring myself to believe that the gentleman was correctly advised as to the law in this case.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Is is not a fact that the act of 1874, which authorized the issue of these bonds, required that whenever the Government makes an appropriation to pay half the expenses of the District of Columbia that the money advanced to pay the interest on these bonds of which the gentleman speaks shall be deducted from that 50 per cent?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. That is in the act of 1878.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I mean the act of 1874, and repeated in the act of 1878.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The act of 1878 contains such a clause. I will come to that in the regular course of my remarks, and I will be glad to take that up when I reach it.

If the business of the District was so run, and the Treasury Department was so careless in its disbursing of public moneys as to pay out millions of dollars on obligations for which they were not liable, I proposed first to verify the statements of the chairman and then demand an explanation. With that in view I have myself, following the course pursued by the gentleman from Kentucky, gone back through all of the legislation, reports of committees, and debates on the floor of the House and Senate which might have bearing upon this subject. The gentleman from Kentucky bases his entire contention, in so far as his statements on the floor of the House are concerned, that the Government is not liable for any part of the principal or interest on these bonds, upon an act of Congress passed in the sundry civil appropriation bill of 1877, which I have cited.

The gentleman seems to have overlooked one very essential thing, to wit, that the organic act under which this District is now operating, and which for the first time in the history of the District provides for a 50 per cent participation in the expenses of the District by the Government, was not passed until one year after the statute which he cites.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman——

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I prefer, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Kentucky will allow, that my remarks go along together, and I will be glad to give such time when I get through, as I have quite a lot of manuscript here. I do not wish to be discourteous to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I understand the gentleman does not wish to be interrupted at all during his remarks?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I do not for the present.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Then please intimate when I may.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio refuses to yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. He seems to have stopped short of the very meat of this case by citing legislation enacted prior to the time the Government assumed one-half of the District expenses. The gentleman states that he has gone back 40 years in a vain attempt to find any authority for these expenditures. If he had gone forward two years from the act of 1877, which he cites in support of his contention, he would have found explicit authority for the Government's participation in meeting the principal and interest on these bonds. This act of 1877 has nothing to do with the validity of these bonds or the Government's interest in the same. This act was one simply providing the necessary money to meet the interest on these bonds, because, as I stated, the interest fell due at a time when the taxes had not been collected, and therefore there would have been always a default on the part of the District in its interest, except that the Government met the interest and had the money refunded when the taxes were collected. The authority for the issuance and payment of and the responsibility for payment of the bonds known as the 3.65 bonds will be found in the act of June 20, 1874, Eighteenth Statutes, 116; in the act of June 11, 1878, Twentieth Statutes, 102; in the act of March 3, 1879, Twentieth Statutes, 410; and in the act of March 3, 1881, Twenty-first Statutes, 466.

Prior to 1874 Washington had what may be termed a Territorial form of government. I will not tire the House with a description of the form of government or the manner in which eventually the District became hopelessly and utterly bankrupt. It is not germane to this case how this debt was created, or to what extent, if any, it was tainted with fraud or corruption. Suffice it that prior to 1874 conditions had become so bad that Congress, seeing the absolute necessity of some step being taken to adjust the affairs of the District, appointed a special joint committee to inquire into the affairs of the District of Columbia.

And this committee on June 16, 1874, made an elaborate report showing the financial condition of the District, recommending the abolishment of the then existing form of government and proposing a commission plan of government, to operate the affairs of the District until a permanent form of government should be worked out. This committee was nonpartisan, being divided between the two parties. It had for its membership Hon. William B. Allison, Hon. Allen G. Thurman, Hon. William M. Stewart, Hon. J. M. Wilson, Hon. Jay A. Hubble, Hon. Lyman K. Bass, Hon. H. J. Jewett, and Hon. Robert Hamilton. This report can be found in reports of committees for the first session of the Forty-third Congress, the volume containing reports Nos. 612 to 770 and numbered report No. 647. The bill reported by this committee was enacted into law, and can be found in volume 18, United States Statutes at Large, page 116, and in section 7 of this act the sinking-fund commissioners of the District were continued in office, and by virtue of this legislation it became their duty to cause to be prepared bonds of the District of Columbia in the sums of $50 and $500, bearing date of August 1, 1874, payable 50 years after date, bearing interest at the rate of 3.65 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, and the same to be signed by the secretary and treasurer of the sinking-fund commissioners, countersigned by the comptroller of the said District, and sealed as the board may direct. These bonds were exempt from taxation by Federal, State, or municipal authority. The statute goes on further and says:

> And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged by proper proportional appropriations as contemplated in this act and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as will provide revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable, and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereon at maturity.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield for a question just there?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. You are now reading from the act——

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Of 1874.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky (continuing). Of June 20, 1874?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Which provides for a temporary form of government, which lasted four years, until 1878.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I understand that; I know that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Now, I wish to ask the gentleman if the permanent form of government established in 1878, in making provision that the United States Government should contribute 50 per cent toward the operation of the District Government, did not provide specifically that the interest on those bonds should be paid by the District and not by the Government?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I will soon reach that act, and I would like for the gentleman to point out that language when I come to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman right there, if I had known he was going to speak I would have had those acts here. I am now speaking from memory, but I am quite confident——

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The gentleman will have an opportunity to correct me if I am wrong. I am only presenting my views.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I wish the gentleman would present them in the light of full information, however.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Yes; I am trying to do so.

These bonds were authorized for the purpose of taking up the indebtedness of the District, and the commissioners of the sinking fund were authorized to exchange said bonds at par for like sums of any class of indebtedness named in the preceding section, including sewer taxes or assessments paid, provided for in this act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I wish the gentleman would allow me to interrupt him there——

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They must be retired at par.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. That is not correct. The language of the act of March 3, 1881 (21 Stat., 466), makes provision for their purchase above par if necessary, and the gentleman has anticipated me. I am leading up through the various acts in order that the House may form its own opinion as to whether it will accept or reject my views.

This act further provided for an auditing board, whose duty it was to audit the debts of the District and when they were allowed, to take them up with the bonds which I have just described. No provision was made in this act for a joint responsibility of the District and the Government for the expenses of the District, but a special subcommittee was provided, in section 5 of the act, consisting of two Senators and two Members of the House, to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate and by the Speaker of the House, and it was charged with the duty of preparing—

> A suitable frame of government for the District of Columbia, and appropriate drafts of statutes to be enacted by Congress for carrying the same into effect, and report the same to the two Houses respectively on the first day of the next session thereof, and they shall also prepare and submit to Congress a statement of the proper proportion of the expenses of said Government, or any branch thereof, including interest on the funded debt, which should be borne by the said District and the United States, respectively, together with the reasons upon which their conclusions may be based.

Thus it was clearly indicated in this act that Congress recognized the necessity and justice of the Government participating to some extent in the payment of the expenses of this District. And in section 7, before quoted, there can be no other meaning to the language—"and the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will by proper proportional appropriations as contemplated in this act," and so forth—than that the purpose of Congress was to get a report from this special committee provided in section 5 as to just what part of the District's expenses the Government should assume, and then when the permanent form of government contemplated through the appointment of this committee should go into effect, the Government would, in just such proportion as Congress determined was just, pay its share of the interest and principal on these bonds, as well as its full share of the other governmental expenses necessary to the management of the business affairs of the said District.

Much debate has been had in Congress subsequent to the passage of this act as to what the language of section 7 meant. Many able men contended that the Government only agreed that it would pay the interest, and was not liable for the principal. And others equally as able contended that the Government's pledge covered both the interest and the principal at maturity; but none, however, went so far as does the gentleman from Kentucky in claiming that no part of the principal or interest should be paid by the Federal Government.

Later on legislation, which I will cite later, cleared up any question of doubt by specifically providing that the Government must pay its full share of the entire principal and interest. However, I contend that this language in the act of 1874 can be susceptible of no other construction than that the Government was obligated to see that the principal and interest were paid by doing two things—first, paying its proportional share toward the same, and, second, seeing that the District collected enough taxes to meet its proportional share.

The act does not say that the faith of the United States is pledged that it will cause to be levied upon property within the District such taxes as will provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds when the same became due and payable and create a sinking fund, but it does say:

> And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will by proper proportional appropriations, as contemplated in this act (as contemplated in section 5), and by causing to be levied upon the property within the District such taxes as will provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable, and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity.

In other words, the Government pledges its faith to raise the necessary money to meet the interest when due and create a sinking fund to meet the principal when due, by a proper proportional appropriation, and to see to it that the District raises its proportional share to meet its proportion of the payments of principal and interest, by taxing the property within the District. It guarantees a supervision over the taxing power of the District to see that the District taxes itself sufficiently to pay its proportional share of this funded debt.

Complying with section 5 of the act of 1874, there was appointed a special subcommittee of four members, two Senators and two Representatives, who, in December, 1874, filed a report. Without going into the details of the report, which may be found in the following, Senate Report No. 1, Report No. 479, this committee went into an elaborate discussion of the legal necessity and right of the Government to participate in paying a part of the District's expenses. They held that owing to the fact that this is the Capital of the Nation and by the special provisions of the Constitution and the clauses contained in the land grant the Government must pay its proper proportion of all the expenses of the District. They do not come to a final conclusion as to just what that proportion should be; in fact, they content themselves with stating that there should be a division of expenses, and that they do not consider it important in their report to determine the exact proportion.

The House of Representatives in the meantime had passed a resolution instructing the Committee on the Judiciary to inquire into and report to the House—the legal relations between the Federal Government and the local government of the District of Columbia, and the extent and character of the mutual obligations in regard to municipal expenses; and further to inquire and report whether some accurately defined basis of expenditure can not be prescribed and maintained by law.

This committee, on the 1st day of June, 1874, had made an elaborate report, going into the legal status of the relations between the Government and the District completely and holding that the District was subject to Federal control. After quoting clause 17, section 8, Article I of the Constitution, which is as follows:

To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock yards, and other needful buildings.

They further state:

Your committee understand this clause of the Constitution to vest in the Congress of the United States absolute legislative authority over every rightful subject of legislation within the District, without any reservation whatever to any State or States or to the people within the District itself. This absolute control by Congress is a question no longer admitting of doubt, if any ever existed.

After clearly holding that it was the duty of the Government to pay its proportional share of the expenses of the District, they go into an elaborate statement of the Government's holdings within the District, which are free from taxation, and mock at the idea that the people of the District should be taxed to keep up the Government's property and the Government in no way share the expense. They wind up their report on this question as follows:

A very large proportion of this population are temporary residents, and only are here to serve the Government in various capacities. They acquire no permanent interest and generally hold but little property. The remaining portion of the population is made up chiefly by persons engaged in minor traffic and in supplying the wants of the Government, of themselves, and of the temporary residents referred to, so that there is absolutely no source of revenue which can be looked to as a permanent support for the necessary expenditures of this city. Aside, then, from all question of sentiment or patriotism or pride in the National Capital, your committee are impressed with the belief that the Federal Government sustains at least such relation toward the citizens and the local government as would require it to contribute to municipal expenses an amount bearing the relation to the whole amount required which the interest of the Federal Government here bears to the interest of the local government, and this they believe to be at least one-half.

These two reports indicate clearly that at that time the general impression prevailed that some permanent law fixing a stated proportion of expenses to be borne by the Government and the District should be enacted. However, nothing in the way of legislation was enacted until what is known as the organic act, passed in 1878, became a law. The act of 1877, upon which the chairman seems to rely, was, as I have stated, clearly enacted for the purpose of meeting the interest on the 3.65 bonds when due, the same to be refunded out of the District taxes when collected. This because of the fact that there was at that time no legislation providing that the Government should pay any of the expenses of the District, and it was not until the following year, when the act of 1878 became a law, that the entire relations between the District and the United States Government underwent a change.

The act of 1878, passed June 11, 1878, and found in volume 20, United States Statutes at Large, page 102, provided a new form of Government, and is the law under which the government of the District operates to-day. For the first time, in section 3 of this act, Congress enacted a half-and-half clause, which from that day compelled Congress to pay one-half of the expenses of the District.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman please read that act there?

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I am going to read it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio declines to yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I shall read it. I am going to read them all. This section provides that the—
